Mr. Trippier: The main duties of the regional enterprise units can be summarised under the following broad headings: promotion of enterprise—they will act as the regional link for the enterprise and deregulation unit in spreading the message about deregulation, identifying burdens and providing a regional input to other EDU initiatives; representing and promoting the interest of small firms and developing links with small firms and small firms organisations; sponorship and funding of local enterprise agencies, including administration of the local enterprise agency grant scheme; developing links with tourist bodies and identifying obstacles to the growth of tourism at regional level.

Labour Statistics

Mr. Dalyell asked the Paymaster General how many people not included in the published unemployment figures were in part-time employment at the latest date for which figures are available; and how many were engaged on YTS or community programmes.

Mr. Lang: The latest available estimate of the number of people aged 16 or over in Great Britain in part-time paid employment not claiming unemployment benefits is 4·8 million, based on the labour force survey conducted in spring 1984. The latest available estimates of the total numbers of people in Great Britain covered by the YTS and the community programme are 329,000 and 174,000 respectively relating to the end of December 1985.

Mr. Dalyell asked the Paymaster General how many people under 65 years of age were unemployed but not registered as claiming benefit at the latest available date.

Mr. Lang: According to results of the labour force survey, in the spring of 1984 in Great Britain there were about 850,000 people without jobs seeking work aged under 65 who were not included in the monthly count of benefit claimants. There were 940,000 registered for benefit but not looking for work.

Mr. Hoyle asked the Paymaster General if he will state the latest unemployment figures by ward and postal area for Peterborough, Northampton borough, Swindon, St. Helens, Wigan, Poulton, Bolton and Bury.

Mr. Lang: I am sending a copy of a computer printout giving the requested ward information, which is also available from the Library. The printout shows numbers of unemployed claimants as at 9 January 1986 by wards in the local authority districts of Peterborough, Northampton, St. Helens, Wigan, Bolton, Bury, Thamesdown—which covers the area of Swindon—and the wards that cover the area of Poulton. Unemployment figures by postal area for this date are not available.

News International (Wapping Premises)

Mr. Gould asked the Paymaster General if the premises being used by News International at Wapping have been inspected by inspectors of the Health and Safety Executive.

Mr. Trippier: Yes. Health and Safety Executive inspectors have visited the News International premises on several occasions during the installation and commissioning of plant.

Community Programme

Mr. Hancock asked the Paymaster General what is the total number of people in Hampshire and the Isle of Wight who are eligible for a place on the community programme.

Mr. Lang: Available figures are as follows:

	Hampshire and Isle of Wight
18-24 years unemployed for 6 months or more	9,146
25 years and over unemployed for 12 months or more	16,983
	26,129

SOLICITOR-GENERAL FOR SCOTLAND

Accountant in Bankruptcy

Mr. George Robertson asked the Solicitor-General for Scotland, if he has yet determined the criteria which will be used to allocate cases in the hands of the Accountant in Bankruptcy under the Bankruptcy (Scotland) Act 1985; and if he will make a statement.

The Solicitor-General for Scotland: I assume that the question relates to the list to be maintained by the Accountant in Bankruptcy under the Bankruptcy (Scotland) Act 1985 of persons who can be appointed by a sheriff to act as an interim trustee in a sequestration. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry has prescribed the qualifications of persons who are eligible to go on that list, but he has no power to prescribe the criteria by reference to which a sheriff may appoint a person from that list to act as an interim trustee in any particular sequestration.

CIVIL SERVICE

Civil Servants (Initiative Rewards)

Mr. Soames asked the Minister for the Civil Service what steps he is taking to reward initiative on the part of civil servants; and what penalties he will introduce in the event of errors.

Mr. Luce: The Government's programme for improved management efficiency is directed at the encouragement of good performance by civil servants at all levels. Important elements in his programme include arrangements for the better management and control of resources, the setting of clearer objectives for staff, the development of more effective staff reporting and appraisal procedures and the experimental performance bonus scheme which is designed to encourage and reward particularly good performance. Steps have also been taken to deal more effectively with poor performance. Questions of penalties for mistakes or misdeeds by individual civil servants are dealt with as part of the procedures for reporting and appraisal or under the disciplinary procedures set out in Estacode section Kb, a copy of which is in the Library of the House, as appropriate.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT

Ethiopia

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what information he has to the effects of the Ethiopian Government's resettlement policy; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Raison: I understand that some 600,000 people have so far been moved from the northern provinces in the current phase of the Ethiopian Government's resettlement programme. There have been regular reports of coercion and families being split up, and of inadequate preparation of the resettlement areas. We have on several occasions expressed our concern. I reiterated these concerns to Mr. Michael Priestly, United Nations co-ordinator in Addis Ababa, when he called on me on 7 February.

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what information he has as to the amount of grain that has arrived in Ethiopia from each member state of the European Economic Community and the United States in each of the last six months; what promised deliveries are still outstanding from these states; when they are likely to arrive; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Raison: Information on deliveries made and planned is contained on pages 39-53 of the lastest status report No. 18 dated 2 January 1986 from the World Food Programme's Africa task force secretariat. I am arranging for a copy to be placed in the Library of the House.

I discussed emergency food aid for Ethiopia on 4 February with the UN Assistant Secretary-General based in Addis Ababa, Mr. Priestley. According to his figures pledges currently made only cover some 80 per cent. of the estimated need for 1986. I have therefore asked the Vice-President of the European Commission, Mr. Natali, to propose a further substantial allocation to Ethiopia from the 1986 EC food aid programme in addition to the 150,000 tonnes that were agreed by the food aid management committee on 29 January.

The United Kingdom will be delivering 17,700 tonnes from its national programme to Ethiopia in March-April 1986 through the World Food Programme. Following my discussion with Mr. Priestley I have decided we should provide a further 13,700 tonnes bilaterally during 1986.

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is the estimated total cereal requirement for famine relief in Ethiopia for 1986; what deliveries have so far been made; and what has been promised.

Mr. Raison: The United Nations co-ordinator in Addis Ababa estimates that Ethiopia will need 1·2 million tonnes of food aid in the form of cereals in 1986. Three hundred thousand tonnes will be available from deliveries in 1985. Our best estimate is that a further 670,000 tonnes has been firmly pledged for 1986 or is in prospect. The World Food Programme reported on 11 February that 67,000 tonnes of these new pledges had been delivered to Ethiopia.

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations have been received by his Department within the last six months regarding levels of United Kingdom aid in Ethiopia and the Sudan.

Mr. Raison: The Overseas Development Administration has received many hundreds of representations within the last six months regarding levels of United Kingdom aid in Ethiopia and the Sudan.

These include parliamentary questions, letters from hon. Members and members of the public, and petitions.

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list the estimated supplementary food needs for famine relief in Ethiopia in 1986, the amounts so far delivered, and all outstanding pledges, together with edible oil pledges and deliveries.

Mr. Raison: After allowing for some 31,000 tonnes carried over in stocks from 1985, net additional supplementary food needs (skimmed milk powder and high protein biscuits) for 1986 are estimated to be about 91,000 tonnes; 19,000 tonnes have so far been pledged and 1,300 tonnes delivered.

Net additional edible oil needs for 1986 are estimated to be about 43,000 tonnes; 16,800 tonnes have been pledged and 7,000 tonnes delivered.

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list the amounts of long-term development aid supplied by the United Kingdom to Ethiopia for the last five years, together with projected aid for the next two years, at outturn and at 1984-85 prices.

Mr. Raison: The following table shows British long term development aid to Ethiopia, excluding disaster relief and food aid but including technical co-operation and training, in £'000.

	*Current prices	1984-85 prices†
1980	832	1,109
1981	541	644
1982	451	500
1984	572	579

* Source: British Aid Statistics 1980-84, tables 18, 22 and 23.
† Using GDP deflator.

Figures for 1985 are not yet available. In the next two years we shall be building up our modest programme of technical co-operation.

A substantial amount of aid goes to Ethiopia through multilateral agencies and the United Kingdom's share of this in 1984 was about £13·5 million; no split between long term development aid and short-term relief is available. In addition much of the food aid supplied by Britain has supported development through food-for-work schemes.

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what information he has regarding the present level of grain stock at Assab and at Massawa in Ethiopia and in Djibouti; and how these levels compare with stocks in each of the last 12 months.

Mr. Raison: Information from the World Food Programme Africa task force secretariat is that the pesent stock levels are:

	Tonnes
Assab	80,600
Massawa	50,400
Djibouti	16,100

Stocks in each of the last 12 months were as follows:

Level of grain stocks (thousand tonnes)

	Assab	Massawa	Djibouti
End of February 1985	50·0	No accurate data available	No accurate data available
End of March	84·0	29·9	15·0
End of April	87·4	33·3	20·8
End of May	76·0	58·0	44·0
End of June	71·6	54·8	46·2
End of July 1985	77·8	20·5	32·2
End August	79·6	33·5	21·2
End September	85·0	29·4	17·4
End October	98·6	40·6	3·7
End November	73·8	36·8	2·6
End December 1985	56·5	27·9	18·4
End January 1986	78·8	28·7	18·3

These figures do not include any grain in ships lying offshore.

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what information he has as to the amount of grain that will arrive in the port of Assab in Ethiopia in each of the next eight weeks and as to how much will be in store at the port in each of those weeks.

Mr. Raison: Information received from the World Food Programme Africa task force secretariat on 11 February indicates that there were on the quay in Assab, 80,600 tonnes of grain and offshore 24,600 tonnes of grain. A further 107,000 tonnes are expected in February-March 1986.

As I explained to the hon. Member on 23 July 1985 at columns 501-2 shipping arrangements are made by donors in close consultation with the World Food Programme on a monthly basis. The amount in store at port will depend on the level of offtake from the port; this was 11,200 tonnes in the week to 11 February, although the recent average weekly offtake has been rather higher.

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will publish in the Official Report his estimate of the number of people likely to need assistance during 1986 in Ethiopia and their specific requirements; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Raison: The United Nations co-ordinator in Addis Ababa estimates that 6·22 million people, excluding those in resettlement areas, will require extraordinary food aid and other support in 1986.

I have given details of food requirements in earlier answers. The UN co-ordinator estimates that non-food aid requirements total $218 million, including $91 million for agriculture, $62 million, for transport, $17 million for health, $26 million for water supply and $22 million for blankets, medical supplies and so on.

Commonwealth Development Corporation

Mr. Merchant asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether the Commonwealth Development Corporation has been authorised to extend its area of operations.

Mr. Raison: I have decided to give approval to CDC undertaking activities in Pakistan. This is subject to consultation between CDC and my Department on the scale and content of CDC's intended investment programme in that country.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Vietnamese Refugees

Mr. Best asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many Vietnamese refugees in closed camps in Hong Kong claim to have spouses in open camps; what discussions he has had about the possibility of them being able to join one another; what action is proposed; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Renton: Sixty Vietnamese refugees in open camps have claimed to have spouses in closed camps. Of these, 47 have joined their spouses in closed camps, five cases are pending and five have withdrawn their request to join their spouses. In the other three cases the couples left Hong Kong together for resettlement before reunion could take place.

Mr. Best asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what information he has as to which other countries have decided to accept more Vietnamese refugees from Hong Kong, indicating (i) the name of the country and (ii) the number of new Vietnamese refugees accepted.

Mr. Renton: Following our decision to accept about 500 additional refugees from Hong Kong, we have approached over 20 countries in an effort to increase resettlement from the Hong Kong camps. We have been advised that, in addition to their previously-announced quotas, Australia will accept 200 more refugees, and Canada 50; and also that New Zealand will take 10 refugees from Hong Kong. Most other countries are still considering their responses and we remain in close touch with them.

Mr. Best asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is the current number of Vietnamese refugees in Hong Kong (i) in closed camps and (ii) in open camps.

Mr. Renton: On 14 February 4,809 refugees were in closed camps and 4,380 in open camps.

Mr. Best asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions he has had with the Hong Kong Government about Vietnamese refugees in closed camps; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Renton: We and the Hong Kong Government remain in close touch on the Vietnamese refugees problem in Hong Kong. The need for the closed camp policy is kept under constant review. Neither we nor the Hong Kong Government wish to retain the closed camps for refugees any longer than is necessary.

Mr. Best asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has made to the Government of Indonesia about Vietnamese refugees in that country; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Renton: None, but we keep in close touch with Indonesia and other members of the Association of South East Asian Nations on the problems of Indo-China generally. We are deeply concerned about the question of Vietnamese refugees in south-east Asia and attach particular priority to resettling those in camps in Hong Kong.

Mr. Best asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what information he has about statements made by the Chinese Government about the status of Vietnamese refugees in Hong Kong after 1997; and how many such refugees are expected still to be in camps at that date.

Mr. Renton: I have no information about any such statement by the Government of the People's Republic of China. China has provided permanent asylum for some 265,000 refugees from Vietnam. This is an admirable record. It is our strong hope that no refugees will remain in Hong Kong in 1997.

Mr. Best asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what contingency arrangements have been made with the Hong Kong Government in respect of Vietnamese still in refugee camps at the time of transfer of sovereignty in 1997; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Renton: None. It is our firm intention that the Vietnamese refugee problem in Hong Kong should be resolved well before 1997. In any event, the joint declaration on the future of Hong Kong provides for the continuation after 30 June 1997 of Hong Kong's present social and legal systems and so any refugees then in Hong Kong should retain their current status.

Human Rights (Poland)

Mr. Alex Carlile asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations Her Majesty's Government have made since 1 January 1985 to the Polish authorities concerning the imprisonment of political dissenters and other abuses of human rights in Poland; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Renton: During his visit to Warsaw in April 1985, my right hon. and learned Friend stressed our concern that progress towards internal reconciliation in Poland should be maintained, and spoke very frankly to his hosts of our deep anxiety about moves in a contrary direction, giving examples. On 16 May my right hon. and learned Friend the Member for Edinburgh, Pentlands (Mr. Rifkind), the then Minister of State, repeated out concerns to the Polish ambassador. On 19 June my right hon. and learned Friend asked the Polish ambassador to call and said that the prison sentences imposed on Mr. Lis, Mr. Michnik and Mr. Frasyniuk had caused dismay in Britain. He also mentioned other indications of increasing repression. He spoke similarly to the Polish Foreign Minister when they met at Helsinki on 30 July. On 14 November my right hon. and learned Friend the Member for Pentlands repeated our concerns to the Polish Deputy Foreign Minister when the latter visited London.

On 4 December my right hon. and learned Friend the Member for Pentlands asked the Polish ambassador to call and expressed our concern at measures designed to restrict academic freedom in Poland. On 3 February I expressed concern to the Polish ambassador about developments, in particular the decision to put Lech Walesa on trial. On 6 February I repeated our concerns to the group of Polish parliamentarians visiting London under IPU auspices.

Russian Jews (Emigration)

Mr. Mason asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what are his estimates of the numbers of Russian Jews who have been allowed to emigrate in each of the last six months.

Mr. Renton: The figures available to us for the last six months are as follows:

	Number
August	29
September	93
October	124
November	128
December	92
January	79

Mr. Mason asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what further representations he has made in recent times to raise the problem of those Jews in the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics who have applied to emigrate and been refused under the terms of the Helsinki agreement on human rights; with what effect; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Renton: The question of Jewish emigration from the Soviet Union was raised by my right hon. and learned Friend, then Minister of State, Foreign and Commonwealth Office, the Member for Edinburgh, Pentlands (Mr. Rifkind) during his meeting with Soviet First Deputy Foreign Minister Kornienko in Moscow last July. My right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs raised the Soviet Union's failure to live up to its CSCE commitments with Mr. Shevardnadze on 1 August 1985. My noble Friend the Minister of State, Foreign and Commonwealth Office, Lady Young, made similar representations to Deputy Foreign Minister Ryzhov on 21 January. We shall continue to take suitable opportunities to press the Soviet Union on these important matters.

Philippines

Mr. Tom Clarke asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations Her Majesty's Government have made to the Government of the Philippines about the implications for United Kingdom-Philippine relations about the conduct of the recent election there.

Mr. Renton: None. I refer the hon. Member to my reply to the hon. Member for Liverpool, Riverside (Mr. Parry) on 10 February, at column 332.

ENERGY

Energy Efficiency Demonstration Scheme

12. Mrs. Ann Winterton asked the Secretary of State for Energy if he will make a statement about the energy efficiency demonstration scheme.

Mr. David Hunt: I am delighted that the energy efficiency demonstration scheme has now achieved its target of stimulating annual energy savings worth £120 million by the beginning of this year. The energy saving technologies pioneered through the scheme have been taken up in over 5,600 different locations throughout the United Kingdom. This is a marvellous start for the Monergy campaign.

Oil Prices

14. Mr. Rowlands asked the Secretary of State for Energy if he will make a statement on his Department's latest estimate of the future trend of North sea oil prices.

Mr. Buchanan-Smith: North sea oil prices are determined by the world market and ultimately by the balance of supply and demand.

20. Mr. Orme asked the Secretary of State for Energy if he will make a statement on the implications for energy policy of the recent fall in crude oil prices.

Mr. Peter Walker: It is too early to say what if any lasting effects recent oil prices may have on the energy market in general, since the oil market remains volatile and prices unpredictable.

Energy Efficiency

15. Mr. Pike asked the Secretary of State for Energy when he next intends to meet representatives of local government to discuss energy saving measures.

Mr. David Hunt: My right hon. Friend and I frequently meet local government representatives in the course of our national campaign to promote energy efficiency.

21. Mr. Conway asked the Secretary of State for Energy if he will make a statement about the United Kingdom's performance in achieving greater energy efficiency, compared to the performance of other countries.

Mr. David Hunt: Provisional data for 1984 show that the United Kingdom's energy efficiency improved in that year by 3 per cent., a larger improvement than was recorded by any of our major industrial competitors. This contrasts with the position in the previous 10 years when the average United Kingdom rate of increase was 2·3 per cent., a lower rate than that achieved by our competitors.

22. Mr. Patrick Thompson asked the Secretary of State for Energy if he will make a statement about the latest plans for events to mark Energy Efficiency Year 1986 and for his Department's publicity programme Monergy '86.

Mr. Peter Walker: More than 100 events have already taken place. The number of events in the pipeline is increasing fast. Details of some 700 future events are contained in the Monergy '86 information pack, copies of which are being placed in the Library of the House. The publicity programme includes national press and television advertising and is being well supported by the advertising and promotional activities of many companies, from the nationalised fuel industries to private sector suppliers of energy efficiency equipment and services.

25. Mr. Wood asked the Secretary of State for Energy if he will estimate the aggregate annual savings which are likely to be achieved by those companies which have participated in the energy efficiency campaign.

Mr. Peter Walker: Action taken by companies which have already responded to our energy efficiency campaign is leading to savings of at least £500 million a year. Further substantial savings will result from actions stimulated during Energy Efficiency Year.

31. Mr. Powley asked the Secretary of State for Energy if he will make a statement on the nationwide survey on the appointment of energy managers by British business.

Mr. David Hunt: I am most encouraged by the substantial response we have received. I shall publish the results of the survey as soon as the replies have been analysed.

Polkemmet Bing

16. Mr. Dalyell asked the Secretary of State for Energy what recent discussions he has had with the Scottish director of the National Coal Board about progress in clearing the Polkemmet bing.

Mr. David Hunt: I am in regular contact with the Scottish area of the NCB and am taking a close interest in progress.

Combined Heat and Power Schemes

17. Lord James Douglas-Hamilton asked the Secretary of State for Energy if he will estimate how much employment the combined heat and power schemes will provide in (a) the Edinburgh area and (b) elsewhere.

Mr. Goodlad: Estimates in Energy Paper 53 commissioned by my Department and published in 1984 indicate that additional local employment of some 3,000 jobs might result over a 12 to 15 year period from installing the heat distribution systems and consumer connections in all nine cities studied in the report. Edinburgh would account for approximately 300 extra jobs over the same timescale. Other employment would arise from the construction of new CHP plant and heat only boiler plant.

24. Mr. Rost asked the Secretary of State for Energy when he next expects to meet the chairman of the East Midlands electricity board to discuss the board's involvement in combined heat and power schemes.

Mr. Goodlad My hon. Friend visited the Coventry office of the East Midlands electricity board on 15 January at the invitation of the chairman to hear about the board's close involvement in promoting energy efficiency including combined heat and power projects. There are no plans for a further meeting.

Housing (Insulation)

18. Mr. Meadowcroft asked the Secretary of State for Energy if he will make a statement on the standards of insulation in British urban housing.

Mr. David Hunt: One of the purposes of Energy Efficiency Year is to draw attention to the inadequate insulation of dwellings, many of them in towns, which account for a large part of the £2 billion, of energy wasted annually in the domestic sector.

Coal Industry (Productivity)

19. Mrs. Currie asked the Secretary of State for Energy if he will make a statement about the latest productivity figures achieved by the National Coal Board.

Mr. Peter Walker: The National Coal Board continues to achieve weekly deep-mined productivity in excess of three tones per man shift. This is more than one third higher than the average for April 1979 when a Labour Government was last in office, and represents an impressive improvement since the end of the strike.

Offshore Supplies Industry

23. Mr. Holt asked the Secretary of State for Energy what was the value of offshore fabrication orders won by companies in the north-east during 1985.

Mr. Buchanan-Smith: In 1984 north-east fabrication companies won orders worth £217 million out of total orders for the United Kingdom of £674 million. Outturn figures are not yet available for 1985. However, our provisional estimates indicate that north-east companies have continued to win a significant proportion of offshore fabrication work.

Coal Industry

26. Mr. Neil Hamilton asked the Secretary of State for Energy when he proposes to implement the June 1983 recommendations of the Monopolies and Mergers Commission that the statutory limit on the operations of licensed opencast coal operators should be increased to 100,000 tonnes.

36. Mr. Portillo asked the Secretary of State for Energy if he will introduce legislation to ease or abolish the statutory limits applying to employment in, and production from, privately owned coal mines, and to abolish the royalties on such production.

Mr. David Hunt: I have no plans to introduce such legislation.

29. Sir William van Straubenzee asked the Secretary of State for Energy if he will make a statement on the current level of coal production.

Mr. Peter Walker: Current levels of coal production are better than forecast, with output for 1985-86 expected to exceed 104 million tonnes.

37. Mr. Knox asked the Secretary of State for Energy what is the output of coal per manshift at the present time; and how this compares with the output of coal per manshift in April 1979.

Mr. Peter Walker: The latest figures show that productivity reached 3·04 tonnes per man shift in the week ending 25 January 1986. This compares with an average of 2·20 tonnes per man shift for April 1979.

Mr. Jack Thompson asked the Secretary of State for Energy what information he has as to the average earnings of British coalminers in comparison with coalminers in other EEC countries; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Hunt: On the basis of information published by the statistical office of the European Communities on gross hourly earnings in October 1983 in those member states with significant hard coal industries, the National Coal Board has provided the following comparison with earnings in the United Kingdom at the same periods:

Federal Republic of Germany	4·52
France	4·62
Belgium	4·18
United Kingdom	4·56

However, such a comparison is inevitably artificial, as it takes no account of a large number of factors including the number of hours worked, and differing tax and social security arrangements in member states.

40. Mr. O'Brien asked the Secretary of State for Energy what discussions he has had with the National Coal Board about the new definition for measuring the economic future of pits in terms of £1·50 per gigajoule; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Hunt: It is for the National Coal Board to determine the target production cost which it believe will supply coal at a price the market will bear. Expressing costs in £/gigajoule takes account of variations in the calorific content and therefore the value of coal.

NCB (Enterprise) Ltd.

27. Mr. Gerald Howarth asked the Secretary of State for Energy how many jobs have been created, and how much investment has been attracted, by incentives offered by NCB (Enterprise) Ltd.

Mr. Peter Walker: By the end of January 1986, NCB (Enterprise) had assisted in the creation of 4,412 job opportunities, attracting a total investment of £45·9 million.

Wind Energy

28. Mr. Hayes asked the Secretary of State for Energy what support his Department has given to research and development of larger wind turbines; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Hunt: My Department has spent over £16 million, since 1979, on research and development into the use of wind energy for electricity generation. Most of this support has been directed to the development of large wind turbines and includes major construction projects on Orkney and at Carmarthen bay.

Industrial Energy Costs

30. Mr. Watts asked the Secretary of State for Energy what is his estimate of the impact on industrial energy costs of the recent fall in oil prices.

Mr. Buchanan-Smith: Industry is already benefiting from lower oil product prices. If lower oil prices are sustained further reductions in energy costs seem likely.

NCB (Reorganisation)

32. Mr. Jack Thompson asked the Secretary of State for Energy if he has had any discussions with the chairman of the National Coal Board regarding reorganisation of the coal board at area level; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Hunt: At my right hon. Friend's meetings with the chairman of the NCB all aspects of the coal industry are discussed, including the organisation of the board's activities.

Energy Projects (EC Assistance)

33. Mr. Gregory asked the Secretary of State for Energy what assistance from the European Community is currently available to British industry and local authorities for energy projects; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Goodlad: Community support for research and development includes aid for energy demonstration projects and new technologies in the hydrocarbons sector. Energy projects can qualify for EC regional development grants and certain additional grants are available to coal areas. Loans, some at favourable rates of interest, are also available to the nuclear and coal industries.

Coal Industry (Pit Closures)

34. Mr. Willie W. Hamilton asked the Secretary of State for Energy how many pits have been closed in Scotland since the end of the miners' strike; how many closures are contemplated in the next two years; how many jobs have been lost in the relevant period; and how many jobs have been created specifically in mining areas.

Mr. David Hunt: Individual pit closures are a matter for the National Coal Board. I understand that no pits have been closed in Scotland since March 1985 and only one proposal for closure, Polkemmet, has been made. The number of men on colliery books in Scotland has fallen from 11,263 at the end of March 1985 to 7,793 in the week ending 25 January 1986. NCB (Enterprise) Ltd has so far created 738 job opportunities in Scotland.

Offshore Supplies Industry

35. Mr. Baldry asked the Secretary of State for Energy what action he is taking to encourage the United Kingdom offshore supplies industry to take advantage of export opportunities; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Buchanan-Smith: Experience in the North sea has qualified our offshore supply industry to compete worldwide. I believe there are substantial export opportunities. Accordingly, my Offshore Supplies Office has recently organised four conferences addressed by 12 leading oil companies and the World Bank. There was excellent attendance by the offshore supplies industry. It is now up to the United Kingdom supply industry to take advantage of the unique opportunity these conferences have presented.

38. Mr. Kennedy asked the Secretary of State for Energy if he will make a statement on the current and projected levels of activity within the United Kingdom oil-related fabrication yards.

Mr. Buchanan-Smith: United Kingdom oil related fabrication yards are engaged on some 181,000 tonnes of fabrication work. It is envisaged that another 90,000 tonnes of jacket and module work will be placed in 1986.

Coal Industry (Colliery Review Procedure)

41. Mr. Hardy asked the Secretary of State for Energy if he has given or will give advice to the National Coal Board in regard to the response to the recommendation made following consideration of appeals under the colliery review procedures.

Mr. David Hunt: Appeals under the colliery review procedure are a matter for the National Coal Board.

North Sea Oil

Mr. Hayward asked the Secretary of State for Energy what assessment he has made of the implication for the future rate of North sea oil developments of the recent fall in crude oil prices; what assessment he has made of the consequential effects on employment in the associated industries with particular regard to their geographical concentration; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Buchanan-Smith: It takes up to five years to develop a field, which may then be producing oil for a further 15 years. Accordingly, it is the companies' expectation of prices over such periods which matter, not the current spot rate. I believe that development and exploration in the North sea, with its attendant opportunities for British industry and employment, will continue.

National Fuel Distributors

Mr. Woodcock asked the Secretary of State for Energy if he has any plans to seek to bring the National Coal Board subsidiary National Fuel Distributors into private ownership; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Hunt: This is a matter for the National Coal Board; and I have asked the chairman to write to my hon. Friend.

Colliery Accidents

Mr. Hardy asked the Secretary of State for Energy what changes there have been in the number of serious underground accidents in British collieries in the last six months; what assessment he makes of the significance of the change; and what advice he is giving to the National Coal Board in regard to the matter.

Mr. David Hunt: The figures for fatal accidents and major injuries under ground in the latest six months for which figures are available are as follows:

Months	1985 (including contractors) Fatal	Major injuries
July	1	34
August	1	34
September	0	48
October	3	61
November	2	58
December	2	56
TOTAL	9	291

I am happy to report this improvement over the same six months in 1983, when there were 10 fatal accidents and 339 major injuries.

Colliery Manpower

Mr. Hardy asked the Secretary of State for Energy if the response to his most recent redundant mineworkers' compensation arrangements indicate that there are any collieries where there is either an actual shortage of manpower or where such a shortage is likely to be experienced during 1986.

Mr. David Hunt: Manpower management is a matter for the National Coal Board. However, redundancies of men in the coal industry—as in any other industry—can occur only if jobs cease to be available.

ENVIRONMENT

Local Authorities (Tendering)

Mr. Watts asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he has any plans to introduce legislation to prevent local authorities from imposing pre-conditions to tenders which have no commercial basis.

Mrs. Rumbold: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer which I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Ynys Mon (Mr. Best) on 11 February, at column 397.

Association of Metropolitan Authorities

Mr. Pavitt asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he has given an additional grant to the Association of Metropolitan Authorities in order to meet the costs arising from the proposed occupation of new headquarters at 35 Great Smith Street, London SW1.

Mrs. Rumbold: No. The Department of the Environment does not provide financial support to the Association of Metropolitan Authorities or any of the other local authority associations, which are funded by subscriptions from member authorities.

National Parks

Mr. Knox asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish details of the land owned, including its acreage, by the Peak Park planning board.

Mrs. Rumbold: Information provided by the board is as follows:

	acres	hectares
Eastern Moors	6,500	2,590
The Roaches	975	395
North Lees	1,250	506
Minor properties (including information centres, car parks, etc.)	168	68

Mr. Knox asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the total acreage of land owned by each national park authority in England and Wales.

Mrs. Rumbold: Information provided by the national park authorities is as follows:

	Acres	Hectares
Brecon Beacons	22,900	9,160
Dartmoor	2,971	1,188
Exmoor	7,287	2,915
Lake District	19,187	7,675
Northumberland	386·5	156·5
North York Moors	3,900	1,560
Peak District	8,893	3,557
Pembrokeshire Coast	500	200
Snowdonia	1,900	760
Yorkshire Dales	262	105

Welfare Benefits Project

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Environment when the Greater London council was informed that consent for the expenditure in connection with the welfare benefits project had been refused; and how the council was informed.

Mr. Tracey: A letter announcing my right hon. Friend's decision was delivered by hand to the council's offices at County hall at approximately 3 pm on Monday 10 February 1986.

News International (Wapping)

Mr. Nellist asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if the London Docklands Development Corporation has received any request for planning permission in respect of the erection of barbed wire fences at the News International plant at Wapping; and if he will make a statement.

Sir George Young: Planning permission for the development, including fencing, was granted by the London borough of Tower Hamlets prior to the existence of the LDDC. Certain features of the fences, however, may not comply with the permission. The LDDC has taken up the matter with News International.

Home Ownership

Mr. Hoyle asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what information he has as to the figures for home ownership by ward and postal area for Peterborough, Northampton borough, Swindon, St. Helens, Wigan, Poulton, Bolton and Bury.

Sir George Young: The percentages of households present on census night in 1981, who were owner-occupiers, appear in the ward and civil parish monitors published by the Office of Population Censuses and Surveys for each county; these are available in the Library. Information is not available on a postal area basis.

GLC (Grants)

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) on what grounds he refused his consent to expenditure by the Greater London council on a grant to the Workplace Nurseries Campaign;

(2) on what grounds he refused his consent to the Greater London council for a grant to the North Lewisham Project—Black Parents Education Group;

(3) on what grounds he refused his consent to expenditure by the Greater London council on a grant to the Barking and Dagenham Link Employment Resource Centre;

(4) on what grounds he refused his consent to expenditure by the Greater London council on a grant to the London Transport Technology Network — Routemaster.

Mr. Tracey: My right hon. Friend refused consent to these grants on the grounds that, on the basis of the information before him, they would not be a justifiable use of ratepayers' money.

Green Belt

Sir Anthony Grant asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make it his policy not to consent to developments which could reduce the green belt in general and the green belt in Cambridgeshire in particular.

Mr. Tracey: It is already Government policy that green belts should be protected from inappropriate development. When determining green belt boundaries, local authorities should ensure that they are defensible in the longer term.

Voluntary Bodies (Transitional Funding)

Dr. Cunningham asked the Secretary of State for the Environment when he proposes announcing details of transitional funding to voluntary groups and organisations in the metropolitan districts and London boroughs.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: Following the announcement of grant allocations to the authorities concerned, which was made on Wednesday 12 February, letters will be sent to individual local authorities as soon as possible indicating which projects have been accepted as eligible for transitional grant support, and which have not. We have already begun to issue these letters.

Housing Defects Act

Mr. Rooker asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he has received any complaints regarding the operation of section 3(5) of the Housing Defects Act; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John Patten: Yes. I am aware that some owners are unhappy about this. Under the act such cases are for the local authority to decide, though owners who are not satisfied with their council's decision can take the matter to the county court. I therefore cannot comment on individual cases; but the Department's circular 28/84 issued on 7 November 1984, offered guidance to local authorities on the kind of circumstances in which they might offer repurchase under this provision. I look to local authorities to operate the Act in a reasonable way.

Mr. Rooker asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish for each local housing authority the most recent figures for (a) the number of applications received under the Housing Defects Act 1984, (b) the number of grants paid under the Act and (c) the number of repurchases indicating separate figures in respect of those under section 3(5).

Mr. John Patten: Eighty-five local authorities have reported that they have repurchased a total of 638 dwellings under the Act during the first half of the current financial year; details are listed. I regret that information on the number of applications for assistance, the number of grants paid, and the number of repurchases specifically under section 3(5) is not currently available.

Polychlorinated Biphenyls (Shipment)

Mr. Livsey asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations he has received about the possible risks associated with the shipment of the chemical polychlorinated biphenyls from Western Australia to an incineration plant in Pontypool, South Wales; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Rumbold: I have received no representations about the possible risks associated with the shipment of polychlorinated biphenyls from Western Australia to the ReChem incineration plant at Pontypool, but I am aware that my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales has received a letter from the hon. Member for Torfaen, expressing his concern.

Local Income Tax

Mr. Simon Hughes asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish the figures on which his estimate of the local income tax rate which would need to be levied in Southwark is based; and if he will also publish (a) the total taxable income, and (b) the total number of taxpayers, in each London borough, Scottish region, and English and Welsh county.

Mr. Waldegrave: I will write to the hon. Member.

Chatham Dockyard

Mr. Couchman asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he is now in a position to make a further announcement about the designation of an enterprise zone in part of the non-historic dockyard at Chatham.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: Statutory invitations, under schedule 32 of the Local Government, Planning and Land Act 1980, have today been sent to Rochester-upon-Medway city council and Gillingham borough council to prepare jointly a scheme with a view to designation as an enterprise zone of some 24 hectares — 60 acres — of development land in the non-historic dockyard at Chatham.

This invitation marks the start of the formal procedures leading to designation. I very much hope to see this zone in operation by the summer. I am sure that it will prove an important incentive in attracting private sector investment to the revitalisation of the dockyard.

Copies of the press notice announcing this together with a map of the proposed enterprise zone are being placed in the Library of the House.

Nuclear Waste

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what meetings he has had recently with Mr. David Lea of the Trades Union Congress committee on nuclear waste; what views were put to him there on disposal of nuclear waste; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waldegrave [pursuant to his answer, 14 February 1986, c. 589]: I met Mr. Lea most recently on 11 February. He indicated the concern of the Trades Union Congress that the Government might announce potential sites for the disposal of low and intermediate level radioactive wastes at a time when a study of the best practicable environmental option (BPEO), which was directly relevant, was nearing completion. After discussion Mr. Lea agreed to the early publication of the BPEO study in the setting that this would have priority over any announcement on sites. I indicated that I understood the position of the Trades Union Congress, even though I was not in a position to make a specific commitment.

Building Research Advisory Services

Mr. Thurnham asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he has received any representations concerning the issuing of letters of assessment from the building research advisory services; and if he will make a statement.

Sir George Young [pursuant to his answer, 14 February 1986, c. 590]: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State, myself and my ministerial colleagues regularly receive representations concerning the building research advisory services, and particularly the fire research station advisory service, from hon. Members and industrial organisations.

The fire research station advisory service has for many years been operating under heavy demand of work, and intends to continue operating effectively in the future. Particular emphasis is given to assisting United Kingdom manufacturers with export business.

London Docklands Development Corporation

Mr. John Mark. Taylor asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he has any plans for an initiative similar to the London Docklands development corporation in any other parts of the United Kingdom; and if he will make a statement.

Sir George Young: None at the moment.

Council House Sales

Mr. Thurnham asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations he has received about right-to-buy problems where more than one authority have a legal interest.

Sir George Young: Representations have been received from several hon. Members, and from others, drawing attention to the position of tenants who cannot exercise the right to buy because their immediate landlord has only a leasehold interest. An order under section 30 of the Housing and Building Control Act 1984 is in preparation. It will enable such tenants to buy where their superior landlord is a body against which the right can be exercised and has the necessary interest to sell or grant a long lease.

London Boroughs (Transitional Funding)

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if, pursuant to the reply to the hon. Member for Hampstead and Highgate (Sir G. Finsberg) on 12 February, he will list for each London borough the number of projects and the total amount involved in their application to his Department for transitional grant funding.

Sir George Young: Not all the bids were presented on an entirely comparable basis, but with that reservation the information is as follows:

Nature Conservancy Council

Mr. Corrie asked the Secretary of State for the Environment whether any procedures are followed by his Department to verify the accuracy of the annual reports of the Nature Conservancy Council before such reports are laid before Parliament.

Mrs. Rumbold: The Nature Conservancy Council is required by the Nature Conservancy Act 1973 to prepare an annual report each year and for my right hon. Friend to place this before Parliament. It is for the Nature Conservancy Council to verify the accuracy of its reports.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Crime Statistics

Mrs. Clwyd asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what has been the increase since 1978 in the number of crimes of violence committed against women and children.

Mr. Mellor: Information on the age and sex of victims of crime is not regularly collected centrally except in respect of homicide. The only other information available relates to certain offences defined as being committed against women or children, such as rape or child destruction. Information on these offences is published annually in "Criminal Statistics, England and Wales" (tables 2.8 and 2.9 of the issue for 1984, Cmnd. 9621).

Mr. Ron Davies asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he has any proposals to collect additional information about the number, age, sex and ethnic origins of victims of crime.

Mr. Mellor: We have no current plans to increase the centrally collated information on victims beyond that supplied by the British crime survey, the regular collection of statistics on homicide and that available to the Criminal Injuries Compensation Board; information from all these sources is published. However, we do intend to publish an analysis of data available from the 18 police forces which record the fullest information; and information about victims is collected in specific research studies when appropriate.

Citizenship

Mr. Madden asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many applications for British citizenship under (a) section (5) and (b) section 4(5) of the British Nationality Act 1981 were (i) received, (ii) granted and (iii) outstanding between the following dates (1) 1 January 1983 to 31 March 1983, (2) 1 April 1983 to 31 March 1984, (3) 1 April 1984 to 31 March 1985 and (4) 1 April 1985 to the present time.

Mr. Waddington: The following is the information requested for section 4(5) of the British Nationality Act 1981:

Applications under section 4(5)

	Received	Granted
1 January 1983 to 31 March 1983	0	0
1 April 1983 to 31 March 1984	0	0
1 April 1984 to 31 March 1985	237	0
1 April 1985 to 31 January 1986	221	1

Two hundred and thirty-seven applications were outstanding at 31 March 1985; 456 applications were outstanding at 31 January 1986. One application has been refused.

The number of applications granted under section 5 of the British Nationality Act 1981 during the same period was:

Applications granted under section 5

	Number
1 January 1983 to 31 March 1983	1,292
1 April 1983 to 31 March 1984	5,819
1 April 1984 to 31 March 1985	981
1 April 1985 to 31 March 1986	234

Corresponding information on applications received and outstanding is not available.

Mr. Madden asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department into which account in his Department the fees accruing from applications made under (a) section 5 of the British Nationality Act 1981 and (b) section 4(5) of the Act are paid.

Mr. Waddington: Applications under section 5 of the British Nationality Act 1981 are made to and processed by the governor of Gibraltar, for a fee decided by and credited to the Government of Gibraltar. The fees for applications under section 4(5) of the British Nationality Act 1981 are taken as appropriations in aid into class IX vote 7, and are accounted for in the appropriation account for the vote.

Mr. Madden asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many applications for British citizenship were received, granted and outstanding, respectively, in each month since March 1985.

Mr. Waddington: The available information is as follows:

Applications for British citizenship

	Received	Granted	Outstanding
1985
April	4,088	3,702	—
May	3,799	2,916	—
June	3,259	3,447	—
July	4,157	4,811	*35,598
August	3,900	3,958	—
September	3,533	4,097	—
October	4,398	5,445	—
November	4,622	6,577	*32,678
December	3,656	2,911	—
1986
January	3,892	3,779	—

* Outstanding applications are counted by a periodic stocktake.

Mr. Madden asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the estimated cost per application of processing applications for (a) adult registration, (b) naturalisation and (c) registration of minor children in (i) 1985-86 and (ii) 1986-87.

Mr. Waddington: The average estimated cost per application in 1985-86 for the registration of adults and minors is £55; for the naturalisation of the spouses of British citizens it is £55; and for other naturalisations it is £160. Estimates for 1986-87 are currently being prepared in the light of the overall planning assumptions announced in the White Paper on public expenditure published on 15 January.

Holloway Prison

Mr. Kilroy-Silk asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department to what extent the two workshops at Holloway prison were in operation in the most recent week for which information is available; how many prisoners were employed in them; and for how many hours on average they worked.

Mr. Mellor: In the week ending 7 February 1986 the assembly workshop was closed and the light textiles workshop employed 17 inmates for an average of 1½ hours.

Drunkenness

Mr. Soley asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what information he has as to which police forces have arrangements with health authorities or non-statutory alcohol agencies to assist with drunkenness offenders who are repeatedly coming to the notice of the police.

Mr. Giles Shaw: I am aware of such arrangements in some parts of the country but no reliable information is held centrally.

Mr. Soley asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what information he has as to how many police forces in England and Wales are operating cautioning schemes for drunkenness offenders; and if he will list those forces in the Official Report.

Mr. Giles Shaw: No comprehensive central records are maintained, since the establishment of such schemes is a matter for the operational judgment of individual chief officers. I am aware that cautioning schemes for drunkenness offenders at present are operated by police forces in Bedfordshire, Cleveland, Devon and Cornwall, Dorset, Humberside, Merseyside, the Metropolitan police district, Northumbria, north Wales, north Yorkshire, south Wales, Thames Valley and Wiltshire.

Police (Complaints)

Mr. Canavan asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he is satisfied with the operation of the system for complaints against the police; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Giles Shaw: Part IX of the Police and Criminal Evidence Act 1984, which introduced new arrangements for the handling of complaints against the police, has been in force only since 29 April 1985. Many of the cases completed by the authority started under the previous arrangements. I am, however, encouraged by the way in which the new authority has established its independence, and by the prominent role it is playing in the supervision and assessment of investigations.

My right hon. Friend has recently agreed to strengthen the Police Complaints Authority by appointing a further member, and hopes to make a further statement on this shortly.

Sexual Offences Act 1985

Mr. Irving asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what guidance he has given to chief constables concerning implementation of the Sexual Offences Act 1985;

(2) if he will make a statement on the progress of the implementation of the Sexual Offences Act 1985.

Mr. Mellor: With the exception of that part of section 1(1) which section 5(6) provides shall not take effect until section 3 of the Prosecution of Offences Act 1985 is in force in the area concerned, the Sexual Offences Act 1985 came into force on 16 September 1985. The Act will come fully into force on 1 April 1986 in the areas specified in the Prosecution of Offences Act 1985 (Commencement No. 1) Order 1985 (SI 1985/1849), and elsewhere later in the year. Guidance was given to chief officers of police in Home Office circular No. 52/1985 dated 2 September 1985, a copy of which is in the Library.

Gloucestershire County Constabulary

Mr. Irving asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the current police establishment for the Gloucestershire county constabulary; and whether he has received any request for an increase in the establishment.

Mr. Giles Shaw: The authorised establishment of the Gloucestershire constabulary is 1,164. We have not received an application recently from the Gloucestershire police authority for an increase in the authorised establishment of the force. Forty-eight additional police posts have been approved for the force since May 1979.

Neighbourhood Watch Schemes

Mr. Soley asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list in the Official Report, the names of all neighbourhood watch schemes in the Metropolitan police district by police divisions.

Mr. Giles Shaw: In view of the significant increase in the number of neighbourhood watch schemes in the Metropolitan police district from 1,282 at the end of 1984 to 3,770 at the end of last year, the information requested is no longer held centrally and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Oakham Police Station

Mr. Latham asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he is now in a position to announce a starting date for the rebuilding of Oakham police station.

Mr. Giles Shaw: The Leicestershire police authority was given approval in November 1985 to start planning on a replacement police station at Oakham. It is not yet possible to say when building can begin; this will depend on the relative operational priority of the scheme compared with the many others awaiting a building start date and on the availability of capital resources in the years ahead. Schemes are normally given a building start date two to three years in advance; thus police authorities were notified in November 1985 of the schemes which can start in 1988-89.

Passports

Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many valid British visitors' passports are currently held; how many of these are held in respect of families; how many such passports were issued in each of the last 10 years; what was the scale of fees applicable in each year; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waddington: British visitors passports are valid for one year. The information available, which relates to the number issued, is given in the following table:

Year	British Visitors Passports issued	Those where spouse included	¶Fee £
1976-77	862,800	Not known	*4.00

• Fee where spouse included.

Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many valid family passports are currently held; what is their duration; how many such passports were issued in each of the last 10 years; what scale of fees was applicable in each year; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waddington: British family passports are valid for 10 years. The information available, which relates to the number issued, is given in the following table.

Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if, pursuant to the answer to the hon. Member for Leicester, East of 3 February, any guidelines are issued to passport offices about the circumstances and manner in which they may use their discretion in respect of family passports.

Mr. Waddington: Yes. In the sense indicated in my reply of 3 February, at column 6, to my hon. Friend.

Prison Workshops

Mr. Alex Carlile asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many prisoners are employed in prison workshops; what is the average number of hours worked by each prisoner so employed; and if he will make a statement on the future prospects for prison workshops.

Mr. Mellor: In the last quarter of 1985 the average number of inmates employed in prison industrial workshops was 8,980. The average net working hours per inmate employed was 19·4 hours a week. With regard to the future of prison industries, I have as yet nothing to add to the reply given to a question by the hon. Member for Norwood (Mr. Fraser) on 22 January 1986 at column 218.

Magistrates Courts (Case Delays)

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether the national information collection system described in circular HOC 67/1984 LCDJ(84)1 can now indicate waiting times for cases to be heard in magistrates' courts; and whether delays, broken down by types of offence, will be published.

Mr. Mellor: The first national collection took place in June 1985 and the second in October 1985. Justices' clerks have been supplied with statistics for the petty sessional divisions for which they are responsible. A statistical bulletin summarising the June data, and including a breakdown by type of offence, is in course of preparation and is expected to be published soon.

Prisons (Drug Abuse)

Mr. Barry Jones asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he is satisfied that adequate measures are taken in Her Majesty's prisons to end drug abuse; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mellor: We attach much importance to keeping unauthorised drugs out of prisons and are determined that all appropriate counter-measures should be taken. Methods of detecting drugs within establishments are kept continuously under review. Regular and special searches are conducted, including the use of dogs specially trained in drug detection work. The number of trained dogs has been increased. The police investigate cases where there is reason to believe that a visitor intends to smuggle drugs into an establishment. The quality of the information available centrally about the incidence of drugs in prisons has been improved. Staff training on drugs has been improved, including the production of a new training package aimed specifically at the problems and need of the prison service which was issued to all establishments last year.

Prisoners (Training)

Mr. Alex Carlile asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many prison staff were employed to teach trades and skills to prisoners in each of the years 1980 to 1985; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mellor: The numbers of prison staff employed to each trades and skills to prisoners on 1 January in each of the years 1980 to 1985 were:

	Civilian instructors	Prison officer instructors	Total
1980	882	573	1,455
1981	942	575	1,517
1982	956	556	1,512
1983	1,004	500	1,504
1984	1,048	433	1,481
1985	1,057	422	1,479

Immigration

Dr. McDonald asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) how many immigration cases were referred to him by hon. and right hon. Members in the last quarter of 1985 and so far in 1986; and of that number, how many have been kept in detention;

(2) how many immigration cases were referred to him by hon. and right hon. Members in 1983, 1984 and 1985; and of that number, how many were kept in detention in each of those years.

Mr. Waddington: I shall reply as soon as possible.

Dr. McDonald asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many Bangladeshi immigrants placed in detention on arrival in the United Kingdom were transferred to the Ashford remand centre in 1983, 1984 and 1985; and how many such immigrants are currently detained there.

Mr. Waddington: The available information relates to Bangladeshi citizens who were detained either after refusal of leave to enter or having been required to submit to further examination on arrival, and is as follows:

	Number
1983	17
1984	16
1985	147

At 2pm on 13 February seven Bangladeshi citizens were so detained.

Dr. McDonald asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many Bangladeshi immigrants were kept in detention on arrival in the United Kingdom in 1983, 1984 and 1985.

Mr. Waddington: The figures available relate to the number of citizens of Bangladesh detained overnight in port detention accommodation or police cells after seeking leave to enter the United Kingdom, and are as follows:

	Number
1983	129
1985	1,173

The figures for 1983 and 1984 do not include persons detained at Queens building, Heathrow. Some element of double counting will be included where the same person was detained in more than one centre.

Police (Expenditure)

Mr. Kaufman asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the anticipated total expenditure on the police in England and Wales in each of the financial years 1985-86 and 1986-87.

Mr. Hurd: The latest available information was given in my reply of 19 December 1985 to the right hon. Member at column 273.

As I stated in my reply to a question from my hon. Friend the Member for Stafford (Mr. Cash) on 11 February, at column 392, I intend to increase the proportion of police expenditure met by central Government from 50 per cent. to 51 per cent. in 1986-87, and my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment will be making a further £22 million of block grant available in England. These grant changes will help all police authorities provide an effective police service without placing too great a burden on the ratepayers. Decisions on individual force budgets are the responsibility of police authorities.

Community Radio

Dr. McDonald asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he is now in a position to announce the successful applicants for experimental community radio licences; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Giles Shaw: No. My right hon. Friend has just received the report of the advisory panel on community radio and will make an announcement when he has had time to study it.

Dr. McDonald asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he expects any community radio stations funded by the BBC to be funded through advertising; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Giles Shaw: None of the applications for licences under the forthcoming experiment comtemplates a community radio station being financed in whole or in part by the BBC.

Dr. McDonald asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if, when he receives the report from the advisory panel on community radio, he will place a copy in the Library.

Mr. Giles Shaw: No. This would not be sensible. The panel prepared its report on the basis that it would not be published.

Dr. McDonald asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what steps are being taken to ensure that applicants for community radio licences do not have an interest in more than one station, are not groups in which independent television or local radio companies have a majority interest, or are not groups of which political parties or overtly political organisations are part, joint or full owners.

Mr. Giles Shaw: The criteria for community radio outlined by my right hon. and learned Friend the then Home Secretary on 25 July 1985, at columns 670-71, precluded the issue of licences to individuals or groups who have an interest in more than one station, to groups in which independent television or local radio companies have a majority interest, or to groups of which local authorities or political parties are part, joint or full owners. The advisory panel on community radio has had these prohibitions in mind in considering the applications for experimental community radio licences.

Citizenship

Mr. Madden asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will publish the actual income and expenditure accounts for the administration of nationality applications for 1984-85 and the estimated income and expenditure account for 1985-86.

Mr. Waddington: I have today placed in the Library a copy of the nationality fees memorandum and trading account for the 12 months ended 31 March 1985. A copy of the nationality fees budget income and expenditure account for the year ending 31 March 1986 was placed in the Library in March last year.

Policing (Humberside)

Mr. Hickmet asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what additional resources will be available for policing in Humberside as a result of his answer of 11 February, Official Report, column 392.

Mr. Giles Shaw: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply given by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment to a question from the hon. Member for Hyndburn (Mr. Hargreaves) on 12 February at column 463. The budget for the Humberside police is a matter for the Humberside police committee.

Victim Support Schemes

Mr. Sheerman asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what current financial assistance his Department makes for victim support schemes.

Mr. Mellor: In the current financial year the Home Office has made a grant of £126,000 to the National Association of Victims Support Schemes (NAVSS). There is at present no provision for grants from the Home Office to local victims support schemes, although a number are receiving assistance from other Departments under a variety of general Government programmes. In the financial year 1986-87, however, the Home Office plans to provide, in addition to the annual grant to the NAVSS, £136,000 for local schemes which are experiencing particular financial difficulties. The money will be paid to NAVSS, which will be responsible for determining individual applications from local schemes, and will be additional to the grant which NAVSS will receive towards its own programme of work.

Remembrance Ceremony, Whitehall

Mr. Winnick asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department, in pursuance of the reply of 27 January, Official Report, column 375, when the hon. Member will receive a reply to his letter of 12 November regarding the Remembrance ceremony in Whitehall.

Mr. Hurd: Other Departments are involved, but I hope to reply to the hon. Member very shortly.

Dr. Frank Skuse

Miss Maynard asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what age was Dr. Frank Skuse, a forensic scientist at the Home Office Laboratory at Chorley, upon his retirement on October 1985.

Mr. Hurd: Dr. Skuse was aged 50.

Prevention of Terrorism Act (Sikhs)

Mr. Ground asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the use of the Prevention of Terrorism Act against members of the Sikh community settled in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Giles Shaw: Since 11 October 1985 the number of arrests under the Prevention of Terrorism Act of people appearing to be Sikhs is 20.

Leicestershire Constabulary

Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the actual and authorised establishment for Leicestershire constabulary; and whether he has received any request for an increase in police manning levels for Leicestershire constabulary.

Mr. Giles Shaw: The authorised establishment of the Leicestershire constabulary is 1,733. We have not received an application recently from the Leicestershire police authority for an increase in the authorised establishment of the force. On 31 December 1985 the strength of the force, including authorised supernumerary posts, was 1,750.

Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many additional places have been allocated or are envisaged for Leicestershire constabulary on the basis of the additional sums recently announced for police expenditure.

Mr. Giles Shaw: It is the responsibility of the Leicestershire police authority to fix the authorised establishment of the force, subject to my right hon. Friend's approval. The changes in police grant and block grant which my right hon. Friend announced in reply to a question from my hon. Friend the Member for Stafford (Mr. Cash) on 11 February at column 392, should help the police authority in maintaining police and civilian manpower levels.

Paul Hill

Miss Maynard asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department, what was Paul Hill's weight when he was admitted to prison; and what it is today.

Mr. Mellor: Mr. Hill's weight on first reception into prison custody on 5 December 1974 was 125 lb. When asked on 14 February Mr. Hill declined to be weighed and it is thus impossible to provide the information sought about his current weight.

Miss Maynard asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department for what specific breach of prison discipline Paul Hill, a prisoner at Gartree, was transferred to Lincoln temporarily in the interests of maintaining good order and discipline at Gartree prison.

Mr. Mellor: Mr. Hill was transferred temporarily in the interests of good order and discipline; it is not alleged that he had committed an offence against prison discipline.

Miss Maynard asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many days Paul Hill has spent on temporary transfer to Lincoln prison in the interests of maintaining good order and discipline at Gartree prison or separated from other prisoners since the commencement of his sentence.

Mr. Mellor: Mr. Hill has been transferred temporarily from Gartree prison to Lincoln prison for one period totalling 27 days.

The readily available information shows that Mr. Hill has been segregated under prison rule 43 in the interests of good order and discipline for a total of 571 days; in addition, he has been awarded a total of 178 days cellular confinement. Information about other occasions when he has been segregated from other prisoners, for example under prison rule 48 when awaiting adjudication, is not readily available and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Interception of Communications Act 1985

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department when the tribunal for appeals under the provisions of the Interception of Communications Act 1985 will be set up; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hurd: I expect to make an announcement shortly about the coming into force of the Interception of Communications Act, including the establishment of the tribunal for which it makes provisions.

Drugs (Offences)

Mr. Simon Hughes asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will give the total number of convictions for drug-related offences by (a) adults and (b) young people under 17 years of age in the last year for which figures are available.

Mr. Mellor: Information on the numbers of persons found guilty in the United Kingdom of drugs offences in 1984, the latest year for which information is available, is given by age group in table 2.11 of "Statistics of the Misuse of Drugs, United Kingdom, Supplementary Tables, 1984". In 1984, 401 persons aged under 17 and 22,481 persons aged 17 and over were found guilty of drugs offences.

Mr. Simon Hughes asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will give the total number of convictions for offences of supplying drugs in the last year for which figures are available.

Mr. Mellor: The information requested is given in table 8 of "Statistics of the Misuse of Drugs in the United Kingdom, 1984 (Home Office Statistical Bulletin 23/85). In 1984, 1,426 persons were found guilty of unlawful supply of drugs.

News International (Work Permits)

Mr. Litherland asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if Charlie MacNeil, John Cowley, Reg Limb, Phil Stevens, Adam Conrad and Norman Jamieson, employees of News International and Commonwealth citizens, have valid work permits to reside in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Waddington: It is not our practice nor that of my noble Friend the Secretary of State for Employment to disclose information of this kind about individuals.

Drug Addict

Mr. Simon Hughes asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he is able to provide a breakdown by each borough of the number of registered drug addicts in London; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mellor: The information requested is not available.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Public Expenditure

Mr. Stuart Holland asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what has been the share of public spending (a) including transfer payments and (b) excluding transfer payments in the United Kingdom economy in the years 1976 to 1985.

Mr. MacGregor: The figures are summarised in the following table:

	General government expenditure as a percentage of GDP	General government expenditure on goods and services as a percentage of GDP
1977-78	42	23½
1978-79	43	22½
1979-80	43½	22½
1980-81	46	24
1981-82	46½	23½
1982-83	46½	23½
1983-84	46	23½
1984-85	45½	23½
1985-86*	44½	23

* Estimated outturn.

General government expenditure covers spending by central and local government; it includes transfer payments such as social security benefits. As a percentage of GDP, it shows the extent to which the nation's resources are flowing through government. General government expenditure on goods and services is a narrower measure and excludes transfer payments; as a percentage of GDP it shows the extent to which the nation's resources are being directly absorbed by government.

Mr. E. Harvey

Mr. Latham asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether, pursuant to the discussions between the Deputy Collector of Her Majesty's Customs at Nottingham and Mr. E. Harvey of Hillside Farm, Ragdale, Leicestershire, he will outline the obstacles to Mr. Harvey being permitted to instal two tanks on his digger, one containing white diesel for use on public highways, and the other containing red diesel for use on construction sites; and whether he will seek to rectify this matter.

Mr. Brooke: With specified exceptions, vehicles licensed to haul goods on public highways must always use fully duty paid derv (white diesel) as fuel. Entitlement to use lower-dutied red diesel in any circumstances depends on a more restricted licence (in this case a digging machine licence) and this would debar the hauling of goods on the public highway. To change the law to allow the fitting of two fuel tanks would seriously undermine control of misuse of the lower dutied red diesel.

Mr. Latham asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether he will now direct Her Majesty's Customs and Excise that Mr. E. Harvey of Hillside Farm, Ragdale, Leicestershire, be permitted to use his digger to tow a van to and from building sites provided that white diesel is used as fuel on the highway and that Mr. Harvey obtains a restricted heavy goods licence; and whether he will make a statement.

Mr. Brooke: There is no objection to Mr. Harvey doing what is proposed. However, vehicles licensed as restricted heavy goods vehicles must always use derv (white diesel) as fuel, including when working off the highway.

Mr. Anthony Miller (Correspondence)

Mr. Maxwell-Hyslop asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer why the Financial Secretary has not yet replied to the letter dated 11 December from Mr. Anthony Miller, chairman of the taxation committee of the National Federation of Self Employed; and when a full reply will be dispatched.

Mr. Moore: I have now sent a reply to Mr. Miller.

Ticket Sales (VAT)

Mr. Parry asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what recent representations he has received seeking zero rating of value added tax on ticket sales.

Mr. Brooke: A few representations have been received urging VAT relief for admission charges to sporting and cultural events.

Nationalised Industries

Mr. Simon Hughes asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what advice his Department has given to nationalised industries that own or manage sites that are surplus to requirement or derelict land; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. MacGregor: I shall let the hon. Member have a reply as soon as possible.

Taxation

Dr. McDonald asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether, in the manner of the answer given on 18 April 1985, Official Report, column 243, he will publish and update the tax relief figures for 1985-86.

Mr. Moore [pursuant to his reply, 13 February 1986, c. 540]: The direct revenue cost of income tax relief at rates in excess of the basic rate in 1985-86 is estimated to be about £280 million for mortgage interest relief and about £210 million for relief on employees' and self-employed pension contributions. The direct revenue cost of these reliefs taken in combination is estimated at about £520 million. The corresponding estimates for 1984-85 have been revised and are: mortgage interest relief £210 million, pension contributions £180 million, both reliefs in combination £420 million.

THE ARTS

Voluntary Bodies

Mr. Michael Forsyth asked the Minister for the Arts if he will list in the Official Report those voluntary bodies and organisations assisted by his Department with grant aid in the last financial year for which figures are available and the size of the grant so given.

Mr. Luce: In 1984-85 (the last complete year for which outturn figures are available), the Office of Arts and Libraries made the following direct grants towards the administrative costs of arts organisations which could be classed as voluntary bodies according to the common definition:

The National Art Collections Fund	7,030
The Association for Business Sponsorship of the Arts	10,500

Mr. Michael Forsyth asked the Minister for the Arts if he will list in the Official Report the governmental agencies to which his Department gives grant aid which in turn provide financial support for voluntary bodies and organisations and the size of the grant so given in the last financial year for which figures are available.

Mr. Luce: The Office of Arts and Libraries makes grants to a number of non-departmental public bodies which in turn provide financial support to other arts bodies and organisations, some of which could be regarded as voluntary. The grants planned for 1985-86 are mainly listed in the supply Estimates, class V, vote 10.

Mr. Michael Forsyth asked the Minister for the Arts if he will outline the steps which his Department takes to ensure that grant aid given to voluntary bodies and organisations, whether directly or indirectly, is not used for political purposes.

Mr. Luce: Grants are given in accordance with the aims and objectives of the arts and libraries programme described in chapter 3.13 of the public expenditure White Paper (Cmnd. 9702), and not for political purposes. It is the practice of the Department and of the grant-giving bodies which it funds to specify the purpose of the grant at the outset, and to take appropriate steps in each case to satisfy itself that the grant is spent in accordance with that purpose.

Liverpool (Ministerial Visit)

Mr. Parry asked the Minister for the Arts, if he will make a statement on his recent visit to Liverpool.

Mr. Luce: I shall let the hon. Member have a reply as soon as possible.

South Bank Board

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Minister for the Arts why the Arts Council has still not declared the level of funding for the South Bank board; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Luce: The South Bank board only received full details of GLC expenditure on the concert halls comparatively recently, and it has had to make its case to the Arts Council. That case is now being considered, together with other applications for post-abolition funding.

The Arts (Merseyside)

Mr. Parry asked the Minister for the Arts (1) if, when he next meets the chairman of the Arts Council, he will discuss with him the delays in notification to Arts organisations on Merseyside of their grant allocations for the financial year 1986-87;

(2) if he is satisfied with the progress of negotiations between the Arts Council and the successor local authority on Merseyside.

Mr. Luce: I met representatives of the various arts bodies when I visited Merseyside on 13 February, and I undertook to convey to the chairman of the Arts Council their anxiety to have an early announcement on grant allocations. I made it clear that the delay among district councils in deciding to commit themselves to a share of funding the arts on Merseyside was an obstacle to an early announcement, and that I looked forward to seeing these decisions taken as soon as possible.

Mr. Parry asked the Minister for the Arts how many Arts organisations currently in receipt of Merseyside county council grants have been informed of the level of funding they can expect from successor bodies in the financial year commencing April 1986.

Mr. Luce: None.

Ethnic Minority Arts

Mr. Parry asked the Minister for the Arts what is Her Majesty's Government's policy towards the promotion of ethnic minority arts in inner city areas; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Luce: I commend the recent initiative of the Arts Council in issuing an action plan in respect of the needs of ethnic minorities, and inviting its client bodies to consider how these can be met.

Royal Liverpool Philharmonic Orchestra

Mr. Parry asked the Minister for the Arts how many hon. Members have made representations to him concerning the future of the Royal Philharmonic Orchestra.

Mr. Luce: Eleven.

Liverpool Philharmonic Hall

Mr. Parry asked the Minister for the Arts if he will list in the Official Report the representations he has received against the closure of the Liverpool philharmonic hall at the latest date.

Mr. Luce: I have received to date 42 letters and one petition of 96 signatures on the subject of the future of the Liverpool philharmonic. Included in this total are representations from the following bodies:

City of Liverpool
Metropolitan borough of Wirral
Musicians' Union
National Campaign for the Arts
Royal Philharmonic Society.

DEFENCE

Research

Dr. McDonald asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he will publish in the Official Report a list of the universities and other educational institutions currently involved in joint research council/Ministry of Defence research projects.

Mr. Norman Lamont The new joint Research Council/MOD research grants scheme comes into operation on 1 April 1986. The research councils and MOD are currently evaluating 132 applications for funding from 40 universities and other institutions of higher education.

Aircraft Sales (Saudi Arabia)

Mr. McNamara asked the Secretary of State for Defence, following the fall in the price of oil, whether British Petroleum and the Royal Dutch/Shell Group are still participating in the scheme to finance the sale of Tornado and other aircraft for the Kingdom of Saudi Arabia in return for crude oil.

Mr. Norman Lamont: The means by which the Government of the kingdom of Saudi Arabia are generating funds for the purchase of Tornado and other aircraft are matters for that Government. They do not, however, involve Her Majesty's Government or the aircraft manufacturers taking title to oil as payment.

Mr. McNamara asked the Secretary of State for Defence whether, following the fall in world oil prices, Her Majesty's Government are considering a different offset agreement for the sale of Tornados and other aircraft to the kingdom of Saudi Arabia.

Mr. Norman Lamont: No.

Mr. McNamara asked the Secretary of State for Defence what is the financial effect of the drop in oil prices on the proposed sale of Tornados and other aircraft to the kingdom of Saudi Arabia.

Mr. Norman Lamont: Lower oil prices, even if sustained, will have no effect on the price paid by the kingdom of Saudi Arabia for the aircraft.

Tucano Trainer Aircraft

Mr. McNamara asked the Secretary of State for Defence what requests he has received from Shorts of Belfast for further moneys to finance the Tucano Royal Air Force trainer project.

Mr. Norman Lamont: None.

ROF Birtley

Mr. Eastham asked the Secretary of State for Defence if, in order to reduce the need for redundancies at Royal Ordnance Factory, Birtley, he will make it his policy to seek to transfer royal ordnance factory work placed by his Department to that factory from other royal ordnance factories currently working overtime.

Mr. Norman Lamont: The organisation of work within the Royal Ordnance plc group is entirely a matter for the company.

Mr. Eastham asked the Secretary of State for Defence what steps his Department is prepared to take to offset further job losses at the Royal Ordnance Factory, Birtley.

Mr. Norman Lamont: I have nothing to add to the statements which I made in replying to the debate on the Army on 30 January 1986, at columns 1180-81.

Jordan (Armaments Contract)

Mr. Eastham asked the Secretary of State for Defence what is the earliest date that work can commence on the Jordan armaments contract.

Mr. Norman Lamont: A memorandum of understanding was signed in September 1985 between Jordan and the United Kingdom providing for United Kingdom Government assistance with the supply of a wide range of military equipment. The contracts to be covered by the MOU, which are being progressively placed, will provide for the commencement of work as negotiated between the companies concerned and the Jordanian Government.

RNAY Fleetlands

Mr. Hancock asked the Secretary of State for Defence whether a decision has been made with regard to the introduction of private contractors to miscellaneous activities in the naval aircraft support area RNAY Fleetlands.

Mr. Norman Lamont: No.

Mr. Hancock asked the Secretary of State for Defence whether a decision has been reached as to the possible transfer of responsibility for mechanical handling equipment from CED to DGST (N) RNAY Fleetlands.

Mr. Norman Lamont: No. Proposals concerning the future management responsibility for mechanical handling equipment throughout naval shore establishments have been put to the trades unions. We hope to reach decisions shortly.

RN Captain (Pay)

Mr. Hancock asked the Secretary of State for Defence what was the salary of a Captain RN on 1 January 1979 and 1 January 1986; and what is the percentage difference in real terms.

Mr. Norman Lamont: The salary for a captain RN on these dates was as follows:

	1 January 1979 £	1 January 1986 £
Maximum (after 6 years)	11,545	29,401
Minimum (on appointment)	9,746	24,426

The increase in real terms over the period by comparison with the retail prices index is 72 per cent. on the maximum of the scale (68 per cent. on the minimum).

RIMPAC Naval Exercise

Mr. Gordon Brown asked the Secretary of State for Defence what role the Royal Navy is adopting in the RIMPAC naval exercise; and if this will involve participation in the shelling of Kaho'olawe.

Mr. Norman Lamont: As my right hon. Friend the Minister of State for the Armed Forces informed the House on 4 February 1986, at column 122, this exercise is sponsored by the United States navy and the release of public information about it is a matter for the USN.

Mr. Gordon Brown asked the Secretary of State for Defence if the Royal Navy will be involved in continuing participation in other RIMPAC naval exercises.

Mr. Norman Lamont: As my right hon. Friend the Minister of State for the Armed Forces informed the House on 4 February 1986, at column 122, Exercise RIMPAC is sponsored by the United States navy, and invitations to participate in future RIMPAC naval exercises are a matter for the USN.

Mr. Gordon Brown asked the Secretary of State for Defence when each of the Royal Navy warships participating in RIMPAC will be departing; and from which ports.

Mr. Norman Lamont: As my right hon. Friend the Minister for the Armed Forces informed the House on 4 February 1986, at column 122, the Royal Navy surface warships taking part in Exercise RIMPAC are planned to be Her Majesty's ships, Illustrious, Beaver, Manchester, and Amazon, which are due to leave Portsmouth and Devonport early in April on the first leg of the Royal Navy task group deployment to the north Pacific, far east, Australasia and Indian ocean areas.

Ships Containing Chemical Weapons

Dr. McDonald asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he will publish in the Official Report the date on which the document entitled "Damage to Ships Containing Chemical Weapons anz-13585", became open for inspection by members of the public.

Mr. Norman Lamont: On 20 December 1985.

SOCIAL SERVICES

Widows' Allowance

Mr. Skinner asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many widows received widows' allowance in 1984 and 1985; and what was the total amount of widow's allowance paid out by his Department in each year.

Mr. Major: The available information is as follows:

	Number of awards of widow's allowance	Total benefit cost† £ million
Year ending 30 September 1983*	60,690	—
Financial year 1984-85		87
1985-86 (latest estimate)		86

* Latest information available.

SERPS

Mr. Meacher asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what is the minimum state earnings-related pension scheme pension currently in payment; how many people are in receipt of it; and how many people are currently in receipt of £0 to £1, £1 to £2, £2 to £3 and each £ band per week to the maximum current weekly payment.

Mr. Major: The following table sets out the numbers of people receiving state earnings-related pension scheme additional pensions by size of payment. Information is not readily available on the minimum additional pension currently in payment, and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Amount of additional pension (£ per week)	Numbers of pensioners ('000)
Under 1	733
2-2·99	118
3-3·99	84
4-4·99	63
5-5·99	44
6-6·99	33
7-7·99	21
8 and over	49

Information is not available in the form requested for amounts above £8 per week. The maximum possible additional pension is £20·87 per week.

Health Care (Costs)

Mr. Deakins asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what is the annual expenditure per person on primary health care in (a) Waltham Forest and (b) Brighton; and how these figures compare with the national average.

Mr. Hayhoe: Following are the latest available figures:

*Expenditure per head of population on primary health care

District health authority	1984-85 £
Waltham Forest	87
Brighton	90
Average for district health authorities (England)	83

* Current expenditure on community health services plus net expenditure on family practitioner services. The latter expenditure cannot strictly be attributed to particular districts but has been included (pro-rata to population) from the annual accounts of the family practitioner committees which account for it.

Grant Claims (Walthamstow)

Mr. Deakins asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many claims for (a) death grant and (b) maternity grant were made at the Walthamstow office in each year from 1980-81 onwards.

Mr. Major: The information relating to the number of claims to death grant and maternity grant (non-contributory maternity grant from July 1982) in the years from April 1980 to date is as follows:

	Death grant	Maternity grant
1980-81	1,809	1,673
1981-82	1,436	1,550
1982-83	1,996	2,210
1983-84	1,589	1,788
1984-85	1,665	1,905
*1985-86	1,106	1,404

* To 14 January 1986.

Constant Attendance Allowance

Mr. Caborn asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many persons are currently in receipt of constant attendance allowance at each of the four rates of allowance.

Mr. Newton: At 30 September 1982 (the latest date for which information is available) the estimated figures are as follows:

	Number
Part-time Rate	450
Normal Maximum Rate	1,000
Intermediate Rate	530
Exceptional Rate	270

Special Hardship Allowance

Mr. Caborn asked the Secretary of State for Social Services for each percentile of disablement between 1 per cent. and 20 per cent. and for each 5 percentile of disablement between 20 per cent. and 100 per cent., how many persons are currently in receipt of special hardship allowance.

Mr. Newton: Awards of disablement benefit for disablement of 20 per cent. or over are rounded to the nearest 10 per cent. In the year ending 30 September 1983 (the latest year for which information is available) the estimated figures are as follows:

Disablement	Number of recipients

100	Nil

Mr. Caborn asked the Secretary of State for Social Services for each prescribed industrial disease and for each 5 percentile of disablement between 0 per cent. and 100 per cent., how many persons are in receipt of (i) disablement benefit and (ii) special hardship allowance.

Mr. Newton: Figures are not available for each prescribed disease showing levels of disablement or receipt of special hardship allowance. The table shows the number of recipients of disablement benefit for each prescribed disease at 30 September 1983 (the latest date for which figures are available).

Brief description of prescribed diseases	Number of beneficiaries

† Due to nickel.

Mr. Caborn asked the Secretary of State for Social Services for each of the five-year age bands between 20 years and 95 years, how many people are in receipt of special hardship allowance.

Mr. Newton: In the year ending 30 September 1982 (the latest year for which information is available) the estimated figures are as follows:

Age	Number of recipients
20-24	1,060
25-29	2,350
30-34	3,920
35-39	7,340
40-44	9,030

85 and over	1,420

Kidney Patients

Mr. Temple-Morris asked the Secretary of State for Social Services as to kidney transplant programmes in the United Kingdom what are the (i) five-year and (ii) 10-year survival rates of patients after (a) first cadaver graft and (b) subsequent cadaver grafts.

Mr. Whitney: I regret that information on patient survival following a kidney transplant is not readily available. However, information provided by the United Kingdom transplant service shows that rates for the continuing functioning of a cadaveric kidney transplanted before 1980 are as follows:

	5 year per cent.	10 year per cent.
First transplant	34·5	25·2
Second transplant	28·8	18·9

Indications are that rates have improved significantly since 1980 following the introduction of the immuno-suppressant drug Cyclosporin A. Patients whose transplanted kidney fails are normally then treated by dialysis.

Speech Therapists

Mr. Flannery asked the Secretary of State for Social Services whether there are any proposals to increase the salaries of speech therapists in line with other graduate professions in the National Health Service.

Mr. Whitney: I understand that no claim has yet been received by the management side of the Whitley council in respect of the 1986-87 pay round. It has, however, undertaken to examine jointly with the staff side the arguments which bear on the question of pay parity with other graduate professions.

Helping the Community to Care Scheme

Mr. Hannam asked the Secretary of State for Social Services, pursuant to his reply to the hon. Member for Exeter on 30 January, Official Report, column 617, if he will state the dozen elements in the Helping the Community to Care scheme.

Mr. Whitney: I refer my hon. Friend to my reply to the right hon. Member for Stoke on Trent, South (Mr. Ashley) on 27 January at columns 397-98.

NHS (Ancillary Workers)

Mr. Canavan asked the Secretary of State for Social Services whether he will make a statement about the wages of ancillary workers in the National Health Service.

Mr. Whitney: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to the hon. Member for Ipswich (Mr. Weetch) on 28 January at column 496. The next meeting of the ancillary staffs Whitley council is to be held on 13 March.

Pensions and Benefits

Mr. Campbell asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will list the number of persons claiming (a) supplementary pension, (b) unemployment benefit and (c) all other supplementary benefits in the constituency of Dumbarton for 1979 and the latest year for which figures are available.

Mr. Major: The constituency of Dumbarton is covered for social security purposes by the Department's office at Dumbarton. The table shows the number of people receiving supplementary benefit in the categories (a) persons over pension age, (b) unemployed persons, (c) others at November 1979, and at 17 December 1985, the latest available figures.

	Supplementary Pensioners A	Unemployed Persons B	Others C
1985	1,836	3,555	2,358

The number of persons claiming unemployment benefit in the Dumbarton constituency at 9 June 1983, the earliest available figures, and 12 December 1985 were:

	Number
1983	5,787
1985	5,906

Advisory Committee on Drugs

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton asked the Secretary of State for Social Services to whom and where representations to the Advisory Committee on Drugs should be addressed; how often this committee sits; how it intimates its decisions; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hayhoe: Representations to the Advisory Committee on NHS drugs should be addressed to:

The Secretary,
Advisory Committee on NHS Drugs,
Room 620 Eileen House,
80-94 Newington Causeway,
LONDON SE1 6EF

Since July 1985 the advisory committee has met five times and in future expects to meet four times a year. If, in the light of recommendations made to the Secretary of State by the committee, the status of drugs under the selected list scheme needs to be changed, this is effected through regulations laid before Parliament.

Disablement Benefit

Mrs. Beckett asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what is his best estimate for the most recent year for which figures are available of the proportion of awards of industrial disablement benefit falling into the following ranges: (a) one per cent. to 14 per cent., (b) 15 per cent. to 19 per cent. and (c) 20 per cent. to 100 per cent.

Mr. Newton: In the year ending 20 September 1983 (the latest year for which information is available) the estimated figures are as follows:

20-100	4·4

North-West RHA (Membership)

Mr. Terry Lewis asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will list the current members of the North-West regional health authority, and their dates of retirement giving annual changes in membership since 1974.

Mr. Hayhoe: I shall let the hon. Member have a reply as soon as possible.

Cadaver Kidneys

Mr. Dalyell asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will now introduce legislation to allow hospital authorities to use kidneys of all persons where clinical death has been established other than those who have specifically contracted out from being kidney donors during their lifetime; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Whitney: The Government have no plans at present for introducing legislation to amend the Human Tissue Act 1961 in the way that the hon. Member suggests. We are fully committed to increasing the numbers of donor organs becoming available for transplantation, but before supporting the introduction of new arrangements which permitted the removal of organs without the consent of the deceased or, where practicable, of his relatives, we would need to be convinced that such arrangements were broadly accepted both by the medical profession and by the public generally, and that they would in fact result in the supply of donor organs being increased. We would also need to be satisfied that it would be possible to establish adequate safeguards to ensure that the wishes of people opposed to organ donation were properly respected. Organ donation is at present seen as an act of altruistic generosity on the part of donors and their relatives, and the erosion of this view would be regrettable.

Victim Support Schemes

Mr. Sheerman asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what assistance his Department is providing to victim support schemes.

Mr. Whitney: The Home Department has the predominant central Government interest in victim support schemes. Central Government do not normally provide grants to local voluntary projects but a few grants have been made to local victim support schemes under the DHSS opportunities for volunteering scheme which is designed to enable unemployed people to take part in voluntary activities in the health and personal social services fields. The total paid in 1984-85 was £31,000.

Severe Weather Payments

Mr. Gordon Brown asked the Secretary of State for Social Services whether, in the course of examining eligibility of severe weather payments, and the amount paid, cash may be deducted if there are additional heating costs due to illness in the family.

Mr. Newton: I refer the hon. Member to the guidance issued by the Chief Adjudication Officer on 6 December 1985, a copy of which is in the Library.

Claimants who need extra help with heating costs because they or a member of their household suffer from a long term illness or disability may be eligible for a weekly heating addition of £2·20 or £5·45 a week, depending on the severity of the illness or disability.

Young People (Drinking Patterns)

Sir Bernard Braine asked the Secretary of State for Social Services when he will publish the findings of the Office of Population Censuses and Surveys study on the drinking patterns of young people, the field work for which was carried out in 1984; and what is the reason for the delay in making the findings known.

Mr. Whitney: I shall let my right hon. Friend have a reply as soon as possible.

Specialist Claims Control

Mr. Gordon Brown asked the Secretary of State for Social Services why specialist claims control officers are visiting Cowdenbeath.

Mr. Major: A specialist claims control team is on a routine visit to Cowdenbeath to assist the local office fraud staff.

Mr. Gordon Brown asked the Secretary of State for Social Services which areas of Britain specialist claims control officers are now visiting.

Mr. Major: Specialist claims control teams are currently visiting local offices at:

Basingstoke, Birmingham (Edgbaston), Birmingham (Erdington), Bognor, Bournemouth, Bridgend, Brighton, Cardiff (Central), Chatham, Chester, Coventry (East), Cowdenbeath, Devonport, Doncaster (East), Dundee (East), East Kilbride, Epsom, Eston, Farnworth, Glasgow (Craighton), Guildford, Hendon, Hyde, Manchester (Cheetham), Newcastle (East), Newport (Gwent), Northwich, Nottingham (Castlegate), Peckham, Plaistow, Plymouth, Sheffield (South West), Skelmersdale, Southampton, Stirling, Thanet, Walsall (East), Walsall (West), Walthamstow, Wandsworth, Watford, Weymouth, Winchester, Worksop and Worthing.

Benefit Fraud

Mr. Gordon Brown asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many prosecutions there have been for benefit fraud in (a) Scotland and (b) Britain in 1985.

Mr. Major: In 1984-85, the last full year for which figures are available, prosecutions for benefit fraud totalled 662 in Scotland and 8,436 in Great Britain.

Under-age Girls (Contraception)

Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) how many representations he has received from interested professional and voluntary and charitable organisations since the House of Lords judgment in the Gillick case; and if he will list those which were, respectively, for and against the inclusion in any new guidelines from his Department of a right for parents to be informed in advance if their children are to be issued with contraceptive advice or devices; and if he will make a statement;

(2) how many representations he has received following his statement to the House on 12 February concerning the implications for his Department's proposed new guidelines on the issuing of contraceptive advice or devices to children under 16 years of the General Medical Council's revised guidance to doctors on the subject.

Mr. Hayhoe: Since the House of Lords judgment I have received representations from 13 professional, voluntary and religious organisations. Two of these were received since the GMC's decision on its guidelines, and express concern that confidentiality between young people and their doctor should not be breached. Of the others, none raised the specific point referred to by my hon. Friend, but several others expressed concern that my Department's guidelines should not undermine parental responsibility and family stability.

Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will publish in the Official Report the text of the representations he has received from the ethical committee of the British Medical Association on the proposed guidelines for the issuing of contraceptive advice or devices to children under 16 years.

Mr. Hayhoe: I am not aware of any such representations to either my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State or myself. I met the chairman of the British Medical Association council and the Secretary of the association on 28 January to discuss the guidance my department will be issuing.

Earnings-related Pensions

Mr. Meacher asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will extend the figures given in his reply to the hon. Member for Kensington (Sir B. Rhys Williams) Official Report, 28 January, columns 509-510, about earnings-related pensions to cover the years 2013, 2018, 2023, 2028, 2033, 2038 and 2043.

Mr. Newton: The information requested is set out in the table. It shows the amount of earnings-related pension a contracted-in single man or woman retiring in April each year with a full contribution record would receive under the scheme proposed in "Reform of Social Security" (Cmnd. 9691) and the Social Security Bill 1986, under assumptions set out in my hon. Friend's reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Kensington (Sir B. Rhys Williams) on 17 December 1985 at columns 147-48. It should be emphasised that these are highly artificial assumptions, since they are based on the proposition that a pensioner will earn at the same given level throughout a working life of 44 years (men) and 40 years (women). The estimates are based on actual average earnings up to and including 1984-85 and on estimated 1985-86 earnings thereafter. As a result of the method of calculation and of roundings, the amounts shown are slightly lower than those which would actually be paid if any pensioner did fulfil the earnings assumptions.

Single Homeless People

Mr. Meacher asked the Secretary of State for Social Services which of the area review teams considering proposals for the replacement of his Department's resettlement units have requested funds for the investigation of local needs and to assist the work of drawing up proposals for housing and related services for single homeless people in their area; and what response has been made to these requests.

Mr. Major: Requests have been received from six area review teams: Leeds; Bradford; Humberside; Plawsworth; Leicester/Northampton; and Southampton. The Department, through its social security regional offices, has made manpower resources available to investigate local needs as part of the review of resettlement provision. Research into housing services for single homeless people is a wider issue; policy on homelessness is a matter for the Department of the Environment which is currently undertaking a number of research projects concerning the single homeless including a major programme on hostel provision.

General Medical Council (Chairman)

Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how often he meets the chairman of the General Medical Council; and what subjects are discussed.

Mr. Hayhoe: Very infrequently.

Social Security Reform

Mr. Gordon Brown asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) if he will publish a revised version of the table in the technical appendix of the social security White Paper on possible rates of benefit, to take account of the average 20 per cent. rates contribution proposed in the Green Paper on local government finance;

(2) whether the rates contribution which he proposes should be paid by supplementary benefit claimants is to be deducted at source in a manner similar to the fuel direct procedures; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Newton: As my right hon. Friend made clear in the debate on Second Reading of the Social Security Bill, the proposed social security structure will have to be developed in the light of discussions on the local government finance Green Paper. It would therefore be premature to consider revising the technical annex illustrative figures in this respect, or to seek to take detailed decisions about administrative arrangements.

Mr. Meacher asked the Secretary of State for Social Services whether he will publish tables comparable to tables P1 to P6 in the technical annex to "Reform of Social Security," Cmnd. 9691, showing pension projections on the assumption that (a) the periods of no-earnings specified in paragraph 1.3 of the annex occur at the start of the person's career, followed by the periods of lower and higher earnings, in that order and (b) the person's career starts with the period of higher earnings, followed by lower earnings and no earnings, in that order.

Mr. Newton: I regret that to provide illustrations on the lines requested by the hon. Member would involve disproportionate use of computer and manpower resources.

Mr. Meacher asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) whether he will publish tables comparable to tables P1 to P6 in the technical annex to "Reform of Social Security", Cmnd. 9691, showing pension projections on the assumption that the contracted-out rebate is not boosted by the 2 per cent. incentive addition for the first five years;

(2) whether he will publish tables similar to tables P5 and P6 of the technical annex to the White Paper, "Reform of Social Security", Cmnd. 9691, but assuming that the husband died at the age of 64 years.

Mr. Newton: I shall let the hon. Member have replies as soon as possible.

Mentally Ill People

Mr. Bermingham asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will provide statistics for each of the local authority social service departments in England and Wales which indicate (a) the percentage of their budget spent on services for mentally ill people, (b) the number of day centre places they provide for mentally ill people, and (c) the number of approved social workers at present designated as such; how many are envisaged; and if he will make a statement on the present position regarding approved social work.

Mr. Whitney: I shall let the hon. Member have a reply as soon as possible.

Psychiatric Service

Mr. Bermingham asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many local authority social service departments provide a 24-hour emergency psychiatric service; and if he will list those which do not.

Mr. Whitney: I shall let the hon. Member have a reply as soon as possible.

Wrights Vaporising Equipment

Mr. Gould asked the Secretary of State for Social Services why the Wrights vaporising set and Wrights vaporising fluid were withdrawn from prescription under the National Health Service.

Mr. Hayhoe: The Chief Medical Officer's advisory group considered that the clinical need for inhalation therapy would be met by the two inhalations on the selected list of drugs which may be prescribed on the National Health Service:

Benzoin Tincture Compound BP and Menthol and Eucalyptus Inhalation BP.

The Wrights vaporising set is not suitable for use with these.

Post-operative Infections

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will publish the sample information on post-operative infections held by his Department for 1979 and each year since.

Mr. Whitney [pursuant to his reply, 15 January 1986, c. 604]: The available information is given in the table. Over the period 1979 to 1983, the latest year for which sample information is available centrally, the estimated numbers of in-patient cases undergoing operations increased from 1,901,010 to 2,135,890.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Induction Loops

Mr. Pavitt asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what is the total income received from licences for low-powered induction loops for the last year for which figures are available.

Mr. Butcher: Low powered induction loops are used for a number of different purposes and are licensed on a five-yearly basis. There are currently approximately 9,955 licences on issue covering all types: 438 new licences were issued in 1985 at £12·50 each producing a total income of £5,475. Figures for renewals are not readily available.

Literary and Artistic Works (Convention)

Mr. Page asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when the Government signed the Berne Convention for the Protection of Literary and Artistic Works.

Mr. Pattie: The Berne convention was signed by the United Kingdom on 9 September 1886.

Audio Tapes

Mr. Page asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry which countries in the European Economic Community have legislation providing for royalties from the sale of blank audio tapes; and which countries are considering legislation.

Mr. Pattie: France, the Federal Republic of Germany and Portugal have legislation providing for royalties from sale of blank audio tapes and I understand that Spain is likely to legislate to this effect during 1986. The question is under active consideration in the Netherlands as well as the United Kingdom.

Mr. Page asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what is the best estimate of the percentage of blank audio tapes that are used for illegal copying.

Mr. Pattie: The Government do not compile estimates of illegal copying using blank audio tapes, but in responding to the Green Paper "The Recording and Rental of Audio and Video Copyright Material" (Cmnd. 9445) two organisations have made submissions bearing on the question. One organisation provided survey evident indicating that about 90 per cent. of home recorded audio tapes have music on them. The other organisation said that its research indicated that a "very significant proportion" of home taping was for private purposes which do not infringe copyright.

Mr. Page asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many blank audio tapes were imported into the United Kingdom in 1985; and how many were manufactured in the United Kingdom in 1985.

Mr. Alan Clark: Estimates of United Kingdom manufactured blank audio tapes are not available, as figures would disclose information on individual undertakings. In 1985 (provisional) the United Kingdom imported 95·2 million blank magnetic audio tapes.

HOTOL Project

Mr. Ashdown asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether he has received any request from British Aerospace or Rolls Royce for funding of development work on the HOTOL project; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Pattie: The support I recently announced for this project is for proof of concept studies, to see if there would be any insuperable difficulties with the technology and to provide credible design, performance and cost data with which we can explore the concept with our partners in the European Space Agency. Only then and on a thorough technical, financial and market analysis could there be any commitment to developing HOTOL. I am glad that we have been able to accelerate this revolutionary British idea for a spaceplane. The concept and the credit lie with British Aerospace and Rolls-Royce who have themselves funded the work up to now. The British National Space Centre's support will enable us to see what the possibilities are.

Cotton Textiles

Mr. Nicholas Winterton asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what information he has concerning the scale of the reductions in total capacity of the United Kingdom cotton textile industry in each of the last five years for which figures are available; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Morrison: There are no available statistics on the productive capacity of the cotton textile industry.

Mr. Nicholas Winterton asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry (1) what has been the volume and value of cotton textiles exports in each of the last five years for which figures are available;

(2) what has been the volume and value of cotton textile imports in each of the last five years from (a) other member countries of the European Economic Community, (b) non-European European Economic Community countries and (c) the United States of America; and how these figures compare with United Kingdom exports of such products to each of those countries in each of those years.

Mr. Alan Clark [pursuant to his reply, 14 February 1986, c. 584]: The information is as follows:

Textile Industry

Mr. Nicholas Winterton asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what information he has concerning the volume of woollen textiles deliveries and production which was achieved in the United Kingdom during the latest quarter for which figures are available; and how these figures compare with those for the same quarter in each of the last 10 years for which figures are available.

Mr. Peter Morrison: Overall figures for volume of deliveries are unavailable, although some commodity figures are published in Business Monitor PQ 4310, copies of which are in the House of Commons Library. Figures for production are as follows:

Electricity (Resale)

Mr. Greenway asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when he expects to introduce legislation relating to the control of the resale price of electricity to tenants by private landlords; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Howard: As indicated in my answer of 5 December 1985 to my hon. Friend the Member for York, (Mr. Gregory), the Government propose to deal with the question of overcharging for resale of electricity as part of the proposed new legislation on price indications. We intend to introduce this legislation as soon as parliamentary time is available.

Under present legislation the electricity supply industry fixes the maximum resale price. We have no plans to change that situation.

COCOM

Mr. Foulkes asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry (1) what estimates have been made of the costs to British industry of compliance with consultative committee export restriction regulations; and if he will make a statement;

(2) if he will make a statement on the effects on future United Kingdom trade prospects of existing COCOM regulations.

Mr. Alan Clark: It is not practicable to estimate the cost to industry and effect on trade prospects of strategic export controls. The Government seek to keep such consequences to the minimum by working with COCOM partners to ensure that only goods which are strategically sensitive are subject to such controls.

US Export Administration Act

Mr. Foulkes asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what have been the effects of the latest United States Export Administration Act on British exports; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Alan Clark: The Export Administration Amendment Act 1985 maintains the United States claim to jurisdiction over exports from the United Kingdom of certain United States origin goods and technology or goods incorporating United States components. This can have the effect of delaying or preventing exports that are legal under United Kingdom law. The Government's policy is normally to allow firms to make their own commercial judgment about whether to comply with the United States regulations. But the Government have made it clear on many occasions that they do not accept the United States claims to extraterritorial jurisdiction and regard them as an infringement of United Kingdom sovereignty.

US (Scientific Material)

Mr. Foulkes asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry (1) that representations he has made to the United States of America concerning its unwillingness to release scientific material for military or strategic reasons; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what information he has as to the incidence of United Kingdom citizens being prevented from participating or attending scientific discussions in the United States of America for military or strategic reasons; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Alan Clark: I am aware of about 10 scientific conferences over the last three years which have been restricted to United States citizens. My hon. Friend the Minister of State for Industry and Information Technology made representations about this when he visited the United States last year. The issue has also been raised with the United States Government by officials on a number of occasions.

Regional Aid

Mrs. Beckett asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry in what form fresh guidance has been issued with regard to grant allocation under regional aid with a view to ensuring that real job creation will result.

Mr. Peter Morrison: Details of the Government's revised regional policy, which aims to reduce regional disparities in employment opportunities on a stable long term basis, were announced on 28 November 1984 by the then Minister of State for Industry. Industry is made aware of the incentives available under it. Through my Department's regional offices as well as through departmental publications which were simplified last year and are freely available.

Mr. Gordon Brown asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how much money has been paid out so far in the financial year in (a) regional development grant and (b) selective financial assistance; and if he will publish a table which compares actual expenditure with his original estimate of likely expenditure.

Mr. Peter Morrison: I will reply to the hon. Member as soon as possible.

Protectionism

Sir Anthony Grant asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what steps he is taking to resist any increase in protectionism in the free world; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Alan Clark: The United Kingdom, in company with all other OECD countries, stands pledged both to resist pressures for further protectionism and to pursue possibilities for the progressive liberalisation of trade. With our community partners, we are currently embarked on a relaxation of our external trade regimes in many sectors, notably steel and textiles. The launch in September of a new round of trade negotiations under the aegis of the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade will offer further scope to strengthen the open multilateral trading system.

Tractor Imports

Mr. Sheerman asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will give a breakdown of tractor imports by country of origin over the past 10 years and year by year into the United Kingdom.

Mr. Alan Clark: The detail of information requested is not available by country of origin without incurring disproportionate cost. The table shows a breakdown of tractor imports from the five major countries over the years 1976 to 1985 on a country of consignment basis.

Distillers (Takeover Bids)

Mr. Ryman asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when he expects to receive the report of the Director General of Fair Tradig on the revised bid by Argyll for Distillers.

Mr. Howard: I understand that the Office of Fair Trading considers that the increased offer for the Distillers Co. by the Argyll Group does not materially alter the circumstances on which my right hon. and learned Friend the then Secretary of State for Trade and Industry made his decisions, announced on 9 January, not to refer the merger proposal to the Monopolies and Mergers Commission.

Mr. Ryman asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when he expects to receive the Director General of Fair Trading's report on the proposed takeover by Guinness of Distillers.

Mr. Howard: The director general's advice was not sent to my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry. I and my hon. Friend the Minister for Industry and Information Technology received his advice on the proposed takeover of Distillers on 12 February. My hon. Friend announced on 14 February that he had decided to refer the proposed acquisition by Guinness plc of Distillers to the Monopolies and Mergers Commission for investigation. A copy of the Department's notice announcing that decision is available in the Library of the House.

Imperial Group

Mr. Ryman asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry for what reasons he decided to refuse to refer the bid by Hanson Trust for Imperial Tobacco to the Monopolies and Mergers Commission.

Mr. Howard: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry considered that the proposal raised no competition or other public interest issues which would mreit a reference.

Mr. Ryman asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry for what reason he referred the bid by Imperial Tobacco for United Biscuits to the Monopolies and Mergers Commission.

Mr. Howard: The reference was made because my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for trade and Industry considered that the proposal raised sufficiently serious questions about its impact on competition as to deserve further investigation by the Monopolies and Mergers Commission.

Mr. Ryman asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what account he took, when deciding whether to refer to the Monopolies and Mergers Commission the bids for Imperial Tobacco by the Hanson Trust and for United Biscuits by Imperial Tobacco respectively, of the implications of his decision in each case for his decision in the other; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Howard: In making each decision, my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State took account of the existence of the other bid.

Mr. Parry asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many representations he has received seeking reference to the Monopolies and Mergers Commission of Hanson Trust's takeover bid for the Imperial Group; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Howard: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State and I have received 25 written representations in favour of such a reference. The decision not to refer took full account of these representations.

Channel Tunnel

Mr. Hickmet asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will state what effect he estimates the building of the Channel tunnel will have upon orders of steel from the British Steel Corporation; and which plants will benefit.

Mr. Peter Morrison: A considerable quantity of iron and steel will be needed, including reinforcing steel and structural steel sections, steel rails and railway equipment and cast-iron tunnel linings. Until tenders have been accepted on the appropriate contracts it will not be possible to say what share of the steel required will be supplied by BSC.

Westland plc

Mr. Dalyell asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry (1) what was the nature of the information given by an official in his Department to the office of the chairman of Westland plc on the afternoon of 6 January and referred to by the Prime Minister on 23 January, Official Report, column 450 and 27 January, Official Report, column 653;

(2) what were the practical difficulties which militated against the reading of the whole text of the Solicitor-General's letter to the then Secretary of State for Defence over the telephone to the Press Association on 6 January.

Mr. Channon: I have nothing to add to what my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister said in her statement on 23 January and in the debate on 27 January.

Sub-post Offices

Mr. St. John-Stevas asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if, when he next meets the chairman of the Post Office, he will discuss with him the feasibility of reopening recently closed sub-post offices; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Pattie: No. Decisions about opening or closing individual post offices are an operational matter for the Post Office Board.

Polychlorinated Biphenyls (Shipment)

Mr. Livsey asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will take steps to prevent the importation of 15 tonnes of polychlorinated biphenyls from Australia, for processing at the Re-Chem company at Pontypool.

Mr. Alan Clark: I will reply to the hon. Member as soon as possible.

Engagements

Mr. Dalyell asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will list the Secretary of State's engagements for the afternoon of 13 December, stating on which date each engagement was arranged.

Mr. Channon [pursuant to his reply, 6 February 1986, c. 253]: My right hon. and learned Friend the Member for Richmond, Yorks (Mr. Brittan) held several meetings at the Department before leaving for his constituency.

Men's Suits (Romania)

Mr. Fatchett asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what representations his Department has made to the European Commission in relation to men's suits imported from Romania; and what action it proposed.

Mr. Alan Clark [pursuant to his reply, 13 February 1986, c. 519]: We have drawn the attention of the European Commission to the prices at which Romanian suits have been entering the United Kingdom and have asked it to make representations to the Romanians. Further details are required on the effects on the market and we are in close consultation with our industry about this.

Man-made Fibres

Mr. Nicholas Winterton asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what information he has concerning the scale of the reductions in total capacity of the United Kingdom man-made fibre industry in each of the last five years for which figures are available; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Morrison [pursuant to his reply, 14 February 1986, c. 583]: There are no available statistics on the productive capacity of the man-made fibre industry.

Mr. Nicholas Winterton asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what has been the volume and value of man-made fibre imports in each of the last five years from (a) other member countries of the European Economic Community, (b) non-European Economic Community European countries and (c) the United States of America; and how these figures compare with United Kingdom exports of such products to each of those countries in each of those years;

(2) what has been the volume and value of man-made fibre exports in each of the last five years for which figures are available.

Mr. Alan Clark [pursuant to his reply, 14 February 1986, c. 582]: The information is as follows:

TRANSPORT

Aviation Safety

Mr. McCrindle asked the Secretary of State for Transport what research has been conducted into aviation safety by the Civil Aviation Authority in the last 12 months.

Mr. Michael Spicer: The Civil Aviation Authority conducts safety related research in five main areas. These are the evaluation of the incidence, severity and cause of accidents; collision avoidance; airworthiness of aircraft and equipment; adverse environmental factors; and human factors affecting aircrew. A research programme is agreed annually with representatives of a number of interests including manufacturers of aircraft and equipment and operators of aircraft and aerodromes. The programme for the last 12 months covered aspects of all the five main research areas.

Rail Services

Mr. Leadbitter asked the Secretary of State for Transport what representations he has received about the effect on rail services of the public service obligation grant; and if he will give the level of this grant for each year since 1980 to the latest year for which information is available.

Mr. David Mitchell: I have received about six letters on this matter in the past two years. Central Government PSO grant paid to-BR in each year since 1980 was as follows:

£ million outturn prices

	£ million
1980	576
1981	749
1982	817
1983	856
*1984-85	1,069
†1985-86	813

* Fifteen months to end March 1985.

† Agreed claim for 12 months fiscal year; final payments subject to adjustment.

School Vehicles (Checks)

Mr. Gareth Wardell asked the Secretary of State for Transport what information he has about which county councils in England and Wales have introduced their own system of random school vehicle checks.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: None. This is a matter for the county councils themselves.

Public Service Vehicles (Tests)

Mr. Gareth Wardell asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will publish in the Official Report by operator group for 1984-85, separately distinguishing between Great Britain and Wales, the number and percentage of tests which resulted in immediate prohibition of annual public service vehicle tests.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The information is as follows. The annual test records do not distinguish between immediate and delayed prohibitions.

1984-85 Public Service Vehicles Issue of Prohibition Notices at Statutory Annual Tests

Operator	Total Number of Tests	Total Prohibitions issued	per cent
Great Britain
NBC	13,340	35	0·26
PTE	8,740	39	0·45
Local Authority	4,789	2	0·04
SBG	3,010	5	0·17

Mr. Gareth Wardell asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will publish in the Official Report for 1984-85, separately distinguishing between Great Britain and Wales, the results of spot checking of public service vehicles and the immediate prohibition rates.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Separate information on spot checks is not readily available for Wales as a whole. The information for Great Britain and the south Wales traffic area is as follows:

1984-85

	Great Britain	South Wales Traffic Area
Number of spot checks on PSVs	15,947	965
	*22	*32
Immediate prohibitions	730	18
	†4·6	†1·9

* Percentage of vehicles subject to annual test.

† Percentage of vehicles spot-checked.

Vehicle Examiners

Mr. Gareth Wardell asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will publish in the Official Report for the South Wales traffic area, for each year since 1979, the number of vehicle examiners employed by his Department, together with the number of public service vehicles and goods vehicles for which they are responsible.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The information is as follows:

South Wales Traffic Area

	1980-81	1981-82	1982-83	1983-84	1984-85	1985-86
Vehicle examiner staff in post	19	19	17	17	17	20
Public service vehicles	n.a.	n.a.	3,606	3,541	3,014	n.a.
Heavy goods vehicles	28,215	27,098	26,604	26,458	26,528	n.a.

Figures for 1979 are not readily available.

Vehicle numbers are not readily available by traffic area, so the data have been extracted from the annual testing statistics and do not therefore include vehicles under one year old. Public service vehicle annual testing statistics are available only from 1982-83 onwards. Figures for HGVs and PSVs for 1985-86 are not yet available.

Mr. Gareth Wardell asked the Secretary of State for Transport (1) if he will publish in the Official Report for each year since 1979, the number of public service vehicle examiners engaged in (a) Wales and (b) Great Britain, on inspecting operators' premises;

(2) if he will publish in the Official Report the number of public service vehicle examiners engaged in spot checks in (a) Wales and (b) Great Britain, for each year since 1979;

(3) if he will publish in the Official Report for each year since 1979, the number of public service vehicle examiners in each traffic area in Great Britain;

(4) if he will publish in the Official Report for each year since 1979 the number of public service vehicle examiners engaged in (a) Wales and (b) Great Britain on annual tests at vehicle testing stations.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The vehicle examiner staff in post figures for the years 1980-85 by traffic area are as follows:

Vehicle examiner staff in post

Traffic area	May 1980	May 1981	May 1982	May 1983	May 1984	May 1985
Northern	22	20	21	20	20	22
Yorkshire	32	29	28	28	26	33
North Western	43	41	39	36	30	46
West Midlands	34	34	33	29	29	34
East Midlands	31	28	29	29	29	35
Eastern	22	22	22	19	19	25
South Wales	19	19	17	17	17	20
Western	29	28	28	27	30	29
South Eastern	33	32	31	30	29	30
Metropolitan	37	34	35	39	44	54
Scottish	39	37	35	34	33	40
Total	341	324	318	308	316	368

Figures are not readily available for 1979, nor are separate figures for the whole of Wales. Each vehicle examiner is responsible for a range of duties including inspecting operators premises, spot checks and annual testing; the figures for man years spent on vehicle examiners' activities are not readily available for previous years and could only be obtained at disproportionate cost. For 1984-85 the breakdown of vehicle examiner effort on PSV work is as follows:

Great Britain

	Vehicle examiner man years
Inspection of PSV operators' premises including PSVs checked during visits	11
PSV enforcement work including unannounced spot checks and clearance of prohibitions	16
PSV annual test and retests	67

In addition to the vehicle mechanical condition inspections conducted by public service vehicle examiners, traffic examiners based in the traffic areas have the duty to ensure that PSVs are correctly licensed and drivers comply in all respects with legislation covering drivers' hours.

Chemicals (Conveyance)

Mr. Gareth Wardell asked the Secretary of State for Transport (1) if benzene hexachloride has been (a) approved as a dangerous substance that is permitted for conveyance by road and (b) classified for the purpose of assigning a hazard warning sign on transporting vehicles;

(2) if benzyl benzoate has been (a) approved as a dangerous substance that is permitted for conveyance by road and (b) classified for the purpose of assigning a hazard warning sign on transporting vehicles.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: These substances are not normally regarded as dangerous in transport, and vehicles carrying them are not required to display hazard warning panels.

British Rail (Grants)

Sir David Price asked the Secretary of State for Transport what account he takes, in setting the public service obligation grant to British Rail, of the additional costs arising to the Board from maintaining operation of passenger services during icy and snowy weather.

Mr. David Mitchell: The Board's claim for PSO grant is based on its estimate of the amount by which the costs of operating the passenger railway will exceed its receipts. These costs include any estimate of the effects of bad weather on the railway, but grant is not paid for specific services or areas of expenditure. It is for the board to decide expenditure priorities within the resources available to it.

News International (Rail Freight)

Mr. Nellist asked the Secretary of State for Transport if, when he next meets the chairman of British Rail, he will raise with him the impact on British Rail's financial position of the transfer of News International business from rail to road, and the outcome of discussions on this matter between British Rail and that organisation.

Mr. David Mitchell: No. This is entirely a commercial matter for British Rail and News International.

British Transport Police

Mr. McCrindle asked the Secretary of State for Transport whether, in view of the additional resources to be made available to improve the strength of the civil police, he has any plans to provide further funding for the British transport police.

Mr. David Mitchell: Responsibility for financing the British transport police rests with the British Railways Board, London Regional Transport and others who use their services. Those costs which fall to BR's passenger sector and to LRT are eligible expenditure in the determination of the amount of grant aid to those bodies. I shall continue to consider all relevant factors affecting BR's and LRT's costs when determining the grant settlements, including the financing of BTP.

Channel Tunnel

Mr. Alex Carlile asked the Secretary of State for Transport how many letters he has received from members of the public stating their opposition to the Channel tunnel.

Mr. David Mitchell: Since the announcement by the Government of their decision on 20 January 1986, 230 letters have been received from members of the public opposed to the Channel tunnel.

Tachograph

Mr. Woodcock asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on the implications of recent amendments to EEC 543/9 and 1463/70 for the requirement for vehicles used for retail coal deliveries within a 50km radius of the place where the vehicle is based to be fitted with tachographs.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Under the new EC regulations a vehicle operating within 50km of its base may be exempted from the requirement to fit a tachograph in certain circumstances. A consultation document will shortly be issued on this and other matters relating to the new regulations.

Drink-driving Offences

Sir Bernard Braine asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will state the total number of drivers involved in accidents in England and Wales with positive breath tests or failure to provide a specimen from 1976 to 1984, inclusive, and the total number of drivers involved in accidents with positive breath tests or failure to provide a specimen during the following periods—04.00 hours to 10.00 hours, 10.00 hours to 16.00 hours, 16.00 hours to 22.00 hours and 22.00 hours to 04.00 hours, respectively, from 1976 to 1984, inclusive, or for such periods for which statistics are available.

Mr. Ridley: The most readily available information is for Great Britain and is contained in tables 10 and 35 of "Road Accidents Great Britain 1984", a copy of which is in the Library. A summary is as follows:

Number of drivers in personal injury accidents who gave a positive breath test or who failed or refused to provide a sample: Great Britain: 1979-1984

Okehampton Bypass

Mr. Steen asked the Secretary of State for Transport if, in the light of the subsequent confirming Act, he will now reimburse the objectors to the Okehampton bypass Special Procedure Order who petitioned against the order in Parliament the costs they incurred in so doing; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Section 7 of the Statutory Orders (Special Procedure) Act 1945 gives the Joint Committee, which hears the petitions, power to award costs. In this case, I understand the Committee was not asked to exercise the power.

Written Answers to Questions

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Social Security (Appeals)

Mr. Kirkwood asked the Attorney-General whether he will bring forward proposals concerning applications to the social security commissioners for leave to appeal to the commissioners in order to (a) require the commissioners to give reasons for a decision to refuse such leave and (b) giving a direct right of appeal to the Court of Appeal against such a refusal of leave; and if he will make a statement.

The Attorney-General: I have no such plans at present.

Mr. Kirkwood asked the Attorney-General what specific actions have been taken by the Lord Chancellor's Department to reduce the delays in disposing of appeals to the social security commissioners (a) in supplementary benefit cases and (b) in other cases, since that Department assumed responsibility for the commissioners on 1 January 1985.

The Attorney-General: The Lord Chancellor's Department has undertaken a detailed review of the procedures and working methods in all types of cases which come before the social security commissioners and a number of measures designed to contain delays have been taken. These include improved listing procedures and typing facilities and revised arrangements for handling applications for leave to appeal. Other measures are under consideration, and the current Social Security Bill contains provisions designed to secure a number of procedural improvements.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Radio Interference (Pinner)

Mr. Wilkinson asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what steps are being taken to deal with interference from amateur radio transmissions suffered by the residents of Tudor Close, Eastcote, near Pinner, Middlesex; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Butcher: Problems can arise when high power radio transmissions are made in close proximity to radio and television sets, or indeed a range of electrical apparatus not designed to receive radio. Such problems can be exacerbated by equipment which is deficient in its ability to reject unwanted signals or in the case of radios and televisions which have an inadequate or defective aerial or no aerial at all. The problem is growing because more and more homes now contain a great range of electric equipment; and high power transmitting equipment is now more widely available to the growing number of amateur radio licensees.

Radio amateurs generally take a responsible attitude to the problems their transmissions cause. Equally, manufacturers are keen to produce equipment which has adequate immunity. Regrettably, a few amateurs and manufacturers do not have such a responsible attitude; it is they who cause problems.

My officials are currently discussing with the British Radio and Electronic Equipment Manufacturers Association and the Radio Society of Great Britain the implications for them of the new standard for television immunity currently under discussion internationally and procedures for dealing with individual cases where interference is caused. I would like to see sensible immunity standards observed by all manufacturers and importers of radio receiving and radio sensitive equipment. Where possible and appropriate these will be enforced by order. Similarly, manufacturers and importers of radio and non-radio equipment should seek to ensure that their products do not cause interference to radio users. Orders exist for some types of equipment and where appropriate others will be made.

Where it proves impossible to resolve individual problems and the affected apparatus has been brought up to a reasonable level of immunity, I intend to vary the terms under which the relevant amateurs are licensed; where necessary (and I hope it will not be necessary often) licences will be revoked.

In the particular case referred to by my hon. Friend, I will vary the powers which the amateur is licensed to use and restrict his use of certain bands. If this does not resolve the problem, I shall further review the position.

Textile and Clothing Industries

122. Mr. Merlyn Rees asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many people were employed in the textile and clothing industries in each of the last three years.

Mr. Peter Morrison: The number of people employed in the United Kingdom textile and clothing industries was 500,400 in June 1983, 490,500 in June 1984 and 483,300 in June 1985.

123. Mr. Haynes asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what assessments he has made of the impact of the multi-fibre arrangement on employment in the textile and clothing industries.

Mr. Alan Clark: A number of studies have attempted to assess the employment consequences of the MFA. These I look at with interest and attention.

Grants (Faversham)

Mr. Moate asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will publish a list of all Government investment grants and European Economic Community grants or loans to industry in the Faversham constituency since 1979, under the Industry Act or other legislation, indicating the amounts involved.

Mr. Peter Morrison: Under my Department's main schemes of assistance, five grants worth a total of £2,062,000 have been offered to companies in the Faversham constituency since the beginning of 1979. The names of the companies concerned cannot be disclosed owing to the normal rules of commercial confidentiality. No EEC grants are available in the area.

Pharmaceutical Companies (Investment)

Sir Peter Hordern asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will publish a table showing the level of investment in the United Kingdom made by foreign-based pharmaceutical companies in each year of the last five years, to the latest available date.

Mr. Butcher: Information on the level of inward direct investment is available only from the triennial census of overseas assets and liabilities. The latest available data related to the end of 1981 and showed investment of £868 million. Levels of direct investment at the end of 1984 will not be available until the end of 1986.

Multi-fibre Arrangement

Mr. James Lamond asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what representations he has received about the employment consequences of the renewal of the multi-fibre arrangement.

Mr. Alan Clark: I have received representations from a wide range of interested parties in industry, trade unions and retail and consumer interests on, inter alia, the employment effects of the MFA.

Manufacturing Investment

Mr. Ashley asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will give figures for (a) Stoke on Trent, (b) the west midlands and (c) the United Kingdom showing the percentage change between 1979 and the most recent year for which figures are available for (i) manufacturing output and (ii) investment in manufacturing industry; and if he will list the steps he has taken in the last 12 months to improve the figures.

Mr. Peter Morrison: I shall reply to the hon. Member as soon as possible.

Burroughs Machines

Mr. Norman Hogg asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what Government assistance has been given to Burroughs Machines by way of regional selective assistance and regional development grant in each year from 1979 (a) in total, (b) in Scotland and (c) in Cumbernauld and Kilsyth.

Mr. Peter Morrison: I shall reply to the hon. Member as soon as possible.

Westland plc

Mr. Sedgemore asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will use his powers under the Companies Act 1985 to ascertain who were the beneficial owners of shares held in nominees' names in Westland plc at the time when the decision was taken to accept the Sikorsky proposals.

Mr. Howard: Westland has itself issued notices under section 212 of the Companies Act requiring disclosure of information about the beneficial ownership of the shares in question. In the present circumstances, action by the Secretary of State is unnecessary.

Regional Aid

Mr. Gordon Brown asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how much money has been paid out so far in the financial year in (a) regional development grant and (b) selective financial assistance; and if he will publish a table which compares actual expenditure with his original estimate of likely expenditure.

Mr. Peter Morrison [pursuant to his reply, 17 February 1986]: Expenditure on regional development grants (RDG) and regional selective assistance (RSA) in England for the period 1 April—31 December 1985 (the latest period available) is as follows:

Regional Development Grant Expenditure	Gross payments	Refunds	Net payments
	97,587	3,157	94,430*
Regional Development Grant Supply Estimate	Gross Provision	Appropriations in Aid	Net provision
	188,050	10,000	178,050
Regional Selective Assistance Expenditure	Gross payments	Refunds	Net payments
	41,000	—	41,000†
Regional Selective Assistance Supply Estimate	Gross Provision	Appropriations in Aid	Net provision
	61,599	—	61,599‡

* A further £65 million had been approved for payment by 31 December 1985 but was subject to the four-month moratorium on payments of old-style regional development grants announced on 17 January 1985. This sum will be paid between 1 January and 1 May 1986.
† This figure relates only to expenditure under section 7 of the Industrial Development Act 1982, that is expenditure on project grants, interest relief grants, office and services grants, and training grants.
‡ The published Estimate for regional selective assistance was £83,601,000 gross and £68,552,000 net (with £15,049,000 for Appropriations in Aid) but these figures include miscellaneous items such as European Investment Bank contingent liability, exchange risk guarantee scheme, small and medium-sized units and export assistance not related to expenditure under section 7 of the Industrial Development Act 1982.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Farmers (Bad Weather Assistance)

Mr. Ralph Howell asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on the outcome of the Government's scheme of assistance to farmers who suffered exceptional hardship as a result of the bad weather in the summer of 1985.

Mr. Jopling: To date, payments made to farmers in England under the exceptional Weather aid scheme amount to some £3·24 million. The few remaining claims are now being processed and we expect total payments to amount to about £3·3 million, slightly lower than the original estimate of £3·4 million. It appears that virtually all eligible livestock farmers — about 9,600 in all — submitted applications.

As I announced on 3 December, we have adopted special procedures to pay advances (at the rate of 75 per cent.) to farmers eligible for hill livestock compensatory allowances. Under these, we have by today paid out some £13·3 million to 7,800 applicants in England. The remaining claimants should receive their advances very shortly after submitting their applications. In addition, payment of advances of sheep annual premium to producers in the less-favoured areas of England has been virtually completed: to date, some £6·4 million has been paid to 11,370 applicants.

These special measures will have been of substantial benefit to producers facing cash flow problems as a result of last year's bad weather.

PRIME MINISTER

Royal College of Nursing

Q47. Mr. Pavitt asked the Prime Minister when she last met the general secretary of the Royal College of Nursing.

The Prime Minister In January 1985, when I attended the annual dinner of the Royal College of Nursing.

Arms Control

Q60. Mr. Latham asked the Prime Minister whether she will make a statement on the latest consultations with, and information which she has had from, President Reagan's Administration regarding the arms control negotiations in Geneva.

The Prime Minister: We remain in close and regular touch with the United States Administration on the arms control negotiations in Geneva. The most recent consultations took place at the North Atlantic Council meeting on 3 February when the three United States negotiators briefed the council on the present state of the negotiations. Ambassador Paul Nitze, special adviser on arms control to Secretary of State Shultz, called on me on 5 February, when we discussed the latest Gorbachev proposals and the Geneva negotiations.

Anglo-Irish Agreement

Q62. Sir John Biggs-Davison asked the Prime Minister what steps she proposes to take to seek to increase public support for the Anglo-Irish agreement; and if she will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: I recognise that there are still misunderstandings within Northern Ireland about both the terms and operation of the Anglo-Irish agreement. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland and I will, therefore, continue to explain why fears are unjustified and to draw attention to the advantages the agreement offers to all sections of the community in Northern Ireland. I am soon to meet the leaders of the two main Unionist parties, the Speaker of the Assembly, and representatives from the Church of Ireland. I also hope to meet the leaders of the SDLP and alliance parties.

Sir Robert Armstrong

Mr. Dalyell asked the Prime Minister on what date Sir Robert Armstrong was originally scheduled to return from his visit to Honolulu in connection with preparations for the economic summit; why he returned to the United Kingdom before this date; and if she will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: In his capacity as my personal representative for the purposes of preparing the 1986 economic summit, Sir Robert Armstrong attended a meeting of Personal Representatives held in Honolulu from Friday 31 January until Sunday 2 February. He planned to stop over in Washington for two days on his way back, but returned to this country direct in order to be available in case he was invited to appear before the Select Committee on Defence, as in the event he was.

British Leyland

Q83. Mr. Ashton asked the Prime Minister is she will pay an official visit to a British Leyland factory.

The Prime Minister: I have at present no plans to do so.

Turkey

Q133. Mr. John Fraser asked the Prime Minister if she will place on the agenda for the discussions with the Prime Minister of Turkey from 17 to 19 February the subject of torture and human rights in Turkey.

The Prime Minister: I look forward to holding wide-ranging talks with Mr. Ozal later today. I shall welcome the progress made by his Government on human rights and, as on previous occasions, express our hope that Turkey will continue its efforts to achieve full normalisation on these matters.

Warship Tenders

Mr. Sayeed asked the Prime Minister if she will make it the policy of Her Majesty's Government that, when tenders for warships are considered, total Government expenditure including both procurement costs and industrial assistance are taken into account and that the option offering the lowest net figures should be accepted.

The Prime Minister: It is the Government's policy that, save in exceptional circumstances, warship orders should be awarded to the tender which offers best value for the defence budget. At the same time, where warship builders are publicly owned, the Government's policy is that tenders for defence work should be on an unsubsidised basis.

Museums (Sponsorship)

Mr. Faulds asked the Prime Minister whether she will take steps to transfer the sponsorship of the Natural History museum and the Geological museum from the Department of Education and Science to the Office of Arts and Libraries; and if she will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: I have at present no plans to do so.

Workplace Visits

Mr. Woodall asked the Prime Minister if she will list her official visits to factories and other workplaces which were planned since 1979, but subsequently cancelled, providing details of such visits, sites, names of employers, and the reasons for cancellation.

The Prime Minister: No.

Mr. Woodall asked the Prime Minister if she will list her official visits to factories and other workplaces since 1979, providing details of dates of visits, sites and names of employers.

The Prime Minister: The information is as follows:

Engagements

Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Tuesday 18 February.

Mr. Leigh asked the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Tuesday 18 February.

Mr. Pike asked the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Tuesday 18 February.

Mr. Greenway asked the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Tuesday 18 February.

Mr. Parry asked the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Tuesday 18 February.

The Prime Minister: This morning I had meetings with ministerial colleagues and others. In addition to my duties in this House I shall be having further meetings later today, including one with the Prime Minister of Turkey.

WALES

Planning Controls

Mr. Terlezki asked the Secretary of State for Wales (1) what representations he has received in relation to the Property Advisory Group's proposals for changes in planning controls in Wales; ano if he will make a statement;

(2) if he plans to introduce legislation to permit the use of residential premises in Wales by commercial concerns employing five or fewer staff;

(3) if he plans to introduce legislation to end the distinction between commercial and industrial premises in Wales for the purpose of planning controls;

(4) if he plans to introduce legislation to end planning controls on the development in Wales of residential homes or hostels for 10 or fewer residents.

Mr. Mark Robinson: A sub-group of the Property Advisory Group has reviewed the Town and Country Planning (Use Classes) Order 1972 (SI 1972 No. 1385) and has made recommendations for changes. Consultations about these recommendations as they affect Wales have been undertaken by the Welsh Office and 14 organisations have responded.

The effect of the use classes order is that if an occupier of land wishes to change the use of that land from one use to another within the same use class, he does not need planning permission to make that change.

The sub-group recommends, among other things, a new general business use class, to bring together the present use classes for offices and light industry, and a new residential use class which would include use of a building as a residence and for any other activity (other than a shop) compatible with that use subject to amenity and traffic safeguards and to the proviso that no more than five people engaged in any business activity are present in the building at any one time. The new residential use class would also include the provision of permanent housing accommodation for not more than 10 people.

The responses to the consultations are being considered by my right hon. Friend in conjunction with the consideration being given by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment to the responses to similar consultations in England.

Education Expenditure

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett asked the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list in the Official Report the level of education spending by his Department for each of the last five years expressed as a proportion of the gross domestic product.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: The figures relating to Voted expenditure by the Department are as follows:

	Percentage
1980-81	0·0018
1981-82	0·0021
1982-83	0·0023
1983-84	0·0024
1984-85	0·0025

Menai Straits Marine Nature Reserve

Mr. Best asked the Secretary of State for Wales if he will report progress on the creation of the Menai Straits marine nature reserve; and what proposals have been made for local participation in decision making.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: The Nature Conservancy Council has carried out informal consultations with interested parties and is now preparing a formal consultation document which it intends to circulate during the spring. This will include proposals for the involvement of representatives of local interests in the management of the reserve.

National Museum of Wales

Mr. Geraint Howells asked the Secretary of State for Wales if he will hold an open, independent inquiry into the administration and running costs of the National museum of Wales; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholas Edwards: No. The council of the National museum of Wales has appointed a new director and has taken steps to strengthen its financial administration. It is also setting up a full independent inquiry into the conduct and management of the museum's department of art. I see no need for a further inquiry of the kind proposed.

Student Grants

Mr. Wigley asked the Secretary of State for Wales what discussions his Department had with local education authorities in Wales concerning the level of grants payable to young people between the ages of 16 and 21 years going on from school to higher or further education.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: None.

Higher Education (Advisory Board)

Dr. Marek asked the Secretary of State for Wales what bodies have been asked to nominate members to the board of the Wales Advisory Board for Local Authority Higher Education; and if he will announce the new members.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: The following bodies are invited to nominate members to the board of the Wales Advisory Body for Local Authority Higher Education. The names of the members appointed to serve on the board from 1 January 1986 are shown along side their nominating body.

Mr. P. G. Weekes OBE—ex-South Wales Area Director, National Coal Board
Mr. L. Wolfendale OBE—Managing Director, South Wales Switchgear Ltd

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

Industry and Education

121. Mr. Pawsey asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what measures have been taken to seek to make education more relevant to the needs of industry.

Sir Keith Joseph: A major aim of Government policy is to ensure that all parts of the education system contribute effectively to the preparation of pupils and students for their working lives, that non-advanced further education is more reponsive to the demands of employers and that higher education contributes more effectively to improving the performance of the national economy. These objectives and the many specific measures taken to encourage the partnership between education and industry and commerce are set out in the White Papers "Better Schools" (Cmnd. 9469), "Training for Jobs (Cmnd. 9135), "Education and Training for Young People" (Cmnd. 9482), and in the Green Paper "The Development of Higher Education into the 1990s" (Cmnd. 9524).

Students (Financial Assistance)

Mr. Murphy asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science when he expects to be in a position to announce what further additional financial assistance is planned to be available for students in further education who are in genuine need.

Mr. Walden: I shall write to my hon. Friend.

Alvey Programme

Dr. McDonald asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science (1) if he will publish an estimate of the additional costs incurred by universities involved in the Alvey programme;

(2) if he intends to meet additional costs to universities involved in the Alvey programme; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Walden: The Science and Engineering Research Council's grants provided under the Alvey programme cover expenditure in the following areas:

i. employment of additional temporary research, technical and other assistants;
ii. major capital faciliies and special scientific apparatus not customary for the institution itself to provide;
iii. essential materials and services on a scale which the institution is unable to supply;
iv visits by investigators to recognised centres abroad to study new techniques and research developments.

These areas are common to all the council's research grants. No estimate is available centrally for other costs which, under the dual support system, are borne by the university concerned from its UGC block grant. No further specific provision will be made.

Dr. McDonald asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will publish in the Official Report a list of the universities and other educational institutions currently involved in the Alvey programme.

Mr. Walden: The following universities and other educational institutions are currently involved in the Alvey programme:

Inner London Education Authority

Mr. Maples asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science to what level the Inner London education authority would have to reduce its spending (a) to receive any rate support grant, and (b) to receive maximum rate support grant; and what that maximum grant would be.

Mr. Chris Patten: On the basis of the rate support grant settlement announced by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment in December, the Inner London education authority would receive block grant in 1986-87 if its spending were less than £521 million. The authority would receive the maximum block grant for which it could theoretically qualify if its total expenditure were £385 million, at that point its block grant would be equal to its expenditure.

The objectives of the block grant system are to compensate for differences in needs and rateable resources between authorities. Achievement of these objectives requires that authorities with high rateable resources should receive less grant than authorities less favourably placed; the discouragement of high levels of spending also requires that in general authorities should face a loss of grant as they increase their expenditure. The level of expenditure at which the Inner London education authority would attract block grant is a reflection of its high rateable resources. There is no implication that the authority should spend at or below this level.

Teacher Training

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science how many applications have been submitted for postgraduate teacher training courses in each academic year since 1978-79; and what proportion of these were granted a place.

Mr. Chris Patten: Figures showing the number of applications for PGCE courses processed by the Graduate Teacher Training Registry and the number and percentage of those applicants who took up places on courses in each year between 1978 and 1985 are as follows. The figures do not include those applicants and entrants who applied direct to institutions.

Entry	Applications	Entrants	Column 3 as percentage Column 2
1978	15,061	9,363	58·3
1979	15,774	9,461	60·0
1980	17,160	10,721	62·5
1981	18,783	10,518	56·0
1982	19,020	8,845	46·5
1983	18,473	8,011	43·4
1984	18,760	8,123	43·5
1985	17,084	8,168	47·8

GCSE (Representations)

Mr. Hancock asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science from which local authorities he has received representations, and what is the nature of their representations, concerning the introduction of the general certificate of secondary education in the current year.

Mr. Chris Patten: Since my right hon. Friend announced the introduction of the GCSE in June 1984, the Department has received letters from some 50 local education authorities raising various issues about the GCSE. The main points raised have concerned: the timetable for the introduction of the new examinations, the special programme of GCSE in-service training, and the allocation of resources.

Plant Breeding Institute and National Seed Development Organisation

Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether the Government have come to any decision about the future of the Plant Breeding Institute and the National Seed Development Organisation.

Sir Keith Joseph: The Agriculture Ministers and I have decided that a transfer of the National Seed Development Organisation and part of the Plant Breeding Institute to the private sector would be desirable provided that it can be achieved on satisfactory terms. We will now be consulting interested parties and will be seeking assistance from financial advisers. I shall make a further statement in due course.

ENVIRONMENT

Tobacco Companies (Advertisements)

Mr. Macfarlane asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will place in the Library copies of any advice he receives from the Sports Council or any other organisation in receipt of public funding on the working of the present voluntary agreement between the tobacco companies and the governing bodies of sport.

Mr. Tracey: Yes; I have today placed in the Library submissions from the Sports Council, the Health Education Council and the ASH group (Action on Smoking and Health).

Building Regulations

Mr. Chapman asked the Secretary of State for the Environment when the review of the thermal insulation standards of the building regulations is expected to be concluded; and if he will make a statement.

Sir George Young: The requirements for the conservation of fuel and power are being looked at as part of a general review of the technical requirements of the regulations. A consultative document will be issued later this year.

Council House Sales

Mr. Moate asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the latest figure for the total number of council house sales since 1979.

Sir George Young: From April 1979 to September 1985, about 710,000 dwellings were sold by local authorities and new towns in England.

Rate Support Grant (Stockport)

Mr. Arnold asked the Secretary of State for the Environment, pursuant to the answer of 10 February, Official Report, columns 333-34, if he will set out in the terms used in paragraphs B25-B29 of annex B of the Green Paper "Paying for Local Government", Cmnd. 9714, the means of calculation of the rate support grant for the metropolitan district of Stockport in 1985-86.

Mr. Waldegrave: Paragraph B.27 of annex B to the Greeen Paper "Paying for Local Government" Cmnd. 9714 indicates that the formula in the subsequent paragraph refers to 1986-87. The additional cost for each pound of expenditure above GRE is shown as 1·1p; in 1985-86 it is 0·69p as shown in paragrah 4 of annex J to the "Rate Support Grant Report (England) 1985-86". The formula is, therefore:

For Stockport MBC using budgeted expenditure and the figures determined in the "Rate Support Grant Supplementary Report (England) (No. 2) 1985-86", this calculation is:

$$GRP = 149{\cdot}7424p + 0{\cdot}69p \frac{(£93{,}118{,}000 - £94{,}104{,}000)}{(288{,}900)} = 147{\cdot}387468p$$

As paragraph B.25 shows:

Block grant = total expenditure - (GRP × rateable value)

For Stockport this calculation is:

Block grant = £93,118,000 - (147·387468p × £38,485,390)

Block grant = £36,395,358

This figure is then subject to a small adjustment to £36,396,938 so that the total of entitlements for all authorities is equal to the total grant payable.

The answer of 10 February, Official Report, columns 333-34, referred to rate support grant, in real terms, as the hon. Member requested. Domestic rate relief grant of £4,610,328 was added to the block grant entitlement to give £41,007,266 and this was divided by the GDP deflator of 1·05 to convert the total from cash terms to real terms. The result, £39,054,539 was rounded to £39·1 million.

Vacant Land (Cheltenham)

Mr. Irving asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will estimate the acreage of vacant land in the Cheltenham district in each of the last five years.

Sir George Young: This information is not held centrally.

Rates

Mr. Dewar asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will re-calculate the relationship of gross and net community charge to net household income as set out in figure F.4, and the relationship of rates and community charge, both gross and net, to net household income in each band of equivalent net income as set out in figure F.5 in the Green Paper "Paying for Local Government", Cmnd. 9714, on the basis of existing conditions for the payment of rates.

Mr. Waldegrave: The information requested is as follows:

Community Charge

Mr. Dewar asked the Secretary of State for the Environment whether his Department has made any investigations into which countries use community charge or poll tax as a way of raising local revenue; and if he will list those that do together with any country where a poll tax has been used in this way but is no longer so used.

Mr. Waldegrave: The arrangements for financing local government in other developed countries have been taken into account in preparing the proposals in the Green Paper "Paying for Local Government" (Cmnd. 9714). They are discussed in annex K. However, the Government's proposals for reform flow from our analysis of the problems with the existing arrangements in this country.

Mr. Dewar asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if the contribution to be paid by Government Departments in terms of paragraph G.37 of the Green Paper, "Paying for Local Government", Cmnd. 9714, as a contribution in lieu of the community charge, will be based on a full payment for the average nightly population of adults staying in the Crown property concerned for the financial year in question.

Mr. Waldegrave: Annex G, paragraph G.34 of the Green Paper indicates that we shall be consulting separately on the properties which should be liable for the collective community charge and how their liability should be assessed. Paragraph G.37 also promises separate consultation on the position of Crown property under the new system.

Crown Property

Mr. Dewar asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if the proposal for community charge for the occupancy of Crown property, outlined in paragraph G.37 of the Green Paper, "Paying for Local Government", Cmnd. 9714, will apply to places occupied by the armed forces of other countries.

Mr. Waldegrave: At present properties in Britain used by our NATO allies are treated as Crown property for rating purposes. The treatment of such property under the proposed system will be dealt with as part of the separate consultation on Crown property referred to in annex G, paragraph G.34 of the Green Paper.

Local Authority Services

Mr. Franks asked the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) what information he has as to how many contracts have been awarded to private companies following competitive tendering for refuse collection services of local authorities for each of the past six years;

(2) what information he has as to the total savings which have been made from the competitive tendering for local authority refuse collection services for each of the past six years;

(3) what information he has as to those contracts for refuse collection services which reverted to the local authority or its agents following competitive tendering which had formerly been awarded to private contractors for each of the past six years;

(4) what information he has as to how many local authorities have invited competitive tenders for the refuse collection service in each of the past six years;

(5) what information he has as to those contracts for local authority architects' services which reverted to the local authority or its agents following competitive tendering which had formerly been awarded to private contractors for each of the past six years;

(6) what information he has as to how many contracts have been awarded to private companies following competitive tendering for the architects' services of local authorities for each of the past six years;

(7) what information he has on how many local authorities have invited competitive tenders for the architects' services for each of the past six years;

(8) what information he has as to the total savings which have been made from the competitive tendering for local authority architects' services for each of the past six years.

Mrs. Rumbold: The Department does not collect systematic data on these subjects, but some useful information may be found in the annual surveys of contracting out which have appeared in Local Government Chronicle issues dated 17 June 1983, 22 June 1984, and 5 July 1985; and in the newsletter "Public Service Review" published by the Public Service Research Centre.

Housing (Redevelopment)

Mr. Allan Roberts asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the number of dwellings disposed of by local authorities to private trusts or developers to date for refurbishment or redevelopment for sale (i) for England as a whole and (ii) for each local authority.

Sir George Young: We are aware of 5,891 dwellings which English local authorities have sold empty to private developers for refurbishment for sale or for private renting, since the Government took office. The list is not necessarily exhaustive, as local authorities are not required to seek the Secretary of State's consent or to inform the Department when they are disposing of empty housing at the best price. In addition, with the Secretary of State's consent, 3,007 dwellings, the great majority of them tenanted, were disposed of by Knowsley to the Stockbridge village trust, and 35 tenanted dwellings by Oldham to William Irwin and Co. Ltd. in the redevelopment of 141 houses at Pennine Meadows, Oldham. Following a vote by residents, a trust is being formed to take over about 5,500 tenanted homes at Thamesmead, after the abolition of the Greater London council.

Mr. Allan Roberts asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what was the capital receipt per dwelling obtained by the local authority under each scheme where blocks of flats or housing estates have been disposed of to private companies for refurbishment or redevelopment for sale with the aid of an urban development grant.

Sir George Young: Lists of projects approved for urban development grant are placed regularly in the Library of the House. For reasons of commercial confidentiality, it is not the practice to disclose details of costs incurred by the developers carrying out individual projects supported by UDG. Where such a project includes acquisition by the developer of land or buildings owned by a local authority, it is usual for the property to be acquired at its open market value in its existing condition. In approved UDG schemes for the refurbishment for sale of existing local authority housing, with or without an element of demolition or new build, prices have ranged from £270 per existing dwelling to £2,855, the average being £1,431.

Right-to-Repair Scheme

Mr. Allan Roberts asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what arrangements his Department has made to monitor the operation of the right-to-repair scheme introduced under the Housing and Building Control Act 1984.

Sir George Young: The right-to-repair scheme is being monitored by means of an additional section in the quarterly housing activity form completed by local authorities. The new section covers the number of applications, the number which were refused and the reasons, the number of claims made under the default procedure and the extent to which contractors have been used.

Stockbridge Village Trust

Mr. Allan Roberts asked the Secretary of State for the Environment when his Department expects to complete its current inquiries into the management and finances of the Stockbridge village trust; and when he intends to publish the findings of these inquiries.

Sir George Young: In response to a request from the Stockbridge village trust for additional public sector assistance, we have appointed the accountants, Ernst and Whinney, to undertake a financial appraisal of the trust's position and long-term prospects. We expect them to complete their work shortly and will be discussing the findings with the trust. We do not intend to publish the appraisal.

SOCIAL SERVICES

Cancer (West Cumbria)

Mr. Madel asked the Secretary of State for Social Services whether he will make a statement about the discharge of radioactive material from the Sellafield site in the 1950s and the implications for the conclusions reached by the independent advisory group chaired by Sir Douglas Black which investigated possible increased incidence of cancer in West Cumbria.

Mr. Hayhoe: New information became available when British Nuclear Fuels plc undertook last year a review of records of discharges which had taken place in the 1950s. This information was not available when the National Radiological Protection Board calculated doses of radiation received by the local population for the Independent Advisory Group (chairman: Sir Douglas Black) set up to investigate a possible increased incidence of cancer in west Cumbria. The NRPB has since revised its dose estimates in the light of this new information and its provisional findings have been passed to the Committee on the Medical Aspects of Radiation in the Environment.

COMARE was established as a result of a recommendation in Sir Douglas Black's report. One of the committee's first tasks was to follow up that report and to consider the health implications of any research results or other information which became available. The committee met for the first time on 25 November 1985. It was told about the existence of this new information and was asked to undertake an assessment of its health significance. It started on this work at its meeting on 31 January 1986. It will complete its work as soon as possible, it is hoped within the next six months. Its report will be published.

It is the role of COMARE to advise the Government on the health implications of this new information. It would not be appropriate for the Government to prejudge its findings. However, NRPB's provisional conclusions are that the new information does not suggest that there has been any increased health risk to people who lived or who are living in the area which would invalidate the conclusions reached by Sir Douglas Black's group.

Pensions

Mr. Wigley asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will publish a table showing the weekly rate of retirement pension on 1 December of each year since 1956, in actual and in real terms at current prices; and what proportion the figures represented each year of average industrial wages for adult men.

Mr. Major: The available figures are contained in table 5.1 of the "Abstract of Statistics for Index of Retail Prices, Average Earnings, Social Security Benefits and Contributions", a copy of which may be found in the Library. The dates for which comparisons are shown are those on which retirement pensions were uprated, which is the most meaningful basis for real value comparisons.

Mr. Wigley asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will estimate the annual cost if the state retirement pension for single persons were increased from the present level to £56 per week, and for married couples from the present level to £84 per week.

Mr. Major: The estimated annual additional cost of this proposal to public expenditure is £6,250 million in a full year, allowing for savings on supplementary benefit and housing benefit.

Retirement Age

Mr. Wigley asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will publish a table indicating his estimates of the additional annual cost to Government funds on areas within his responsibility if the retirement age for (a) men and (b) women were reduced in 12-month steps from their present level to a uniform retirement age of 55 years of age.

Mr. Major: No figures are available to show the estimated additional cost of reducing the retirement age to below age 60 for men, nor are any figures available to show the estimated additional cost of reducing the retirement age for women to below the present retirement age of 60. The net estimated additional annual cost to public funds of reducing the retirement age for men from age 65 to age 60 is as follows:

Estimated additional annual cost (rounded) (1983-84 benefit rates)

Reduction in retirement age to:	£ million
64	400
63	900
62	1,400
61	1,900
60	2,600

These figures also take account of the increase in tax revenue which could result from a change.

Ambulance Service

Mr. Spearing asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what delays are occuring in the north-east section of the London ambulance service in respect of outpatient journeys; and what action he plans to take to seek to prevent their recurrence.

Mr. Whitney: I regret that because of increased demands on the London ambulance service's non-emergency services, delays do sometimes occur. The South West Thames regional health authority, which manages the LAS, is considering how those services can be improved and the hon. Member may wish to make his views known to the regional chairman. Improvements in the emergency service are expected as a result of the introduction of new staff working rotas on 3 March.

Orphans

Mr. John Mark Taylor asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what is his policy towards the role of the voluntary sector in providing care for orphans; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Whitney: Local authorities have a duty to receive into care any child who has neither a parent nor guardian and it is a matter for them to decide on the most appropriate placement for the child. Placement with a voluntary agency is one of a number of valued options available to local authorities.

Hip Replacement

Mr. Beith asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what are the current average times for hip replacement operations in the northern region.

Mr. Whitney: The estimated median interval between the date a patient was placed on the waiting list and the date of admission to a National Health Service hospital for total hip replacement and other arthroplasty of hip in the Northern regional health authority in 1983, the latest year for which figures are available centrally, was 30 weeks.

Abortions

Mr. Willie W. Hamilton asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many abortions were carried out in National Health Service premises on women giving their ususal place of residence as Scotland in each year since 1968.

Mr. Hayhoe: The full information requested can be provided only at disproportionate cost.

However, the table shows available information on the number of legal abortions to residents of Scotland that were carried out in National Health Service premises in England and Wales from 1973 to 1984.

Notifications of legal abortions carried out under the 1967 Abortion Act in NHS premises in England and Wales. Area of usual residence: Scotland, 1973-1984

Under-age Girls (Contraception)

Mr. Greenway asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he is yet ready to issue guidelines to doctors on the prescription of oral contraceptives to under-age girls; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hayhoe: I refer my hon. Friend to my reply to him on 28 January, at column 496.

NHS (Expenditure)

Mr. Millan asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will give figures for National Health Service expenditure in England for each of the years 1979-80 to 1984-85 and as estimated for 1985-86, in cash, cost, and volume terms making use of the deflator factors appropriate to the National Health Service in England, showing also the figures as indices with 1979-80 as a base year.

Mr. Hayhoe: The tables provide the information which the right hon. Member requested. It is not possible to express expenditure on the National Health Service in 1985-86 in terms of National Health Service pay and prices, since the appropriate pay and price indices are not yet available.

Orthopaedic Waiting Lists

Dr. Marek asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) what is the longest time a patient now waits for an orthopaedic operation in the West Surrey and North-East Hampshire district health authority area;

(2) what is the average time patients have to wait for an orthopaedic operation in the West Surrey and North-East Hampshire district health authority area.

Mr. Whitney: I am sorry that I cannot give the hon. Member the information he seeks. This is not held centrally. The hon. Member may wish to contact the chairman of the West Surrey and North East Hampshire district health authority for this information.

Christmas Bonus

Mr. Christopher Hawkins asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will consider index-linking the £10 Christmas bonus for pensioners.

Mr. Newton: We have no present plans to do so.

Pensioners (Cost of Living)

Mr. Christopher Hawkins asked the Secretary of State for Social Services by how much the separate retail price index showing the increase in the cost of living for pensioners has risen in each year since 1979; and by how much the retirement pension has risen in each year since 1979.

Mr. Major: The information requested is in the table:

	Percentage increase

Community Charge

Mr. Christopher Hawkins asked the Secretary of State for Social Services whether (a) retirement pensions and (b) other social security benefits will be raised to cover the proposed minimum contribution to rates or the proposed community charge.

Mr. Newton: It would be inappropriate to raise retirement pensions for this reason, since around half of retirement pensioners do not now receive any help with their rates. So far as income-related benefits are concerned, my right hon. Friend has made it clear that the proposed social security structure will need to be developed in the light of discussions on the recent Green Paper on local government finance.

Single Payments

Mr. Michie asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what were the number and value of single payments of supplementary benefit in the four social security offices serving Sheffield taken together in each year since November 1980, showing separately figures for maternity expenses, funeral expenses and other single payments.

Mr. Major [pursuant to his reply, 13 February 1986, c. 528]: The following table sets out the figures that are available:

	Sheffield
	North East	North West	South East	South West	Total

This information is not available prior to April 1982, nor collected separately for maternity or funeral expenses.

Haiti

Mr. Spearing asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what are the intentions of Her Majesty's Government in respect of ratification of the agreement with the Government of Haiti signed at Port-au-Prince on 18 March 1985.

Mr. Eggar: The investment promotion and protection agreement with the Government of Haiti, signed at Port-au-Prince on 18 March 1985, was laid before Parliament on 30 January 1986 and published on 31 January 1986 as Haiti No. 1 (1986), Cmnd. 9731. We intend to ratify the agreement as soon as the necessary procedures on both sides have been completed.

PLO (January Statement)

Mr. Latham asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what report he has received from Her Majesty's ambassador in Baghdad about the public statement on the outcome of the meeting of the executive committee of the Palestine Liberation Organisation meeting on 15 January relating to increased military operations against Israel and support for Libya.

Mr. Renton: None. A translation of the statement as broadcast by the "Voice of Palestine" was published in the BBC "Summary of World Broadcasts" for 17 January.

Libya

Mr. Ron Brown asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he has made any contingency plans to protect the British community in Libya in the event of any invasion of that country; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Renton: We plan on a world-wide basis for contingencies affecting the safety of British communities abroad, taking account of particular circumstances in individual countries.

ENERGY

British Gas (Sites)

Mr. Simon Hughes asked the Secretary of State for Energy if he will list the location and respective size of each site owned or managed by the British Gas Corporation, that is either surplus to requirements or derelict land in England and Wales.

Mr. Buchanan-Smith: Information (which includes the area of each site) on unused or underused land owned by the British Gas Corporation, and by other public bodies, is held on registers in accordance with the Local Government Planning and Land Act 1980. Registers covering the whole of England are available for inspection at the Department of the Environment headquarters. Each of that Department's regional offices and each local authority holds a register of such sites which are within its boundaries. Registers covering Wales are being drawn up, but are not yet complete and I am asking the chairman of the corporation to write to the hon. Member with the relevant information.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Licensing (Occasional Provisions) Act 1983

Mr. David Atkinson asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he has received any representations on the working of the Licensing (Occasional Provisions) Act 1983.

Mr. Mellor: The only recent representations received about this legislation have been those forwarded by my hon. Friend. These are being considered.

Advisory Committee on Community Radio

Mr. Freeson asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will give details about how many minority community groups are represented on his advisory committee on community radio.

Mr. Giles Shaw: The members of the advisory panel on community radio were appointed not to represent particular groups but on the basis of their knowledge of broadcasting and community matters. The membership includes a number active in community or voluntary organisations; and two are leading members of the Community Radio Association.

Holloway Prison

Mr. Kilroy-Silk asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the present operating capacity of Holloway prison.

Mr. Mellor: 350.

Mr. Kilroy-Silk asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what plans for the development of a positive regime at Holloway prison have been drawn up by the regional director and governor in consultation with staff associations, as recommended by the Holloway special project committee;

(2) what plans there are to allow appropriate inmates at Holloway prison more freedom of movement within the prison as recommended by the report of the Holloway special project committee.

Mr. Mellor: A multi-disciplinary group of staff at Holloway, under the governor's direction, is examining ways of improving the regime and providing more freedom of movement within the prison for those inmates for whom it is appropriate, in discussion with senior management, staff and the staff associations.

Mr. Kilroy-Silk asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department at what time prisoners are usually locked up for the night at Holloway prison.

Mr. Mellor: Between 7.30 pm and 7.45 pm if staff are available for evening duties; if not, at 4.30 pm.

Mr. Kilroy-Silk asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether the mother and baby unit at Holloway prison has moved to its new accommodation.

Mr. Mellor: Not yet.

Mr. Kilroy-Silk asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether babies from the mother and baby unit at Holloway prison are taken outside the prison in order to increase their contact with the outside world.

Mr. Mellor: Not as a matter of course, but any case in which this seemed to be in the child's best interests would be sympathetically considered.

Mr. Kilroy-Silk asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many education classes took place at Holloway prison in the daytime and evening, respectively; and how many prisoners on average attended each class, in the most recent week for which statistics are available.

Mr. Mellor: During the two-week period 20 January to 3 February, 37 daytime classes were attended by 144 inmates. Fifteen evening classes were attended by 56 inmates.

Mr. Kilroy-Silk asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) if prisoners in C1 unit at Holloway prison currently have regular access to the skills training unit;

(2) whether prisoners from C1 unit at Holloway prison are allowed to take work from the skills training unit back to C1 unit.

Mr. Mellor: I would refer the hon. Member to the answer given to my hon. Friend the Member for Cheltenham (Mr. Irving) on 23 January, at columns 274-75, on the question of access. Prisoners from C1 unit are allowed to take paper, pencils and crayons from the skills training unit back to C1 unit.

Mr. Kilroy-Silk asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many hours a day on average prisoners in C1 unit at Holloway prison spent locked up in their cells in the most recent week for which statistics are available.

Mr. Mellor: My reply on 23 January to my hon. Friend the Member for Cheltenham (Mr. Irving), at column 274, sets out the most recent information.

Prisoners (Visits)

Mr. Kilroy-Silk asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what changes in the regulations concerning visits to prisoners are currently under active consideration.

Mr. Mellor: The only imminent change concerns the frequency and duration of visits to unconvicted prisoners, on which a circular instruction will be issued shortly (a copy of which will be placed in the Library).

Drunkenness (Cautions)

Mr. Soley asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what communications he has received from the Association of Chief Police Officers on the way in which cautioning schemes are developing; and what views it has expressed.

Mr. Giles Shaw: The views of the Association of Chief Police Officers were taken into account in preparing Home Office circular 14/1985, which contained guidance to chief officers on cautioning policy and practice. Copies are in the Library. The operation of cautioning schemes is a matter for individual chief officers. We are aware that police forces have in general implemented the circular or have been reviewing their cautioning policies and methods in the light of the circular but we have not received communications from the association specially about the way in which schemes are developing. We shall, however, be monitoring the effect of the circular on cautioning rates.

Gaming Machines

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what steps he is taking to prevent the use and misuse of gaming machines by juveniles in places to which the public have access.

Mr. Giles Shaw: The maximum stake and prize permitted in amusement with prizes machines are deliberately kept low, and jackpot machines, which offer bigger prizes, are not allowed in places to which the public have access. Premises with amusement with prizes machines must obtain permits under the Gaming Act 1968. We have no present plans to add to the existing controls in this area.

Prisoners (Statistics)

Mr. Wigley asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many persons currently held in (a) Cardiff and (b) Swansea prisons, respectively, are former in-patients at mental hospitals.

Mr. Mellor: The information requested is not available centrally.

Police (Duties)

Mr. McGuire asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list in the Official Report those functions and duties formerly carried out solely by the police which have been passed to other bodies since 1955, giving, in each case, details of total numbers now employed in each new service; if he has any plans to relieve the police of further duties; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Giles Shaw: The information requested is not readily available centrally and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost. The employment of additional civilians in police forces has enabled many police officers to be released from posts which do not require their powers and training for redeployment on operational duties.

News International Plant, Wapping

Mr. Nellist asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will call for a report from the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis on how many officers were deployed on the evening of 13 February at the News International plant at Wapping; at what estimated cost; how many arrests have taken place since the beginning of the print dispute; and with what offences those arrested have been charged.

Mr. Giles Shaw: Up to 17 February, 194 people had been arrested in connection with this dispute. The charges include offences of criminal damage, being in possession of an offensive weapon, unlawful wounding, assault occasioning actual bodily harm, assaulting a police officer, obstructing a police officer, threatening behaviour, obstructing the highway, and being drunk and disorderly. 289 officers were deployed on the evening of 13 February. I regret that information about the cost of the police operation that night is not readily available.

Print Workers (Police Action)

Mr. Leighton asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will call for a report from the chief constable of Hampshire as to the circumstances in which two coaches of print workers were stopped by officers of the force on the way to Eastleigh on 13 February and as to the sources of the information on which they acted in arranging this stop; and if he will make a statement on the substance of the report.

Mr. Giles Shaw: I understand from the chief constable that on 13 February his officers stopped two parties of print workers on the A33 at Compton, 4 to 5 miles from Eastleigh. They asked the travellers not to continue their journey as they feared a breach of the peace. The coach drivers and some of the passengers agreed; the remainder made their way to Eastleigh by other means. Six arrests were made at Eastleigh that day, including charges for breach of the peace and criminal damage. It is not police practice to identify sources of information in circumstances such as these.

Lorries (Grosvenor Road, SW1)

Dr. Marek asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many prosecutions there have been for overweight lorries travelling along Grosvenor road, SW1 in the last three months.

Mr. Mellor: I understand from the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis that in the three months ending 31 December 1985, there were no prosecutions solely for a lorry exceeding the weight limit specified for Grosvenor road, SW1. One offender was, however, cautioned and one case relating to an incident during that period remains to be dealt with.

Metropolitan Police

Mr. Wheeler asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what will be the total cost to public funds of the Metropolitan police in 1986-87; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hurd: As police authority for the metropolis, I have approved estimates which provide for net revenue expenditure by the Metropolitan police of £851·8 million in 1986-87. This is an increase of 10·4 per cent. on the revised cash limit of £771·184 million for 1985-86 which I announced to the House on 30 October 1985, at column 562.

Animal Experiments

Mr. Hancock asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what proportion of the category entitled animal experiments to select, develop or study the use of medicinal, dental and veterinary products and appliances contained in Cmnd. 9574 are related to cosmetic preparations for medicinal purposes; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mellor [pursuant to his reply, 5 February 1986, c. 149]: The commonly used definition of a cosmetic includes cosmetic products which have some medicinal effects, unless their action is wholly for treating or preventing disease. Precise figures are not available, but it is likely that very few tests of cosmetic preparations with medicinal effects are included in the statistics of animal experiments to select, develop or study the use, and so on, of medical, dental and veterinary products and appliances. Tests on such substances would normally be included under the heading "cosmetics and toiletries."

NATIONAL FINANCE

Capital Investment

124. Mr. Galley asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer how his Department assesses the employment potential of different types of public sector and private sector capital investment.

Mr. MacGregor: The important criterion for both public and private sector projects is that they should earn a proper rate of return. Public sector projects are assessed accordingly, taking into account wider economic and social benefits.

London Financial Markets

Mr. Cohen asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if, pursuant to the answer of 7 February to the hon. Member for Walthamstow (Mr. Deakins), Official Report, columns 277-8, (a) there has been in the past or (b) there is currently any contingent obligation in the future regarding liabilities on the taxpayer under a guarantee to rescue any member of the London gold market other than Johnson Matthey Bankers Ltd., or any member of any of the London financial markets; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ian Stewart: No such guarantee has been given since 1979.

VAT

Mr. Stuart Holland asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what has been the public sector's share of total value added tax, measured as a proportion of gross domestic product, less subsidies, since 1981.

Mr. Brooke: Estimates of the overall gross payments of value added tax by central Government, local authorities and public corporations are not available.

Civil Servants

Mr. Moate asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will publish a table showing the numbers of civil servants each year for the last 10 years and at the present time.

Mr. Brooke: The information is as follows:

1 April	Staff in Post (SIP) (Nos)
1976	747,614
1977	745,550
1978	735,656
1979	732,275
1980	704,903
1981	689,602
1982	666,362
1983	648,912

1 April	Staff in Post (SIP) (Nos)
1984	623,972
1985	599,026
1 October 1985	595,764

The SIP figures for 1 January 1986 are currently being collated.

Nationalised Industries (Surplus Land)

Mr. Simon Hughes asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what advice his Department has given to nationalised industries that own or manage sites that are surplus to requirement or derelict land; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. MacGregor [pursuant to his reply, 17 February 1986]: Nationalised industries are expected to operate commercially within the framework laid down by their statutes and the Government. As such they have an incentive to sell assets, including land, which are surplus to their requirements. Additionally, industries which have unused or underused land on the land registers held by the Department of the Environment are subject to the provisions of the Local Government, Planning and Land Act 1980.

DEFENCE

Wood Farm Camp, Malvern

Mr. Pavitt asked the Secretary of State for Defence for how long the 14 residential properties at Wood Farm camp, Malvern, have been empty; and if he will publish in the Official Report the prices being asked for their sale.

Mr. Norman Lamont: There are now 17 surplus properties at Wood Farm camp, Malvern, the last of which was vacated in November 1985. All are currently being advertised for sale to service men under the discounted sales scheme. The open market value of the properties ranges from £22,500 to £24,200.

Fleet Supply Ship

Mr. Bagier asked the Secretary of State for Defence when he expects to announce the placing of an order with British Shibuilders for a North Atlantic Treaty Organisation fleet supply ship; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Norman Lamont: The hon. Member is presumably referring to the British Shipbuilders' design fleet support king 20/20. This design has been studied by the Ministry of Defence with interest, as are any new equipment proposals put forward by industry.

The Royal Navy does not at present have a requirement for a new vessel of this type. However, should a requirement for such a vessel arise, it would be the MOD's intention to seek competitive tenders from all United Kingdom shipyards capable of its design and construction.

SCOTLAND

Scottish Development Agency and Highlands and Islands Development Board

Mr. Kennedy asked the Secretary of State for Scotland when he expects to announce the budgets for the financial year beginning April 1986 for the Scottish Development Agency and the Highlands and Islands Development Board.

Mr. Allan Stewart: The net overall provision for the 1986-87 financial year for both the Scottish Development Agency and the Highlands and Islands Development Board was published in the public expenditure White Paper (Cmnd. 9702) in January 1986 and in the "Scottish Commentary" published by the Scottish Office on 12 February 1986. I refer the hon. Member to either of these publications.

Leith Academy

Mr. Ron Brown asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what recent representations he has received about the future of Leith academy; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Allan Stewart: When I met representatives of Lothian regional council on 24 January, I offered to give consent for an additional allocation of capital expenditure to facilitate the building of a new Leith academy, provided that this formed part of a rationalisation of the provision of secondary school places in north Edinburgh. Since that meeting I have had letters from the school staff and from a parent inviting me to reconsider my position. I would not feel justified, however, in giving the consent in question unless there is a reduction in the existing surplus of secondary school places in the wider area, since to do so would be detrimental to the interests of Lothian ratepayers and the overall quality of education.

Rowntree-Mackintosh Plant, Edinburgh

Mr. Ron Brown asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what information he has as to whether any company has agreed to take over and run Rowntree-Mackintosh's Edinburgh plant; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Allan Stewart: I shall reply to the hon. Member as soon as possible.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Hospital Nursing Services

Mr. Gow asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will meet representatives of the nursing profession in Northern Ireland to discuss the management of hospital nursing services.

Mr. Needham: If my hon. Friend will let me have details of the issues which may be causing concern, I will arrange for them to be given appropriate consideration.

Health and Social Services Boards (Elderly Persons)

Mr. Gow asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what will be the additional costs to the health and social services boards in Northern Ireland of providing for each extra person (a) over the age of 65 years and (b) over the age of 75 years up to 1992.

Mr. Needham: It is not possible to estimate with any acceptable degree of accuracy the costs to the health and social services boards of providing for individuals in various age groups.

Griffiths Report

Mr. Gow asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on the introduction in Northern Ireland of the recommendations contained in the Griffiths report.

Mr. Needham: The Griffiths report did not extend to Northern Ireland but, following local consultation, the Government have accepted that its recommendations about personal accountability and maximum delegation are as applicable to Northern Ireland as to the rest of the United Kingdom. A range of management initiatives has been drawn up by the Department of Health and Social Services, the most important of which has been the appointment of a general manager for each of the four health and social services boards from 1 April 1985. In addition, a supervisory board has been appointed to advise the responsible Minister.

Health and Social Services

Mr. Gow asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what information he has as to the level of spending on health and social services in Northern Ireland as compared with that in England; and what methods are used to calculate such comparisons.

Mr. Needham: Expenditure per capita on the health and personal social services in Northern Ireland is about 25 per cent. higher than in England. The latest comparisons available, showing expenditure per capita of £422 in Northern Ireland compared with £336 in England, are drawn from expenditure data in the "Government's Expendiute Plans" (Cmnd. 9702), divided by mid-1984 population estimates.

Health Visitors

Mr. Gow asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on the grading of health visitors in Northern Ireland.

Mr. Needham: Health visitors in Northern Ireland are graded on the same basis as their colleagues in the rest of the United Kingdom.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

"Official Report"

Mr. McWilliam asked the hon. Member for Berwick-upon-Tweed, as representing the House of Commons Commission, how many (a) Reporters and (b) Trainees were currently actually in post in the Official Report at 12 February; and what are the expected future temporary and permanent losses in each category to 30 April 1986.

Mr. Beith: On 12 February there were five Reporters and 11 trainees actually in post in the Official Report. Three of the trainees have completed the two years training and are awaiting their confirmation by the Editor as full Reporters. In addition, one Reporter was substituting to Committee Sub-Editor and one was on maternity leave. Both will have left permanently by 30 April, as will two trainee Reporters. So far as can be foreseen, one of the five Reporters will substitute to Committee Sub-Editor after 3 March 1986 if the Committee Sub-Editor concerned has not returned from unpaid leave. The creation of additional posts at Committee Sub-Editor level, which would be filled by promotion from among the Reporters, is currently under discussion.

Mr. McWilliam asked the hon. Member for Berwick-upon-Tweed, as representing the House of Commons Commission if, pursuant to his answer of 11 February, Official Report, column 395, he will list the names of the 10 Hansard Reporters stated as being in post on 10 February; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Beith: The names of the 10 Hansard Reporters stated as being in post on 10 February 1986 were:

Mrs. P. Pratt*
Miss V. Widgery
S. M. Hutchinson
Miss C. Fogarty
Mrs. J. Ballard†
Miss H. J. G. Thompson
Miss M. Babington
Miss C. G. Black‡
P. Oglethorpe‡
Miss C. Hanly‡

Notes:

*Mrs. Pratt is on substitution to Committee Sub-Editor to cover a member of staff on unpaid leave.

†Mrs. Ballard is on maternity leave until 24 March 1986.

‡These Trainee Reporters have completed their two-year training period and are awaiting confirmation as Reporters.

EMPLOYMENT

Labour Statistics

14. Mr. Andrew F. Bennett asked the Paymaster General how many men between the ages of 50 and 59 years have been unemployed for more than 12 months, two years and three years, respectively.

Mr. Lang: On 9 January the numbers of unemployed men in the United Kingdom between the ages of 50 and 59 who have been unemployed for more than 12 months, two years and three years was 238,700; 172,400 and 122,600 respectively.

19. Mr. Litherland asked the Paymaster General how many people are unemployed now; and how many were unemployed in May 1979.

Mr. Lang: On 9 January 1986 the number of unemployed claimants, seasonally adjusted excluding school-leavers, in the United Kingdom was 3,204,900. The corresponding number for May 1979 was 1,184,100.

26. Mr. Alan Howarth asked the Paymaster General how many people are now recorded as being in work; and what was the comparable figure three years ago.

Mr. Lang: In September 1985 (latest date for which figures are available) there were 23,724,000 people in the employed labour force in Great Britain. In September 1982 there were 23,215,000. The employed labour force is the sum of employees in employment, the self-employed and Her Majesty's Forces.

36. Mr. Knox asked the Paymaster General how many people were out of work in the Staffordshire, Moorlands parliamentary constituency at the most recent count; and what was the comparable figure for the same month in 1973.

Mr. Lang: On 9 January 1986. The number of unemployed claimants in the Staffordshire, Moorlands constituency was 3,768. Statistics of unemployment for parliamentary constituencies are derived from the new ward-based system and are available only from June 1983.

38. Dr. McDonald asked the Paymaster General if he will state the current level of unemployment.

65. Mr. Frank Cook asked the Paymaster General what is the present number of people who are unemployed.

79. Mr. Weetch asked the Paymaster General how many people are currently unemployed; and if he will make a statement.

80. Mr. Dykes asked the Paymaster General if he will make a statement on the latest unemployment figures.

88. Mr. Andrew MacKay asked the Paymaster General if he will make a statement on the current level of unemployment.

119. Mr. Latham asked the Paymaster General whether he will make a statement on the latest level of unemployment.

Mr. Lang: On 9 January 1986 the number of unemployed claimants in the United Kingdom was 3,407,729.

44. Mr. Roy Hughes asked the Paymaster General how many men aged over 50 years have been unemployed for more than 12 months, two years and three years, respectively.

Mr. Lang: On 9 January 1986 there were 256,669 male claimants aged 50 years or over in the United Kingdom who had been unemployed for more than 12 months, 181,139 for more than two years, and 128,670 for more than three years.

53. Mr. Randall asked the Paymaster General how many people had been unemployed for more than 12 months in May 1979; and how many people have been unemployed for more than 12 months to the latest available date.

Mr. Lang: On 5 April 1979 (figures for May 1979 are not available) the number of unemployed registrants in the United Kingdom who had been unemployed for more than 12 months was 366,711. The corresponding number of unemployed claimants as at 9 January 1986 was 1,371,632. The figures for April 1979 and January 1986 are not strictly comparable because of changes in the way the figures are collected.

56. Mrs. Clwyd asked the Paymaster General how many people have been unemployed for more than 12 months, two years and three years, respectively.

Mr. Trippier: On 9 January 1986, the number of unemployed claimants in the United Kingdom who had been unemployed for more than 12 months, two years, and three years was 1,371,632, 844,106, and 555,920, respectively.

60. Mr. Norman Atkinson asked the Paymaster General if he will discontinue the practice of adding to official statistics of employees in employment equivalents made up of part-time employees, listing these later statistics separately and indicating those who work both part-time and full-time.

Mr. Lang: The Department's published employees in employment estimates separately identify part time male and female employees for census of employment dates; most recently for September 1981. For other dates only part time female employees are separately identified but regular separate estimates for part time male employees will be introduced, retrospectively to September 1984, later this year when the results of the 1984 census of employment are available.

70. Mr. Baldry asked the Paymaster General what has been the overall unemployment trend over the last 12 months.

Mr. Lang: The seasonally adjusted level of unemployment in the United Kingdom, excluding school leavers, increased by an average 7,000 per month during the 12 months to January 1986.

71. Mr. Skinner asked the Paymaster General what proportion of the work force was unemployed in May 1979; and what is the proportion unemployed at the present time.

Mr. Lang: On 9 January 1986 the seasonally adjusted unemployment rate, excluding school leavers, was 13·2 per cent. in the United Kingdom. The corresponding unemployment rate for May 1979 was 4·9 per cent.

75. Mr. Barron asked the Paymaster General what is the current number of unemployed in the Rother Valley; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lang: On 9 January 1986 the number of unemployed claimants in the Rother Valley constituency was 6,449.

89. Mr. Strang asked the Paymaster General how many men have been unemployed for more than 12 months; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lang: On 9 January 1986, the number of male claimants in the United Kingdom who had been unemployed for more than 12 months was 1,043,981.

94. Mr. Alton asked the Paymaster General if he will make a statement on the unemployment situation on Merseyside.

Mr. Lang: On 9 January 1986, the number of unemployed claimants in the Merseyside metropolitan county was 142,696, which corresponds to an unemployment rate of 21·5 per cent.

112. Mr. Hardy asked the Paymaster General how many people are currently unemployed; and what this is as a percentage of the work force.

Mr. Lang: On 9 January 1986, the number of unemployed claimants in the United Kingdom was 3,407,729, which corresponds to an unemployment rate of 14·1 per cent.

115. Mr. Stott asked the Paymaster General if he will make a statement about the current trends in unemployment.

Mr. Lang: The seasonally adjusted level of unemployment in the United Kingdom, excluding school leavers, flattened out over the second half of 1985. Given the monthly variations on the series, it is too soon to conclude that rises over the past two months signal a resuming upward trend.

Mr. Irving asked the Paymaster General if he will list in the Official Report the numbers of (a) employed persons and (b) self-employed persons in the Cheltenham area in each of the last 10 years.

Mr. Lang: The precise information requested is not available.

Information about the numbers of employees employed in local areas can be provided for only those dates when censuses of employment are taken. The available information relating to employees in employment in the jobcentre area of Cheltenham is as follows:

Employees in Employment: Cheltenham Jobcentre Area

Date	Number
June 1971	49,200
June 1972	50,500
June 1973	55,100
June 1974	60,300
June 1975	60,800
June 1976	60,200
June 1977	61,400
June 1978	62,800
September 1981	65,900

Information about the numbers self-employed in local areas is obtained from the censuses of population. The 1971 census identified 2,380 self-employed persons living in the then municipal borough of Cheltenham. The 1981 census counted 3,089 self-employed persons in the larger, current district of Cheltenham.

Sir David Price asked the Paymaster General what are the latest unemployment figures and the appropriate percentage rate for the Winchester and Eastleigh travel-to-work area; and if he will list in the Official Report any travel-to-work areas which have lower unemployment percentages.

Mr. Lang: The following information is in the Library. On 9 January 1986, the number of unemployed claimants in the Winchester and Eastleigh travel-to-work area was 4,049, which corresponds to an unemployment rate of 5·5 per cent. This is the lowest rate of unemployment in any travel-to-work area in the United Kingdom.

Careers Service

15. Mr. Alex Carlile asked the Paymaster General if he will make a statement on the resources available to the Careers Service.

Mr. Trippier: It is for education authorities to decide the level of resources for their careers services. Adequate support for their expenditure is provided from central government sources.

School Leavers

16. Mr. O'Brien asked the Paymaster General what were the numbers of school leavers who are engaged on training courses provided by (a) industry and commerce, (b) local government and (c) the YTS during 1985.

Mr. Trippier: In 1985 there were over 400,000 entrants to YTS throughout Great Britain, and most of them joined schemes run by industry, commerce and local government. Information is not held on the numbers of school leavers participating in other training courses provided by industry, commerce and local government.

Youth Wages

17. Mr. Martin asked the Paymaster General what has been the change in youth wages relative to adult wages since 1979.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: Between April 1979 and April 1985 the average earnings of boys relative to men and of girls relative to women fell by 10 per cent. and 11 per cent. respectively.

Youth Training Scheme

18. Mr. Wallace asked the Paymaster General if he will make a statement on the funding for the second year YTS.

Mr. Trippier: The Government are increasing their funding of YTS from the current £850 million to £970 million in 1986-87, rising to more than £1·25 billion in 1988-89, to allow the expansion of YTS into a two-year scheme. We are therefore making a substantial and increasing contribution to the scheme. We also expect employers generally to make a higher contribution in future, in recognition of the better trained work force that YTS will produce.

20. Mr. Meadowcroft asked the Paymaster General if he intends to increase the resources available to the Manpower Services Commission for the YTS.

Mr. Trippier: Resources will increase from the current level of some £850 million a year to £970 million in 1986-87 and to more than £1·25 billion in 1988-89.

30. Mr. Whitfield asked the Paymaster General if he will estimate the number of trainees on the YTS who could be assisted to set up their own businesses.

Mr. Trippier: I hope a significant number will be helped to do so. There are already a number of development projects introducing YTS trainees to the world of enterprise and small business. However, there is clearly scope for considerable expansion both of general business awareness training and of specific training for selected young people who wish to set up in business.

33. Mr. Allan Roberts asked the Paymaster General if he will make a statement about the support given to YTS leavers in getting jobs.

101. Mr. Tom Clarke asked the Paymaster General if he will make a statement about the support given to YTS leavers in getting jobs.

107. Mrs. Dunwoody asked the Paymaster General if he will make a statement about the support given to YTS leavers in getting jobs.

Mr. Trippier: The Manpower Services Commission aims to ensure that the training available through YTS enables young people to acquire skills that are relevant to the labour market. This is the most effective means of ensuring that young people leaving YTS are well placed to move into jobs. The Commission also requires that those running schemes provide guidance for trainees in making the transition to work. Including how to find and apply for job vacancies and coaching in job interview skills. In addition, guidance and help is available from careers offices and jobcentres.

40. Mr. Pike asked the Paymaster General what is his estimate of the cost of the first full year of operation of the two-year YTS expressed in constant 1983 prices.

Mr. Trippier: We expect that two-year YTS will build up over the next two to three years, and the spending we have allocated will build up accordingly. By 1988-89 it will amount to over £1 billion at constant 1983-84 prices.

46. Mrs. Currie asked the Paymaster General if he will make a statement on the recently launched two-year YTS.

100. Mr. Haselhurst asked the Paymaster General if he will make a statement about the implementation of a two-year YTS.

Mr. Trippier: From 1 April 1986 YTS will offer two years of vocational and work-based training for 16-year-old school leavers and one year for 17-year-olds. All entrants will have the opportunity of obtaining recognised vocational qualifications. The new expanded YTS will be a permanent part of the training scene in this country. It will be a partnership between Government, industry and trainers with the aim of producing the better qualified young workforce that industry needs.

48. Mr. Welsh asked the Paymaster General if he has any plans to change the voluntary character of YTS.

Mr. Trippier: No.

63. Mr. Foulkes asked the Paymaster General if he will make a statement about premium places on the two-year YTS.

68. Mr. Parry asked the Paymaster General if he will make a statement about premium places on the two-year YTS.

77. Mr. Ron Brown asked the Paymaster General if he will make a statement about premium places on the two-year YTS.

Mr. Trippier: Premium places have been introduced in recognition of the extra costs faced by providers of training programmes for young people with special training needs and to ensure provision in areas where sufficient employer-based places may not be available. Around 51,000 premium places will be available for entrants to YTS in 1986-87. I am confident that this level of provision will ensure that high quality places will be available to meet the needs of all eligible young people.

66. Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the Paymaster General how many people have completed the YTS in Leicester and the east midlands to date; and, of those, what percentage of young people found work following the successful completion of these schemes in Leicester and the east midlands; and how many young people are still in training.

Mr. Trippier: The Manpower Services Commission conducts a regular follow-up survey of young people some three months after they leave YTS. The latest survey results, which cover young people who left YTS between 1 April and 30 August 1985, are given below:

	Leicester Local Authority District	East Midlands
Number of YTS 'completers'	968	11,466
Percentage who found work	81	72

The latest figures available show that, at the end of December 1985, there were 2,417 young people in training in Leicester local authority district and 22,830 in the east midlands.

69. Mr. Wainwright asked the Paymaster General how many persons currently training in the YTS are now expected to continue for a second year; and what proportion of current trainees this represents.

Mr. Trippier: At the end of December 1985, the latest date for which statistics are available, there were 293,268 young people in training on YTS; not all these would, however, be eligible for a second year since this would be available only to trainees who complete their first year of training during 1986-87.

It is expected that around 100,000 trainees will be offered a second year of training in 1986-87. This represents 34 per cent. of current trainees.

74. Mr. Sheerman asked the Paymaster General when he will next meet the chairman of the Manpower Services Commission to discuss the two-year YTS.

91. Mr. Rogers asked the Paymaster General when he will next meet the chairman of the Manpower Services Commission to discuss the two-year YTS.

113. Mr. Terry Lewis asked the Paymaster General when he will next meet the chairman of the Manpower Services Commission to discuss the two-year YTS.

Mr. Trippier: I frequently discuss the progress and development of YTS with the chairman of the Manpower Services Commission.

76. Mr. Lawler asked the Paymaster General how many 1985 school leavers are still waiting for a place on YTS.

Mr. Trippier: I regret the information is not available in the precise form requested. However I refer my hon. Friend to my reply to my hon. Friend, the Member for Dumfries (Sir H. Monro) on 15 January, at column 567.

86. Mr. Simon Hughes asked the Paymaster General if he has any plans to increase the sum paid to second year members of the YTS.

Mr. Trippier: No. The minimum allowance of £35 per week for second year trainees has only just been set, and applies from 1 April 1986.

98. Mr. Michie asked the Paymaster General what proportion of YTS leavers enter paid jobs within three months (a) in the north of England and (b) in the south of England.

Mr. Trippier: The 100 per cent. follow-up of YTS leavers during the period 1 April to 30 August 1985 shows the percentage of leavers who entered paid jobs within three months in the English regions as follows:

Manpower Services Commission

Region	Per cent. entering paid jobs
Northern	46·8
North West	56·8
Yorkshire and Humberside	57·7
Midlands	61·2
South West	68·8
South East	73·6
London	66·7

The April to August period may not be representative of the results for a full year.

110. Mr. Patchett asked the Paymaster General what representations he has received on the voluntary character of the YTS.

Mr. Trippier: I have not recently received any representations on this subject. Participation in YTS is voluntary and we have no plans to change this.

111. Mr. Allen Adams asked the Paymaster General what progress has been made in promoting the YTS.

116. Mr. Leadbitter asked the Paymaster General what progress has been made in promoting the YTS.

Mr. Trippier: On 27 January my right hon. and noble Friend together with the chairman of the Manpower Services Commission. The Director General of the CBI and the General Secretary of the TUC launched an advertising campaign to promote the new two-year YTS. The campaign will be supplemented with other promotional material including videos and booklets.

Graduates

21. Mr. Rost asked the Paymaster General whether he will make a statement on the employment prospects for graduates.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: For the fourth year in succession the Association of Graduate Careers Advisory Services and the Standing Conference of Employers of Graduates report an increase in the number of vacancies available for people graduating later this year. More employers are seeking to recruit graduates, many of them smaller and medium-sized companies. Job prospects for graduates entering the labour market in 1986 are therefore good, especially if they are prepared to be flexible and mobile.

Inner City Areas

22. Mr. Soley asked the Paymaster General if he has any new plans to seek to reduce long term male unemployment in inner city areas; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lang: The community programme, which provides employment for the long term unemployed, continues to expand towards its target of 230,000 places by June. My right hon. and learned Friend made a statement on 6 February about new help the Government are directing to inner city areas.

31. Mr. Heddle asked the Paymaster General what new initiatives will be undertaken in the drive to fight unemployment in the inner cities.

Mr. Lang: I refer my hon. Friend to the statement my right hon. and learned Friend made on 6 February about new help for inner city areas.

Unemployed Persons (New Homes)

23. Mr. Holt asked the Paymaster General, under the Manpower Services Commission's employment transfer scheme, how many unemployed people have been given financial assistance towards the whole or part of a deposit on a new home.

Mr. Lang: The employment transfer scheme pays a transfer grant, which is intended to help with the incidental expenses of moving to a new area and may be used, among other things, as a contribution to the deposit on a house. Since 7 May 1985, 1,380 people have received such a transfer grant but it is not known what percentage have used the grant for the deposit for the purchase of a house. In addition, direct assistance is given with the legal costs of buying a house in appropriate cases.

West Yorkshire

24. Mr. Fatchett asked the Paymaster General what are the current levels of unemployment in west Yorkshire in absolute terms, and as a percentage of the total work force.

Mr. Lang: On 9 January 1986, the number of unemployed claimants in the West Yorkshire metropolitan county was 127,593; which corresponds to an unemployment rate of 14·5 per cent.

London

25. Mr. Evennett asked the Paymaster General what additional measures he intends to take to reduce unemployment in London.

Mr. Lang: As my right hon. and learned Friend announced on 12 November, London will benefit from the extension of the enterprise allowance scheme, which is currently helping over 5,000 people in London to set up in business, and Ealing is one of the pilot areas for the job start scheme—our new initiative to help the long-term unemployed back into work. London has been allocated nearly £54 million of urban programme aid in 1986-87, and the London city action team co-ordinates and targets Government efforts in the London inner city partnership area. In addition, my right hon. and learned Friend announced on 6 February that we are establishing small task forces in Notting Hill and North Peckham as a further step to improve the targeting and enhance the benefits of Government aid to local people.

We will continue to provide practical help to the unemployed through our employment and training measures such as the community programme, which is currently benefiting over 12,000 long-term unemployed people in London, and the YTS which is to be extended to two years from 1 April. However, the main impact on unemployment must come from employers and those who decide to work for themselves. It is their drive towards competitiveness, profitability and keeping costs down that will provide new jobs in London and elsewhere.

Special Measures

27. Mr. Rowe asked the Paymaster General when he expects to reply to the report of the Employment Committee on special employment measures and the long-term unemployed; and if he will make a statement.

78. Mr. Willie W. Hamilton asked the Paymaster General if he will make a statement on his policy towards employment creation in the light of the recommendations contained in the recent report of the Employment Committee.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: I refer my hon. Friend and the hon. Member to my reply to the hon. Member for Jarrow (Mr. Dixon) earlier today.

Pilot Schemes

28. Mr. Favell asked the Paymaster General what pilot schemes to asist the long-term unemployed are now being conducted.

Mr. Lang: At present in addition to existing services the Manpower Services Commission is conducting the following initiatives to help long-term unemployed people.

—contacting some longer term unemployed people to provide the range of services available to them from Jobcentres.
—operating over 30 job clubs.
—in nine pilot areas providing a programme of counselling interviews and the job start scheme.

Details of these schemes were given in my predecessor's reply to my hon. Friend on 21 January at column 124.

Basildon

29. Mr. Amess asked the Paymaster General how many YTS places have been taken up by youngsters in Basildon over the last three years; and how many places have been allocated for the two-year scheme.

Mr. Trippier: There have been 3,176 entrants to YTS in the Basildon local authority district in the period between the inception of YTS in April 1983 and the end of December 1985. This figure includes some young people who have entered YTS more than once.

No allocation of places at local authority district level has yet been made for two year YTS.

European Community Ministers

32. Mr. Evans asked the Paymaster General when he last met his EEC counterparts; and what they discussed.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: I held useful discussions with my colleagues from the Community both yesterday and earlier today at the informal meeting of Employment Ministers in the Hague. We discussed the employment situation in the Community and also the position of women in the labour market.

Wages Councils

34. Mr. Bob Edwards asked the Paymaster General what is the Government's estimate of the number of new jobs likely to be created by removing young people from the protection of wages councils; and on what evidence it is based.

50. Mr. Flannery asked the Paymaster General how many full-time jobs he expects to be created for people under the age of 21 years as a result of the reform of the wages councils.

83. Mr. Terry Fields asked the Paymaster General how many full-time jobs for men he expects to be created as a result of the reform of the wages councils.

103. Mr. George asked the Paymaster General how many full-time jobs he expects to be created as a result of the reform of wages councils.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: There is clear evidence in studies both in the United Kingdom and internationally of the link between pay and jobs. In my opinion it is not possible, however, to quantify precisely the number of new jobs that will arise from the reforms to wages councils. There are a large number of academic studies which have suggested various figures for the increased employment that would be generated by reform or abolition.

54. Mr. Bell asked the Paymaster General what proportion of young workers find their first job in wages council industries.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: The only available figures are those from the new entrants to employment survey which related to the employment destinations of those leaving school at age 16 in 1983. Of those entering employment that year outside YTS some 30 per cent. found their first job in wages council industries.

Small Firms

35. Mr. Sackville asked the Paymaster General what training he intends to introduce to encourage the development of small firms.

Mr. Trippier: The Manpower Services Commission's adult training programmes currently include a range of measures which encourage the development of small firms. The Commission has been asked to refocus these programmes to give greater emphasis to small firms and enterprise because of the special need to stimulate these activities. In 1985-86 the training for enterprise programme, which is the principal small firms programme, cost £13·6 million and in 1986-87 expenditure on it will rise to £18·3 million. This additional expenditure is part of an overall switch of £20 million towards small firms, within the total adult training programme budget of £259 million, as a result of refocusing in 1986-87. The Manpower Services Commission will review this autumn the scope for further action.

I am anxious to see development in training systems, such as open learning and computer based training packages, since they may open up more accessible training for small business men than conventional training courses. I have also asked MSC to develop proposals to encourage more enterprise allowance scheme recipients to take advantage of training opportunities.

117. Mrs. Virginia Bottomley asked the Paymaster General what progress has been made in reducing bureaucratic burdens on small firms.

Mr. Trippier: The Government have made considerable progress in following up the proposals in the White Paper "Lifting the Burden" to reduce the administrative requirements on business and particularly small firms. We intend to produce a second White Paper reporting progress and making further proposals on deregulation later this year.

Conference Industry

37. Mr. Gregory asked the Paymaster General what financial assistance has been given by the Government to the United Kingdom conference industry for each year since 1979; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Trippier: The Government recognise that the conference sector is an important element of the tourism market and assist the sector through the funds made available to the British tourist authority and the national tourist boards for England, Scotland and Wales.

Since 1979 to date the English tourist board has given the following assistance to conference centre developments under section 4 of the Development of Tourism Act 1969.

Year	Number of centres	Amount £
1979-80	2	365,000
1980-81	—	—
1981-82	1	33,400
1982-83	2	225,000
1983-84	3	100,750
1984-85	5	236,750
1985-86	1	19,500
Total	14	980,400

The figures for the Welsh tourist board (which is the responsibility of the Secretary of State for Wales) are as follows:

Year	Number of centres	Amount £
1979-80	—	—
1980-81	1	150,000
1981-82	—	—
1982-83	1	100,000
1983-84	—	—
1984-85	1	69,186
1985-86	—	—
Total	3	319,186

Comparable figures are not available from the Scottish and Northern Ireland tourist boards which are the responsibility respectively of the Secretary of State for Scotland and the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland.

In addition all five statutory tourist boards promote the conference industry through their general marketing activities but the amount of this assistance is not separately quantifiable in all cases.

Conference centre facilities can be assisted under certain other schemes operated by the Department of the Environment and the territorial departments where they satisfy the necessary criteria.

Tied Accommodation

39. Mr. Stephen Ross asked the Paymaster General if he will make a statement on his policy towards security of accommodation tied to a job.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: The provision of accommodation tied to a job outside agriculture is, like most other terms and conditions of employment, generally a matter for agreement between employers and employees, either individually or collectively, without Government intervention.

Tourism

41. Mr. Bevan asked the Paymaster General if the review of section 4 grants for tourism has been completed; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Trippier: I refer my hon. Friend to my reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Bournemouth, East (Mr. Atkinson) on 21 January at column 126.

Long-term Unemployment

42. Mr. Boyes asked the Paymaster General if he has any new plans to reduce long-term unemployment.

85. Mr. Ashton asked the Paymaster General if he has any new initiatives aimed at reducing long-term unemployment; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lang: I refer the hon. Member to my predecessor's reply to the hon. Member for Colne Valley (Mr. Wainwright) on 21 January at column 123, and to my right hon. and learned Friend's reply to the hon. Member for Jarrow (Mr. Dixon) earlier today.

Corporate Pensioners

43. Mr. Stern asked the Paymaster General if he has any plans to seek to amend employment law to provide for representatives of corporate pensioners to have negotiating rights with their former employers; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: No. This is a matter for the parties concerned.

Textile and Clothing Industries

45. Mr. Madden asked the Paymaster General how many people are now employed in the United Kingdom textile and clothing industries.

Mr. Lang: In September 1985 (the latest date for which figures are available) there were 464,000 people employed in the textiles (including man-made fibres) and clothing industries in Great Britain.

Figures for the United Kingdom are not available.

72. Mr. Straw asked the Paymaster General how many people now registered as unemployed were last employed in the textile and clothing industries.

Mr. Lang: Information on the previous occupations of the unemployed has not been available from the monthly count since October 1982. The results of the 1984 labour force survey indicate that in Great Britain in the second quarter of 1984 there were 69,000 people without a job and looking for work who had last been employed in the textile, footwear and clothing industries in the past three years.

Community Programme

47. Mr. Beith asked the Paymaster General whether he has any plans to allow unemployed persons not in receipt of benefit to take up places on community programme schemes.

Mr. Lang: We have no present plans to change the criteria for entry to the community programme which give priority to those long-term unemployed people who are directly or indirectly in receipt of state benefits. Exceptions are allowed for managers, supervisors and other key workers with skills essential for the successful operation of a project and for whom no suitably qualified replacement is available for the priority group.

52. Mr. Geraint Howells asked the Paymaster General if he will make a statement on the funding available for the community programme.

Mr. Lang: The Government are providing significant resources for the community programme amounting to some £700 million in 1985-86 and £1 billion in 1986-87. This should enable 300,000 people to benefit from the programme in a full year.

Enterprise Allowance Scheme

49. Mr. Woodcock asked the Paymaster General how many businesses have been set up under the enterprise allowance scheme so far.

Mr. Trippier: Up to 31 December 1985, the latest date for which figures are available, 120,937 people have joined the enterprise allowance scheme. The number of individual businesses is lower than this because some of the businesses are partnerships, co-operatives or limited companies involving more than one enterprise allowance recipient.

Mr. Hirst asked the Paymaster General how many places have been created under the enterprise allowance scheme; at what cost to his Department; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Trippier: At 31 December 1985, the latest date for which figures are available, 120,937 people had joined the enterprise allowance scheme; expenditure up to that date was £180·271 million. There will be 80,000 places available on the scheme in 1986-87.

62. Mr. Fallon asked the Paymaster General how many people have benefited from the enterprise allowance scheme in the northern region.

Mr. Trippier: The total number of entrants to the enterprise allowance scheme in the Northern Region between 1 August 1983, when the scheme was launched nationally, and 31 December 1985, the latest available date for which figures are available, is 6,543.

106. Mr. Trotter asked the Paymaster General if he will make more training available to enterprise allowance scheme applicants.

Mr. Trippier: Both private and public sector training, including the full range of provision under the Manpower Services Commission's training of enterprise programme, is available to applicants. The Manpower Services Commission was asked to take particular account of enterprise allowance scheme participants in refocusing its adult training more sharply on the needs of small firms and on promoting enterprise and self-employment. We are currently looking at ways of encouraging more participants on the scheme to take up the training opportunities available.

Small Businesses

51. Mr. Kenneth Carlisle asked the Paymaster General what has been the net change in the number of small businesses over each of the last three years.

Mr. Trippier: The estimated net increases in the number of businesses registered for VAT in 1982, 1983 and 1984 are 20,259, 34,936 and 36,420 respectively. As more information becomes available, an estimate for 1985 will be prepared and the estimates for previous years revised.

Manufacturing Industries

55. Mr. James Hamilton asked the Paymaster General when he will next meet the Confederation of British Industry to discuss employment prospects in the manufacturing industries.

Mr. Trippier: My right hon. and noble Friend and I meet the Confederation of British Industry frequently to discuss a wide range of issues. In the improved economic climate our policies are creating, output, investment and exports in the manufacturing industry are rising, while the decline in manufacturing employment which we have experienced in common with all Western industrialised nations has eased considerably since 1983.

95. Mr. Madel asked the Paymaster General what is the current level of average wage increases in the manufacturing industry.

Mr. Lang: The percentage increase in the index of average manufacturing earnings for the year to November 1985 is shown in table 5·1 of labour market data in Employment Gazette for January 1986, a copy of which is in the Library.

Sunderland

58. Mr. Clay asked the Paymaster General what steps the Government plan to take to alleviate the unemployment situation in Sunderland.

Mr. Lang: The creation of jobs in Sunderland will depend primarily on the attractiveness of the area to potential investors and the competitiveness of local industry. There is already an extensive range of Government assistance to attract new investments and new jobs to the area. In addition the area benefits from our wide range of employment and training measures, and new initiatives to help the long-term unemployed and job creation in the small firms and tourism sectors.

West Midlands

59. Mr. Roger King asked the Paymaster General how many people are currently unemployed in the west midlands; and how this compares with 12 months ago.

Mr. Lang: On 9 January 1986 the number of unemployed claimants in the west midlands region was 356,316. The corresponding figure for January 1985 was 357,111.

Hotel Accommodation

61. Mr. Alexander asked the Paymaster General if the latest review of hotel accommodation has been completed; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Trippier: The English tourist board and British tourist authority (who commissioned the current review of London hotel accommodation jointly with other sponsors) have now received the final report and are considering its findings. I hope to receive a copy of the report from the boards as soon as their consideration is complete.

Training Courses

64. Mr. Tom Cox asked the Paymaster General if he has any plans to increase the present payment of £125 to employers who wish to send work people on training courses; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Trippier: There are no plans to increase the £25 per person per day (up to a maximum of £1,000 per person) payable under the local training grants to employers scheme.

The discretionary grant is not intended to meet the full costs of training but to provide a worthwhile contribution to those employers awarded grants. Early evaluation of the scheme by the Manpower Services Commission shows that it effectively meets this aim. The scheme has proved very popular with employers. In 1985-86, over 2,900 firms have started their approved training programmes, which will help around 30,000 employees considerably more than was anticipated.

Local Enterprise Agencies

67. Mr. Bellingham asked the Paymaster General how many applications have been made by local enterprise agencies for funding from his Department.

Mr. Trippier: No applications have been received from local enterprise agencies for funding under the new local enterprise agency grant scheme which comes into operation on 1 April 1986. However, 78 local enterprise agencies have been, or are currently being given, modest financial support under the existing pump-priming scheme run by my Department; this scheme introduced in February 1983 will cease on the introduction of the new grant scheme.

Knitwear Industry

73. Sir John Farr asked the Paymaster General what is the change of numbers of persons employed in the knitwear industry over the past five years.

Mr. Lang: Between September 1980 and September 1985 (the latest date for which quarterly figures are available) the number of employees in employment in the hosiery and other knitted goods industry in Great Britain decreased by 14,300.

Wage Levels

81. Mr. Stan Thorne asked the Paymaster General what change has taken place in the level of wages of the lowest paid 20 per cent. of workers since 1979; and how this compares with the inflation rate over the same period.

Mr. Lang: Between April 1979 and April 1985, results from the New Earnings Survey indicate the level of earnings below which the gross weekly earnings of 20 per cent. of full-time male adult employees pay, increased by 79 per cent. For full-time female adult employees the increase was 86 per cent. Over the same period the retail prices index increased by 75 per cent.

114. Miss Boothroyd asked the Paymaster General what is the lowest and highest average wage provided for young workers under current wages council orders.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: For workers other than adults, the highest and lowest average minimum hourly rates currently laid down by wages councils are £1·61·5 by the laundry wages council and £1·00 by the hairdressing wages council, respectively. In each case, the figure given is the average of all the rates applicable to non-adult workers.

96. Mr. Lofthouse asked the Paymaster General if he expects wage rates for adults to increase or decrease as a result of the reform of the wages councils.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: The eventual effect of the reform on pay levels will depend on a variety of factors including the way in which employers and workers settle pay matters no longer governed by wages orders, and the level of the minima set by the councils in the light of their new responsibilities. The reforms will introduce much greater flexibility in pay setting and more variation in pay structures between different businesses but it is not possible to make firm forecasts of the overall effect.

Job Opportunities

82. Mr. Kirkwood asked the Paymaster General what percentage of the Government's estimate of newly created job opportunities is based on statistical projections; and how accurate such projections have been since 1979.

Mr. Lang: The latest available estimates of the size of the employed labour force (which includes employees in employment, the self employed and armed forces) are for September 1985. Estimates for dates after mid-1984 include assumptions that

(a) Self employment is increasing at the rate observed between 1981 and 1984, and

(b) The undercounting in employees in employment estimates derived using sample survey data from employers is continuing to accumulate at the rate which Labour Force Survey data suggest occurred between 1983 and 1984.

These assumptions amount to 384,000 between June 1984 and September 1985; this is equivalent to 54 per cent. of the estimated increase of 709,000 (seasonally adjusted) in the employed labour force since the increasing employment trend began in March 1983.

The additions arising from these two assumptions are reassessed as each new year's labour force survey data become available. The revision which will be made later this year will take into account not only information from the 1985 labour force survey but also the results of the 1984 census of employment which will provide final employees in employment figures for September 1984 and hence for the period 1981 to 1984. Pending the availability of these further data a preliminary assessment of the accuracy of the assumptions can be made from the nature of the revisions that have been made as additional labour force survey data have become available. For example, the additions initially incorporated in the employed labour force estimates for 1981 to 1983, on the basis of the 1978 and 1981 census of employment results and the 1979 and 1981 labour force survey data, amounted to 65,000 a quarter; the equivalent current estimate for this period, using in addition the 1983 labour force survey data but pending the 1984 census results, is 46,800 a quarter. The same addition of 65,000 a quarter was initially used for the early part of 1983-84 but was revised for this period to 76,100 using the first results of the 1983 labour force survey and then, using the 1984, and revised 1983, labour force survey data, to 113,800. This figure consists of the quarterly growth of 68,300 in self employment as measured by the labour force survey, and an undercounting adjustment of 45,500 a quarter to the employees in employment estimates which is subject to revision when the 1984 census of employment results are available.

For periods since mid-1984 the current assumptions are that self employment is increasing by 31,300 a quarter (the average rate observed between 1981 and 1984) and that the undercounting in the employee estimates from sample survey data from employers is accumulting at 45,500 a quarter.

Sterling Metals Ltd.

84. Mr. Neillist asked the Paymaster General what unemployment consequences have been notified to his Department arising from the announced closure of Sterling Metals Ltd., Nuneaton; and what action his Department intends to take to seek to alleviate the situation.

Mr. Lang: None. In the event of job losses at Sterling Metals Ltd. at Nuneaton, all the facilities of the Manpower Services Commission will be made available to help those workers made redundant find alternative employment or train for new jobs.

Disabled School Leavers

87. Mr. Ashley asked the Paymaster General what action he is taking to seek to reduce the unemployment of disabled school leavers.

Mr. Lang: Disabled school leavers have access to specialist careers officers within the local education authority careers service to help them find suitable training and employment. The careers services liaises closely with the specialist disablement resettlement officers based in local jobcentres, who can advise on the range of Government schemes run by the Manpower Services Commission to help disabled people overcome particular difficulties they may face in finding and keeping employment.

Two year YTS affords premium places for trainees with special needs and to provide opportunities in areas where insufficient training places are available. YTS will also provide an additional grant to fund places for the severely disabled; money to finance special assistance and adaptations; initial assessment courses and there are special eligibility concessions for the disabled and disadvantaged.

Lost Working Days

90. Mr. Chapman asked the Paymaster General how many working days have been lost in industrial disputes over the last 12 months for which figures are available.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: The number of working days lost through stoppages of work due to industrial disputes during 1985, the latest 12 months available, is provisionally estimated as 6·3 million.

Tin Mining Industry

92. Mr. Penhaligon asked the Paymaster General if he has made any study of the implications for employment in Cornwall of the present position of the tin mining industry.

Mr. Lang: The Department has not recently undertaken any special study of employment in Cornwall. In 1979 a study of employment in west Cornwall revealed the historic decline of employment in the tin industry there, and noted that the level of employment would always be vulnerable to market price fluctuations. The current crisis is clearly a matter of concern, but it is not possible to assess the commercial prospects of the mining companies at present, nor therefore the medium and longer-term employment prospects in the tin industry.

Careers Offices

93. Mr. Ron Davies asked the Paymaster General how many full-time vacancies were available at careers offices in England and Wales at the latest available dates.

Mr. Trippier: On 8 November 1985. The latest date for which separate figures for full-time vacancies are available. There were 10,098 full-time vacancies at careers offices in England and Wales.

Tourism (Grants)

97. Mr. David Atkinson asked the Paymaster General when he hopes to complete his review of the section 4 grants for tourism.

Mr. Trippier: I refer my hon. Friend to my reply on 21 January at column 126.

Small Firms Loan Guarantee Scheme

99. Mr. Hancock asked the Paymaster General what has been the estimated number of jobs created to date by the small firms loan guarantee scheme; and whether he plans to extend the length of the scheme.

Mr. Trippier: Information from sample surveys suggests that loan guarantees authorised up to 31 May 1984 assisted the creation of about 44,500 jobs. The procedure for calculating the numbers of jobs created is currently under review as part of the current consideration of the future of the scheme. No decision has yet been reached on a further extension of the scheme.

"Lifting the Burden"

Mr. Carttiss asked the Paymaster General if he will make a statement on progress in implementation of the proposals contained in the White Paper, "Lifting the Burden."

Mr. Trippier: Good progress has been made in following up the proposals contained in the White Paper "Lifting the Burden". Steps taken so far to reduce he burdens on business include the extension to two years of the qualifying period for access to an industrial tribunal in unfair dismissal cases; the introduction of new simplified building regulations; the publication of proposals for a review of the Use Classes Order; and proposals for amending legislation on wages councils and women's hours of work.

My right hon. and noble Friend has announced the Government's intention to publish a second White Paper on deregulation in the first half of this year.

Adult Training

104. Mr. Livsey asked the Paymaster General if he will make a statement on progress in developing adult training strategies.

Mr. Trippier: Under the adult training strategy, which we announced in January 1984, a wide range of measures have been introduced to improve the operation of the training market. In the key area of developing greater co-ordination and responsiveness at local level over 200 local collaborative projects have been launched, involving some 1,800 employers and training providers working in partnership.

Direct funding of adult training through the Manpower Services Commission has been concentrated on two new programmes — the job training programme, providing skills which are in known demand, and the wider opportunities training programme, helping unemployed people to sharpen their skills. Particular emphasis will now be given to the needs of small firms, to promoting enterprise and to exploiting the advantages of open learning.

The adult training campaign, which raises awareness about the benefits of training and the means for taking action on training, will be concentrating on small firms and their support agencies between April and September 1986.

Jobcentre, Newcastle upon Tyne

105. Mr. Nicholas Brown asked the Paymaster General if he will make a statement in respect of the provision of a jobcentre in the Shields road area, Byker, Newcastle upon Tyne.

Mr. Lang: The Shields road jobcentre Portakabin premises have been abandoned following substantial damage by fire. The staff are sharing premises with colleagues at Wallsend jobcentre until alternative premises can be found for them in Byker. Negotiations to obtain new premises are proceeding.

Students (Temporary Work)

108. Mr. Freud asked the Paymaster General what representations he has received concerning the availability of temporary work for students; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lang: I have not received any recent representations on this subject.

Unemployment Information Campaign

109. Mr. Prescott asked the Paymaster General if his Department proposes to engage an advertising agency concerned with an unemployment information campaign; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: My Department is considering a publicity campaign with the aim of encouraging take up of the various schemes and services concerned with employment, training and enterprise. Many of these could give considerable help to unemployed people. We are concerned that many people and employers are either unaware of the range of options open to them in the labour market or are uncertain how and where to seek advice.

Following a competition for advertising proposals, Davidson Pearce plc was selected to work on the new campaign. Davidson Pearce plc already has a number of advertising accounts with my Department.

Unemployment Benefit Offices and Jobcentres

118. Mr. Robert B. Jones asked the Paymaster General whether he is satisfied with the arrangements for co-ordination between unemployment benefit offices and jobcentres.

Mr. Lang: We are exploring ways of increasing co-operation between benefit offices and jobcentres, to ensure that unemployed people are helped to take advantage of job vacancies and other services. To strengthen links, a number of projects are under way to provide a range of information and advice in benefit offices. In addition, the two sets of offices are co-operating closely on pilot schemes to provide in depth interviews at jobcentres for people who have been unemployed for more than a year.

Tourism (Promotional Policy)

120. Mr. Gale asked the Paymaster General what promotional policy has been agreed as a result of meetings he has had with the British Tourist Authority and the English Tourist Board.

Mr. Trippier: The Boards have submitted proposals for increased expenditure in 1986-87 taking account of the Government's wish that additional emphasis should be placed on promoting areas of the country which could attract more tourists and where unemployment is high. These proposals are still under consideration. An announcement about the boards' new programmes will be made in due course.

Business Start-ups

Mr. Irving asked the Paymaster General what has been the number of new business start-ups in the Cheltenham area in each of the last six years; how much public money has been used to assist in addition; and how many of these businesses have failed.

Mr. Trippier: Detailed information of this nature is not kept for the Cheltenham travel-to-work area.

Eastleigh Railway Workshops

Sir David Price asked the Paymaster General what will be the consequential increase in unemployment arising from the announced policy decision of British Rail Engineering Limited to remove all heavy repair work from the Eastleigh railway workshops; and what steps he proposes taking to counter that increase.

Mr. Lang: I understand that the British Railways Board has announced a restructuring of British Rail Engineering Limited into two distinct business groups from April 1986, with the Eastleigh works forming part of the British Rail maintenance group. The board has announced only the principles underlying its decision and will be working out the detailed implications for work load and employment over the next few months. All the facilities of the Manpower Services Commission will be made available to help any worker made redundant find alternative employment or train for a new job.

Wages Scheme

Mr. Greenway asked the Paymaster General if he will make a statement on the progress of the experimental scheme to top up by £20 per week wages paid to employees who have been out of work for a year or more.

Mr. Lang: The pilot job start scheme has been running since 6 January in nine areas of the country. It is thus still too early to make a detailed assessment of how the scheme is working, although we are monitoring it closely, to decide whether to extend it more widely. At 14 February, 53 applications for the allowance had been accepted.

Apprenticeships

Mr. Ashley asked the Paymaster General if he will give figures for (a) Stoke on Trent, (b) the west midlands and (c) the United Kingdom showing the percentage change between 1979 and the most recent year for which figures are available for the number of young people starting apprenticeships.

Mr. Trippier: Information is not available in the form requested. The number of 16-year-old school leavers starting apprenticeships in England and Wales, including long term trainees on YTS, fell by 32 per cent. between 1979 and 1983. Comparable figures are not available for Stoke-on-Trent or for the west midlands.

The numbers entering traditional apprenticeships are becoming increasingly irrelevant as a measure of the real level of skills training being undertaken as industry's skill needs change. For many industries, including the expanding new technology sector, apprenticeship is not the usual means of achieving full skills status. YTS already enables a substantial amount of initial skills training to be carried out, and the expanded two-year scheme will provide increased opportunity for flexible skills training relevant to employers' needs.

TRANSPORT

Railway Grants (Faversham)

Mr. Moate asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will publish a list of grants made to industry in the Faversham constituency for the improvement of rail freight facilities since 1979.

Mr. David Mitchell: The information requested is as follows:

Company	Date of grant offer	Amount of grant £
Shipbreaking Ltd. Queenborough, Isle of Sheppey	13.6.1979	112,000
*Pre-Delivery Inspection Ltd. Queenborough, Isle of Sheppey	28.10.1983	66,000
Sheerness Steel Co. Ltd. Isle of Sheppey	19.9.1985	135,000

* Offer not taken up by the company—project deferred.

Channel Tunnel

Mr. Moate asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on the implications for his policy towards maximum lorry weights of the decision to proceed with a fixed Channel link.

Mr. David Mitchell: Government policy on maximum lorry weights remained unchanged. Maximum lorry weights in European Community countries are governed by a directive agreed in December 1984, from which the United Kingdom has a derogation allowing us to retain our domestic maximum weight limit of 38 tonnes. This derogation can only be ended by unanimous agreement in the Council of Ministers. We shall continue to carry out checks on incoming vehicles to ensure that they comply with our domestic requirements.

Mr. Moate asked the Secretary of State for Transport what preliminary estimates he has received from British Rail as to the cost of altering the loading gauge on the lines to the proposed Channel tunnel to permit containers to be conveyed by rail from other parts of the United Kingdom; and what indication he has received regarding the proposed timetable and the number of bridge alterations and other major works likely to be involved in such a programme.

Mr. David Mitchell: British Rail has estimated it will need to spend some £3 million on works for clearances for CFL container traffic. This work would be confined to the line between Tonbridge and Redhill, and British Rail at present expects it to be carried out between 1988 and 1991. It is for British Rail to develop detailed proposals.

M2 (Widening)

Mr. Moate asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will publish the studies which have been undertaken into the possible widening of the M2; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: I expect the report on the study of the possible need for more capacity on the M2 between junctions 1 and 3 to be completed this summer. It is not our practice to publish such reports because of the blighting of property and general uncertainty which could be caused. If the results of the M2 study justify including a scheme in the road programme, it will be subject to the usual detailed investigations before proposals are put to the public with all the safeguards that the statutory procedures provide.

Lorries

Mr. Moate asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement about the progress of research and development of quieter lorries.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The quiet heavy vehicle (QHV90) programme was set up to research and develop quieter lorries for the 1990s. The programme is on target and will be substantially complete within the next two years.

Mr. Moate asked the Secretary of State for Transport what progress has been achieved with regard to improvement for safety standards for heavy lorries; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: New and improved safety standards have been introduced for lorries and trailers. More are being developed. These include from 1982 a higher standard of braking, from 1983 sideguards and rear under-run guards, from 1985 spray suppression equipment and from 1988 additional mirrors.

Mr. Moate asked the Secretary of State for Transport if any studies have been undertaken or are planned by his Department into the effects on buildings and services of heavy lorry vibration.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: A preliminary study into the effects of traffic vibration on buildings is under way.

Further work will depend on the results of this preliminary study.

An earlier study was carried out into the settlement of buried services subject to traffic vibration.

Mr. Moate asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will publish an analysis of the numbers of lorries, divided into weight categories, over a represenative period in order to determine the effects of increases in maximum permitted lorry weights.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: An analysis of the stock of goods vehicles by gross vehicle weight is given in table 1, annex A, of the Department of Transport statistics bulletin 86(5) "Monitoring 38 tonne goods vehicles". A copy is in the Library.

Mr. Moate asked the Secretary of State for Transport what is the policy of the Government with regard to the reduction of lorry noise; and if he plans to achieve further reductions in statutory maximum permitted noise levels.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: New noise limits for lorries were agreed in the European Community in 1984 and promulgated in directive EC 84/424. The details are set out in my hon. Friend, the then Minister of State for Transport's reply of 22 October 1984 in column 419 of the Official Report. We shall be amending national regulations to make compliance with these limits compulsory from the earliest dates permitted by the directive.

Bus Subsidies

Mr. Moate asked the Secretary of State for Transport what is his estimate of the total cost of bus subsidies in the current year; and if he will publish a comparison with the figures for previous years since 1979.

Mr. David Mitchell: The figures are shown in the table.

Road Accident Statistics

Mr. Thurnham asked the Secretary of State for Transport what information he has as to the percentage of road accidents which are contributed to by road design faults; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Accident causes are not included on routine accident reports. However, in-depth studies of a sample of accidents in the 1970s indicated the following contributions of different factors:

(i) road environment alone: 2½ per cent. of accidents;

(ii) road environment and road user combined: 24 per cent. of accidents;

(iii) road environment combined with other factors: 1½ per cent. of accidents.

The figures quoted are from TRRL report SR 567. Causes are not included in routine (Stats 19) reports, because it is usually impossible for a police officer to make a proper assessment.

Mr. Thurnham asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will state the number of accidents per road mile during the last three years in (a) the United Kingdom, (b) the Greater Manchester council area, (c) Bolton district council area and (d) Bolton, North-East parliamentary constituency area.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Accident rate, per kilometre, Great Britain, Greater Manchester and Bolton district council areas, 1982-84.

	Great Britain	Greater Manchester	Bolton district council area

* Not available.

Data are not available for the Bolton, North-East parliamentary constituency area and for the Bolton district council area in 1982.

Maritime Services (Eire)

Mr. Nicholas Winterton asked the Secretary of State for Transport what has been the annual cost for the last five years for which figures are available of maintaining lighthouses and navigational and seismographic services around the coasts of the Republic of Ireland and in Republic of Ireland territorial waters.

Mr. Nicholas Ridley: The Commissioners of Irish Lights are responsible for lighthouses and other navigational aids around the coast of the whole of Ireland. They are financed from the General Lighthouse Fund for which I am responsible. The commissioners' expenditure (in sterling, at the rate of exchange current at the time) for each of the last five years for which published accounts are available was:

1980-81	6,701,000
1981-82	8,227,000
1982-83	7,888,000
1983-84	8,779,000

The commissioners' expenditure relating to the coast around the Republic is not identified separately in their accounts, but the figure of 70 per cent. was adopted for the purposes of the coast-sharing agreement that was negotiated with the Irish Government last year.

The provision of seismographic services around the coasts of the Republic is not a matter for the commissioners or for me.

British Rail Engineering Ltd.

Sir David Price asked the Secretary of State for Transport whether he expects British Rail Engineering Limited to follow a policy of open tendering between its workshops for heavy repair work from the various regions of British Rail.

Mr. David Mitchell: The British Railways Board is introducing a system of competitive tendering for heavy overhauls in which British Rail Engineering Ltd. (BREL) will be in competition with the private sector. The way in which BREL distributes its work load internally is a management matter for the company.

British Railways Board (Land)

Mr. Simon Hughes asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list the location and respective size of each site owned or managed by the British Railways Board that is either surplus to requirements or derelict land in England and Wales.

Mr. David Mitchell: Particulars of land-holdings are matters of management for the British Railways Board. Information on unused and under-used BRB sites of more than one acre is given in the registers prepared in accordance with the Local Government, Planning and Land Act 1980. Registers covering the whole of England are available for public inspection at the Department of the Environment. Registers for Welsh districts are in the course of being built up: those that are completed are available for public inspection at the Welsh Office.

TRANSPORT

British Rail

Mr. Pike asked the Secretary of State for Transport if, when he last met the chairman of British Rail, he discussed investment in the rail network in the north-west.

Mr. David Mitchell: I am happy to discuss any such matter which the chairman of BR feels it helpful to raise with me. Investment in the rail network of the north-west was not among the subjects raised at my last meeting with the chairman.

British Airways (Helicopter Sales)

Mr. Harris asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on the implications of the proposed sale of British Airways helicopters for the future of the Penzance to Isles of Scilly helicopter link.

Mr. Michael Spicer: I understand from British Airways that steps have been taken to restore the Penzance to Isles of Scilly helicopter link to profitability and that British Airways helicopters have no intention of terminating that service in the foreseeable future. British Airways is in discussion with a number of parties about the possible disposal of British Airways helicopters, but no agreement has yet been reached.

Highway Schemes (Manchester)

Mr. Thurnham asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list details of the grant and capital allocations for highway schemes for the years 1985-86 and 1986-87 in the Greater Manchester council area; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The capital allocation for roads and car parks in 1985-86 is £21 million and in 1986-87 is £30·54 million.

These include the highway schemes supported by transport supplementary grant in the Greater Manchester council area, which are as follows:

	Accepted Expenditure £000
	1985-86	1986-87
Urban Traffic Control	883	349
Central Manchester Stage 3	14	1
A5103 Princess Road Improvement, Moss Side	442	289
Leigh-Atherton Bypass	4,820	1,018
Ringway Road Diversion	450	17
Wigan Inner Ring Road	2,000	3,344
A57 Hyde Town Centre Bypass	1,151	719
Carrington Spur	288	3,093
Manchester/Salford Inner Ring Road (Blackfriars Road-Jubilee Street)	692	4,312
Manchester/Salford Inner Ring Road East (Redhill Street-Fairfield Street)	—	3,000
A6053 Water Street Improvement, Radcliffe	—	970
Manchester/Salford Inner Ring Road (Blackfriars Road-Gore Street)	—	700
Southern Link Road, Stockport	—	550
A626 Diversion, Stockport	—	3,000
Minor Works	1,840	2,500
Total accepted expenditure	12,580	23,862
Transport Supplementary Grant	6,290	11,931

Expenditure accepted for TSG in 1986-87 is nearly 90 per cent. more than in 1985-86.

Blackburn Road-Astley Bridge Bypass

Mr. Thurnham asked the Secretary of State for Transport what representations he has received from Bolton district council about the eligibility for grant of the Blackburn road-Astley bridge bypass; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: I have not received representations from Bolton district council on this bypass. The scheme was not included in Greater Manchester council's transport policy and programme submission for 1986-87. It was not mentioned in the district council's letter of endorsement of the county council's submission.

European Road Safety Year

Mr. Thurnham asked the Secretary of State for Transport what action is being taken in the Bolton area in support of European Road Safety Year; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The Department is not undertaking specific projects in the Bolton area in support of the European Road Safety Year. Local initiatives could be publicised in the European Road Safety Year "Newsfile". A copy is in the House of Commons Library.

Oil Pollution (The Minch)

Mr. Kennedy asked the Secretary of State for Transport what recent investigations his Department have carried out into the environmental implication of oil spillages from large crude oil carrying tankers on the Minch.

Mr. Ridley: None. My Department does not carry out investigations of the environmental implications of oil spillages in particular areas, the consequences of which depend on a number of factors, including the amount of oil spilt, its type, the weather and tidal conditions at the time and the speed with which a clean-up operation can be mounted.

But the general effects of oil spillages on the environment are well understood and my Department's marine pollution control unit spends just over £1 million a year on research into methods of cleaning up oil at sea and on the coastline, directed at minimising those effects.

M25 (Lighting)

Mr. Macfarlane asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will accept the recent offer by Phillips to provide lighting for parts of the M25.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: We saw the press release. There was not a formal offer, though I will take up the suggestion of a discussion on the proposals.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Departmental Heads and Deputies

Mr. McWilliam asked the hon. Member for Berwick-upon-Tweed, as representing the House of Commons Commission, if he will list the names of the heads and deputies of the Departments and offices of the House together with which Civil Service grade they are linked for pay and conditons of service purposes, together with any proposals the Commission has to change these gradings.

Mr. Beith: The information is as follows:

Newspapers

Mr. Madden asked the Lord Privy Seal if he will make immediate arrangements for the purchase of newspapers published by News Group Newspapers and Times Newspapers Ltd. for the benefit of hon. Members and officials to cease.

Mr. Biffen: No.

Newspaper Advertisements

Mr. Madden asked the hon. Member for Berwick-upon-Tweed, as representing the House of Commons Commission, if he will undertake not to place any advertisement on behalf of the House, including job vacancies, in newspapers published by News Group Newspapers and Times Newspapers Ltd.

Mr. Beith: No. Recruitment advertisements for posts in the House service are placed in a variety of newspapers depending on the nature of the posts, past experience of the effectiveness of different newspapers, and the wishes of the Department concerned.

Mr. Madden asked the Lord Privy Seal what has been the cost of buying newspapers for the benefit of hon. Members and officials over the past year; and what proportion of newspapers available in the House are provided free by newspaper publishers.

Mr. Biffen: In 1985 expenditure on newspapers for use in the House was approximately £29,000. About 27 per cent. of the newspapers provided by the Department of the Serjeant at Arms for Members and senior officers of the House are supplied free, as are approximately 60 per cent. of the newspaper titles available in the Library's Reference Room.

WALES

Sewer Collapses

Mr. Gareth Wardell asked the Secretary of State for Wales what information he has as to the extent of sewer collapses in Wales in each of the last three years for which figures are available.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: The annual report of the Welsh water authority for 1984-85 (a copy of which is in the Library provides on page 18, figure 7, a block graph showing reported sewer collapses from 1981 to 1984. Definitive figures are available from the Welsh water authority and I have asked the chairman to write to the hon. Gentleman.

Tan-yr-Unto Bend

Mr. Harvey asked the Secretary of State for Wales if the fresh investigations into the appropriate long-term solution to the problem posed by the Tan-yr-Unto bend have been made; and when a decision can be expected.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: These investigations are proceeding urgently. I hope to be able to make an announcement later this year. In the meantime the county council has prepared additional safety measures for the Tan-yr-Unto bend itself. It is hoped to implement these shortly.

Community Programme (Anglesey)

Mr. Best asked the Secretary of State for Wales how many places on the community programme since its beginning have been available on Anglesey.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: Between October 1982 and December 1985 a cumulative total of 754 places have been available on the community programme on Anglesey.

Mr. Best asked the Secretary of State for Wales how many individuals have been placed on the community programme on Anglesey since its beginning; how many of these have found employment at the conclusion; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: Precise information in the form requested is not available but between October 1982 and December 1985, 808 people were placed on the programme by the four jobcentres in Anglesey. Separate figures for Anglesey are not available but national surveys indicate that 25 per cent. of participants in Wales leave the community programme to go straight into employment. The Government believe it is right to channel direct support for long term unemployed people through such programmes.

Beef Farmers

Mr. Best asked the Secretary of State for Wales what is the number of beef farmers in Wales with (i) fewer than 50 head of cattle, (ii) fewer than 100 head of cattle but more than 50, (iii) fewer than 500 head of cattle but more than 100 and (iv) more than 500 head of cattle.

Mr. Nicholas Edwards: In June 1985 the annual census recorded 10,528 main holdings in Wales with between 1 and 49 beef cows, 497 with between 50 and 99 and 68 with between 100 and 499. There were no holdings with more than 500 beef cows.

Mr. Best asked the Secretary of State for Wales what is the number of beef producers in Wales (i) for whom beef production is their sole enterprise and (ii) for whom beef production is additional to a major agricultural enterprise in another sector.

Mr. Nicholas Edwards: In June 1985 in Wales the total number of main holdings with beef cows was 11,093; of these, 2,320 were predominantly involved in a beef production enterprise.

Labour Statistics

Mr. Best asked the Secretary of State for Wales how many persons in the Holyhead travel-to-work area have been unemployed for 12 months or more at the latest date for which figures are available; and if he will give the similar figure for the same time in 1979.

Mr. Nicholas Edwards: In January 1986 1,804 persons in the Holyhead travel-to-work area had been unemployed for over 12 months. Comparable figures are not available before October 1983 when the total was 1,407.

Enterprise Allowance Scheme (Anglesey)

Mr. Best asked the Secretary of State for Wales how many individuals on Anglesey have benefited from the enterprise allowance scheme ssince its beginning; how many have remained working at the conclusion of the scheme; how many places have been made available; how long is the current waiting period between application and entry on the scheme; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: Since its national launch in August 1983, 283 people have entered the enterprise allowance scheme on Anglesey. Separate information for individual areas is not available but a national survey of participants on the EAS pilot project indicated that 61 per cent. of those completing one year on the scheme were still trading two years later. In north Wales the number of places available is to increase from 1,196 to 1,490 in April this year. There are no waiting lists for entry on to the scheme in Anglesey but counselling and the evaluation of applicants typically takes between two and five weeks. This is a highly successful scheme which forms an important part of our programme to encourage the growth of new employment opportunities.

Youth Training Scheme

Mr. Best asked the Secretary of State for Wales how many school leavers have been found places on the YTS since its beginning on Anglesey; how many have found permanent employment; how many employers have offered places; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: Precise information in respect of school leavers is not available but since 1 April 1983 some 1,502 young people have entered the scheme in Anglesey; this figure includes a small number of re-entrants. Figures for those who have found permanent employment after training are available only for the Gwynedd, Clwyd and Powys areas and the latest figures from a 100 per cent. follow-up survey show that of those leaving between April and August 1985 some 57 per cent. found permanent employment. 565 employers have offered YTS places in Anglesey.

The introduction of two-year YTS from April this year is a major development which will provide trainees with the opportunity to gain vocational qualifications.

Mr. Barry Jones asked the Secretary of State for Wales how many youngsters joining YTS schemes in Wales in 1985 left before completion of the course, as a percentage of those joining such schemes.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: The only information available relates to the period April to October 1985 when 2,509 youngsters prematurely left YTS, which is 17 per cent. of those who joined during the same period.

Mortality Statistics

Mr. Michael Forsyth asked the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list in the Official Report the deaths in Wales in each of the last five years for which records are available attributed to (a) malignant neoplasm of trachea, bronchus and lung, (b) bronchitis and emphysema and (c) ischaemic heart disease, giving the figures for all deaths and broken down by sex.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: The information is given in the following table:

162	Malignant neoplasm of trachea, bronchus and lung	Males	1,415	1,361	1,373	1,391	1,413

Mr. Michael Forsyth asked the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list in the Official Report, for the last five years for which records are available, the average age of those who died from (a) malignant neoplasm of trachea, bronchus and lung, (b) bronchitis and emphysema and (c) ischaemic heart disease, giving the figures for all deaths and broken down by sex.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: The information is given in the following table:

162	Malignant neoplasm of trachea, bronchus and lung	Males	69·3	68·9	68·8	69·3	69·5

Life Expectancy

Mr. Michael Forsyth asked the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list in the Official Report the expectation of life at age 16 years for men and women in each of the past 30 years.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: The information requested is not readily available for Wales. The expectation of life at age 15 years for men and women in Wales for 1971-73, 1973-75, 1976, 1977, 1978, 1977-1979 and 1981-1983 is, however, published in "Health and Personal Social Services Statistics for Wales": volumes No. 3 (1976), No. 4 (1977), No. 5 (1978), No. 6 (1979), No. 7 (1980), No. 11 (1984) and No. 12 (1985) respectively. Copies of the publication are in the Library.

Disabled People

Mr. Wigley asked the Secretary of State for Wales if he will publish in the Official Report a list of those organisations in Wales with which he has consulted concerning the implications of the Disabled Persons (Services, Consultation and Representation) Bill; on what date the invitation to consult was posted to those organisations; and by what date he requires to receive their response.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: The organisations in Wales which we have consulted about the Government's proposals or amendments to the Disabled Persons (Services, Consultation and Representation) Bill are as follows. The consultation letters were issued on 14 February with responses requested by 3 March.

Committee of Welsh District Councils
Welsh Counties Committee
Local Authorities
Chief Executives
Director of Social Services
Wales Council for the Blind
Wales Council for the Deaf
Wales Council for the Disabled
Spastic Society in Wales
Wales MIND
Age Concern (Wales)
MENCAP (Wales)
Wales Council for Voluntary Action
District Health Authorities
Society of Welsh Planning Officers
Society of Education Officers (Wales)

Community Residential Places

Mr. Strang asked the Secretary of State for Wales what was the number of community residential places in Wales for each year from 1976 to 1986-87, giving estimated figures where actual figures are not yet available; and if he will also give (a) the number of residents, (b) the number of residents per 100,000 of the population and (c) the number of residents in each of the following age ranges: under two years, two to four years, five to nine years, 10 to 15 years, 16 to 18 years, 19 to 64 years, 65 to 75 years and 75 plus years.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: The two tables give the relevant information which is centrally available for the years 1976 to 1985. It is not the Department's practice to provide estimated figures for future years.

Mentally Handicapped People

Mr. Strang asked the Secretary of State for Wales what were (a) the total number of patients, (b) the number in each of the following age ranges: under two years, two to four years, five to nine years, 10 to 15 years, 19 to 64 years, 65 to 74 years and 75 plus years, (c) the number of patients per 100,000 population, (d) the number of under 16-year-olds, (e) the number of under 16-year-olds per 100,000 population, (f) the number of adults over 16 years of age and (g) the number of adults over 16 years per 100,000 population in hospitals for the mentally handicapped in Wales for each year from 1976 to 1986-87, giving estimated figures where actual figures are not yet available.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: The available information relates to the period 1976 to 1984 and is shown in the following table:

Woolaway Houses

Mr. Ron Davies asked the Secretary of State for Wales what representations he has received concerning the refurbishment of Woolaway type homes under the Housing Defects Act; how many such homes in Wales are eligible under the Act; how many refurbishment schemes have been completed to date; what is the existing financial limit on such schemes; if he will increase that limit; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: The Welsh Office has received 18 representations and inquiries about the reinstatement of Woolaway houses. According to returns from local authorities, there are about 230 such houses which originated in the public sector and were sold before the cut-off date for assistance under the Housing Defects Act 1984. I am not aware of any that have yet been reinstated. The eligible expense limit for reinstatement grant under the Act is £14,000.

We have no plans to increase the limit at present. No repair scheme for Woolaway houses has been licensed by PRC Homes Ltd. yet and it is too early to see if the present limit will prove appropriate or not. We would be prepared to prescribe a new limit should it prove necessary.

Radioactive Discharge (Monitoring)

Mr. D. E. Thomas asked the Secretary of State for Wales what action has been undertaken by his Department to monitor the level of radioactive discharge around the Welsh coast, arising out of radioactive material released from British Nuclear Fuels Limited, Sellafield; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mark Robinson: Monitoring around the Welsh coast has been carried out for many years to ensure that discharges of radioactive waste, from whatever source, do not pose a threat to the public. Results of this monitoring, which is carried out by the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food is published annually in its aquatic environmental monitoring report on radioactivity and surface and coastal waters of the British Isles. A copy of the latest report No. 13 is in the Library.

School Leavers (YTS)

Mr. Barry Jones asked the Secretary of State for Wales how many youngsters leaving school in 1985 are currently attached to a YTS programme; how many were unemployed in January; and if he will express both figures as a percentage of those leaving school in 1985.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: Comprehensive information is not available in the precise form requested. At the end of January there were 16,001 1985 school leavers participating in YTS. Information about the numbers still seeking work in January is not available because the Department of Employment's unemployment statistics do not indicate the year in which a young person left school.

Mr. Barry Jones asked the Secretary of State for Wales how many Welsh youngsters leaving school in (a) 1979, (b) 1980, (c) 1981, (d) 1982, (e) 1983 and (f) 1984 have been unemployed permanently since leaving school.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: Information in the precise form requested is not available as Department of Employment statistics do not indicate the year in which an unemployed young person left school. However in January 1986 there were 6,405 young people aged under 18 who had been continuously unemployed since leaving school, 4,448 aged 18 and 9,374 aged 19 or over.

Welsh Water Authority

Mr. Wigley asked the Secretary of State for Wales what is his latest estimate of (a) the original value, (b) the written down book value and (c) the estimated replacement cost of the assets of the Welsh water authority.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: All of the information requested is contained in the Welsh water authority's 1984-85 annual report, a copy of which is in the Library.

Public Bodies (Ministerial Appointments)

Mr. Ray Powell asked the Secretary of State for Wales if he will publish a list of all bodies to which he has made appointments since 1979.

Mr. Wyn Roberts [pursuant to his reply, 11 February 1986, c. 413]: Since 1979 my right hon. Friend has made appointments to the following bodies for which he has sole responsibility for making all or a majority of ministerial appointments.

Agricultural Dwelling House Advisory Committees.
Agricultural Wages Committees.
Agricultural Advisory Panel for Wales.
All Wales Advisory Panel on Development of Services for Mentally Handicapped.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

New Technology (Research)

Dr. McDonald asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what research is currently being funded by Government Departments into the social and economic consequences of the introduction of new technology, especially that likely to be developed from the Alvey programme and its successors.

Mr. Pattie: Research on the social and economic consequences of the introduction of the new technologies is directed as much at informing public debate on this important issue as it is in helping to guide Government policy making. Although the Department of Trade and Industry is supporting some research in a related area, it is more appropriate that support should come from other public funded bodies such as the Economic and Social Research Council and the National Economic Development Office.

There is a large and growing volume of activity in this field of research. The Economic and Social Research Council is giving high priority to funding and co-ordinating research not only into the social and economic aspects of new technologies but also their legal and managerial consequences. Professor Melody, who has been appointed to advise ESRC on this area, has been in touch with the Alvey directorate and other interested parties during the design stage of the proposed new research programme. Other committees of the ESRC are also involved.

The National Economic Development Office Information Techaology economic development committee has a long term perspective group which is researching possible IT futures by commissioning studies from a variety of sources. The group is expected to report later this year.

The Department of Trade and Industry is maintaining close links with the ESRC and the NEDO IT long term perspectives group. In addition, because of the Department's concern with questions of acceptance and effective use of new technologies (and the probable dire consequences of their rejection), the DTI supported the public acceptance of new technologies project which was one of 18 collaborative research projects initiated at the 1982 Versailles summit meeting. Some of the results of this research have already been published, by the Policy Studies Institute, London, and the policy research in engineering, science and technology, University of Manchester.

Lloyd's (Committee of Inquiry)

Mr. Gerald Howarth asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he is in a position to give details of the membership of the committee of inquiry into regulatory arrangements at Lloyd's, the setting up of which he announced on 10 January.

Mr. Channon: I am pleased to be able to announce that the chairman of the committee of inquiry, Sir Patrick Neill, QC will be joined by Mr. Denis Allport, formerly chairman and chief executive of Metal Box and Mr. Brian Pomeroy, a partner of Touche Ross. The committee's terms of reference are

"to consider whether the regulatory arrangements which are being established at Lloyd's under the 1982 Lloyd's Act provide protection for the interests of members of Lloyd's comparable to that proposed for investors under the Financial Services Bill, and to report to the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry by the summer."

Polychlorinated Biphenyls (Shipment)

Mr. Livsey asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will take steps to prevent the importation of 15 tonnes of polychlorinated biphenyls from Australia, for processing at the Re-Chem Company at Pontypool.

Mr. Alan Clark [pursuant to his reply, 17 February 1986, c. 84]: No. It would be contrary to our international trading obligations to ban the import of waste containing polychlorinated biphenyls for processing, whilst allowing the processing of such waste emanating in the United Kingdom.

Manufacturing Investment

Mr. Ashley asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will give figures for (a) Stoke on Trent, (b) the west midlands and (c) the United Kingdom showing the percentage change between 1979 and the most recent year for which figures are available for (i) manufacturing output and (ii) investment in manufacturng industry; and if he will list the steps he has taken in the last 12 months to improve the figures.

Mr. Peter Morrison [pursuant to his reply, 18 February 1986, c. 95]: The United Kingdom's manufacturing output decreased by 5 per cent. in real terms between 1979 and 1985, and it is estimated that investment in manufacturing industry fell by 18 per cent. (at 1980 prices) over the same period.

However, between 1981 and 1985 manufacturing output and investment in the manufacturing sector rose by 11 per cent. and 19 per cent. respectively.

Statistical information if not readily available for Stoke on Trent, but current price comparisons for the west midlands and the United Kingdom are shown in the table for the period 1979 to 1983, the latest period for which data is available.

Percentage change in manufacturing industry 1979-83*

	Net output percentage	Net capital expenditure percentage
United Kingdom	+26	−10
West Midlands	+13	−15

* Divisions 2-4 of the Standard Industrial Classification (1980).
Source: Annual Census of Production.

Regional selective assistance is available in a large area of the west midlands (but not Stoke on Trent); 235 offers have been made under this scheme with a value of £27 million and associated with £262 million project costs this will help either to safeguard or create 15,700 jobs in the area. West midlands regional office has taken part in more than 50 seminars in order to publicise regional selective assistance.

Since April 1984, 198 offers under the support for innovation scheme have been made in the west midlands area with a total value of £18 million. Of this, 32 offers, worth nearly £2 million, have been made to recipients in the Stoke on Trent travel-to-work area.

Burroughs Machines

Mr. Norman Hogg asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what Government assistance has been given to Burroughs Machines by way of regional selective assistance and regional development grant in each year from 1979: (a) in total, (b) in Scotland and (c) in Cumbernauld and Kilsyth.

Mr. Peter Morrison [pursuant to his reply, 18 February 1986, c. 96]: Information on all payments of regional selective assistance and regional development grants to individual companies is not available for reasons of confidentiality. The value of offers of regional selective assistance over £5,000 and payments of regional development grants over £25,000 to Burroughs Machines Ltd. since 1979 which have been published in British business are given in the following table:

Regional Selective Assistance Offered:

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Military Forces (Europe)

Mr. Best asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what progress has been made towards a mandatory confidence-building régime requiring exchange of information about the size and movement of military forces in Europe, and providing for observers and on-site inspections.

Mr. Renton: NATO Allies in 1984 tabled proposals at the Conference on Disarmament in Europe at Stockholm for measures covering the military activities mentioned by my hon. Friend. Agreement on procedural matters has permitted drafting to begin. We continue to hope that it will be possible to agree with other conference participants on practical confidence and security building measures.

People's Mojahedin Organisation, Iran

Mr. Best asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if Her Majesty's Government have had any recent contacts with the People's Mojahedin Organisation of Iran; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Renton: We do not have official contacts with the People's Mojahedin Organisation of Iran.

Uganda

Mr. Anderson asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what requests for assistance in re-establishing democracy and stability have been received from the Ugandan Government; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Chalker: I visited Uganda on 12 February. During the course of my visit, I met President Museveni for nearly two hours and had separate meetings with senior members of his Cabinet including the Prime Minister, Dr. Kisekka. My discussions were friendly and open throughout.

I gave President Museveni a message from my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister which expressed the hope that Uganda could now achieve reconciliation, real stability and prosperity. I told the President of our offer of up to £5 million to assist with rehabilitation, in addition to money already pledged for the Owen Falls power station. We expect the Ugandan Government to inform us of their priorities for assistance shortly. A team from the Overseas Development Administration will visit Kampala in the near future. A senior British officer, Major General Tony Pollard will be attached to our High Commission in Kampala for a short period to assess the military assistance needs of the new Ugandan Government.

European School, Culham

Mr. Deakins asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he has received the judgment of the European Court in the case of taxation of salary supplements paid at the European school in Culham; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Moore: I have been asked to reply.

The Government have received the preliminary ruling of the European Court. I am not able to comment on the affairs of individual taxpayers, but the ruling will be studied with care.

NATIONAL FINANCE

United States Federal Excise Tax (Exemption)

Sir William Clark asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer, pursuant to his answer of 13 January, Official Report, column 510, what action Her Majesty's Government have undertaken to persuade the United States Congress to retain in its present form the exemption from federal excise tax presently enjoyed by United Kingdom insurance companies.

Mr. Moore: We have made representations to both the United States Treasury and the United States Senate Finance Committee recording our concern that current United States proposals would override the United Kingdom-United States double taxation convention. We have also sent to the United States authorities a detailed study arguing that there is no evidence of abuse of the exemption provided for in the convention.

Whitbread Poacher Beer

Mr. Michael Cocks asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer, pursuant to his answer of 30 January, Official Report, column 593, if he will seek the permission of Whitbread plc to release the information sought on the beer referred to.

Mr. Lawson: The release of the information is a matter for Whitbreads: it is not a matter for me.

Enterprise Allowance Scheme

Mr. David Howell asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he has any plans to seek to change the tax treatment of payments under the enterprise allowance scheme; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Moore: At this time of year my right hon. Friend will not expect me to anticipate the Budget statement.

Income Statistics

Mr. Maples asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many taxpayers are estimated to have incomes in excess of £30,000 per annum; and what is estimated to be their aggregated total income in excess of £30,000 per annum each.

Mr. Moore: I shall let my hon. Friend have a reply as soon as possible.

THE ARTS

Liverpool (Ministerial Visit)

Mr. Parry asked the Minister for the Arts if he will make a statement on his recent visit to Liverpool.

Mr. Luce [pursuant to his reply, 17 February 1986, c. 55]: This was my first visit, as Arts Minister, to Liverpool, and I was much impressed by the lively arts and cultural activities in and around the city. I announced the creation of the trustee body to be known as the National Museums and Galleries on Merseyside which will own and maintain, through grant-in-aid from my Department, the bulk of the present museum and art gallery services of the Merseyside county council. This will include the exciting new maritime museum in the restored Albert dock.

I met representatives of Merseyside Arts, the Playhouse and Everyman theatres, and the Royal Liverpool philharmonic society, and discussed their funding problems after abolition of the metropolitan county. The Arts Council and the successor authorities are still negotiating about the contribution to be made by those authorities to their funding. The Philharmonic hall is also the subject of continuing discussion. The Arts Council will be continuing its funding of the Royal Liverpool philharmonic orchestra and hopes that, if the successor authorities play their part this will enable the funding of the hall itself to be maintained. I was also pleased to learn that Apollo Leisure Ltd. intended to take over the lease on the Empire theatre; the Arts Council will continue to fund the major touring companies which appear there.

PRIME MINISTER

Honours System

2. Mr. Willie W. Hamilton asked the Prime Minister if she will initiate a review of the working of the honours system.

The Prime Minister: I refer the hon. Member to the reply which I gave to the hon. Member for Linlithgow (Mr. Dalyell) on 16 December 1985 at column 3.

Official Cars

Mr. Willie W. Hamilton asked the Prime Minister if she will name those former Ministers of the Crown who retain the use of official cars; and what was the total cost of this facility in each of the last five years.

The Prime Minister: At present, former Ministers of the Crown have use of official cars only on security grounds and it is not therefore in the interests of security to disclose details. Current costs of such provision in a full year are £190,000.

No. 10 Downing Street

Mr. Willie W. Hamilton asked the Prime Minister what was the total public expenditure on No. 10 Downing street in each of the last five years.

The Prime Minister: The total costs to public funds of the Prime Minister's Office, including 10 Downing street and Chequers, in each of the last five years are:

*Cost at Outturn Prices

Year (April to March)	£
1980-81	1,744,824
1981-82†	2,415,301
1982-83	2,699,752
1984-85	3,753,898

* Includes grant in aid to the Chequers Trust, salaries and wages, pension liability and administration costs, but excludes the salary of the Prime Minister messengerial and cleaning services, and any allowance for accommodation until 1983-84 when the property repayment scheme was introduced.

† The increase in cost between 1980-81 and 1981-82 reflects the change in the basis of charging by MOD for aircraft used by the Prime Minister, and the introduction of repayment for the Service staff at Chequers, previously provided as an allied service.

‡ Following the abolition of the CPRS, the policy unit in the Prime Minister's Office was strengthened by four staff. In the last full year of its existence (1982-83) CPRS employed 35 people and cost £1,109,000. Thus, while the cost of the Prime Minister's Office increased as a result of the abolition of the CPRS, substantial net overall savings were made.

It is not possible, without disproportionate expense, to separate the costs of 10 Downing street and Chequers.

Newspaper Advertising

Mr. Madden asked the Prime Minister if she will issue an instruction to all Government Departments and the Central Office of Information to withhold advertising from newspapers published by News Group Newspapers and Times Newspapers Ltd.

The Prime Minister: No.

ENERGY

Petrol Prices

Mr. Phillip Oppenheim asked the Secretary of State for Energy whether he has any plans to introduce legislation to regulate petrol prices.

Mr. Buchanan-Smith: No.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Motoring Offences

Mr. Lofthouse asked the Attorney-General what guidance is available to the police prosecutor in cases of serious motoring offences to assist the prosecutor to decide upon the most appropriate charge.

The Attorney-General: At present I only have constitutional responsibility for the work of the Director of Public Prosecutions. However, the Home Secretary has disseminated to chief constables copies of my general guidelines on the criteria for prosecution, issued in February 1983. Prosecutors will also take into account any decision by the higher courts on matters of law.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Immigration

Mr. Proctor asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his answer of 29 November, Official Report, column 694, when he will be able to give a substantive answer concerning visitors from the New Commonwealth and Pakistan.

Mr. Waddington: Shortly.

Holloway Prison

Mr. Kilroy-Silk asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what evening activities for prisoners currently take place at Holloway prison.

Mr. Mellor: Evening classes include craft, cookery, typing, a self-awareness discussion group, English language and literature, art, dressmaking, music, physical education and wing association.

Visitors

Mr. Watts asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he has any plans to strengthen the system for monitoring the embarkation of visitors to the United Kingdom upon the expiry of their leave to remain; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waddington: We have no present plans to do so but the arrangements for recording landing and embarkation records of passengers subject to immigration control are currently under review.

Mr. Watts asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to the answer of 10 February, Official Report, column 316, what proportion of visitors is recorded on the computer system.

Mr. Waddington: In the 12 months ending June 1985, about 5 per cent. non-European Community nationals admitted as visitors to the United Kingdom were recorded on the immigration and nationality department computer.

Betting Offices

Mr. Bidwell asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what representations he has received from the Betting Office Licence Association, seeking to allow betting offices to be open later; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Giles Shaw: We have received no such representations.

Prevention of Terrorism (Temporary Provisions) Act

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will place in the Library statistics giving the number of official complaints arising from the operation of the Prevention of Terrorism (Temporary Provisions) Act, the reports of any subsequent investigations and also the record of any informal resolutions or withdrawals.

Mr. Giles Shaw: This information has not hitherto been compiled centrally but, in response to a suggestion made by Sir Cyril Philips in his first report on the Prevention of Terrorism (Temporary Provisions) Act 1984, a circular was issued in November 1985 to chief constables inviting them to notify the Home Office of such complaints. This information will be made available to Sir Cyril, and we shall consider what summary information for 1986 can be made available to Parliament when we respond to Sir Cyril's next report.

Metropolitan Police (Staffing)

Mr. Adley asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will discuss the staffing levels of the traffic division of the Metropolitan police with the Metropolitan Police Commissioner.

Mr. Giles Shaw: The traffic division has been considered as part of the urgent review of the manpower needs of the Metropolitan police which my right hon. Friend set in hand last October. He is now considering the outcome of this review.

Firearms

Mr. Hickmet asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many new shotgun licences have been issued to persons residing (a) outside the Metropolitan police area and (b) within the Metropolitan police area in each year since 1979 to date; how many persons are or have been holders of shotgun licences in each of the years since 1979; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Giles Shaw: The available information is set out in the following table:

	1979	1980	1981	1982	1983	1984
Number of shotgun certificates on issue at 31 December
England and Wales (excluding the Metropolitan police district)	751,815	752,864	755,697	752,125	753,631	768,059
Metropolitan police district	30,259	28,990	29,528	28,504	29,747	30,293
Number of new shotgun certificates issued annually
England and Wales (excluding the Metropolitan police district)	n/a	n/a	n/a	n/a	43,234	51,825
Metropolitan police district	2,908	3,246	3,348	2,504	3,378	3,761

Over the period the number of shotgun certificates on issue has increased by 0·1 per cent. in the Metropolitan police district compared with 2·2 per cent. elsewhere in England and Wales. Before issuing any shotgun certificate, the chief officer must of course be satisfied that the applicant meets the requirements set out in the Firearms Act 1968.

Mr. Hickmet asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement upon the availablity of handguns, legally and illegally; and what his policy is in relation to the issue of licences for handguns.

Mr. Giles Shaw: I shall reply as soon as possible.

Mr. Hickmet asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department on how many occasions (a) handguns and (b) shotguns have been discharged at (i) the police and (ii) third parties in each year since 1979 showing on how many occasions a police officer or third person was (1) injured or (2) killed; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mellor: I shall reply as soon as possible.

Imitation Firearms

Mr. Hickmet asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the availability of imitation firearms; what evidence he has as to their useage in crime; and whether he has any plans to control them.

Mr. Giles Shaw: It is already an offence to use any imitation firearms to resist arrest or to commit a crime. Heavy penalties apply in such cases. In addition, under the Firearms Act 1982, imitation firearms capable of ready conversion to fire live ammunition are already subject to the same stringent controls imposed on actual firearms by the Firearms Act 1968. We do not think that it would be sensible to restrict or try to control the sale or possesion of toy or imitation guns which are not capable of being converted to fire live ammunition. There are already many such imitations or toys in circulation, and realistic imitations can easily be constructed by those intent on a criminal act.

The following table gives information about notifiable offences recorded by the police in England and Wales in which imitation firearms were reported to have been used:

Year	Number of offences
1979	144
1980	161
1981	206
1982	183
1983	167
1984	182

Mr. Hickmet asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many persons were (a) indicted for armed robbery, (b) acquitted and (c) convicted, in each year since 1979; if he will give details of the offences alleged and the sentence imposed in each case of conviction; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mellor: Information collected centrally on court proceedings does not include details of the circumstances of offences, and it is not possible to distinguish offences of armed robbery from other offences of robbery. Information on proceedings at magistrates' and Crown courts for all offences of robbery can be found in Table S1.1(A). (Volume 1) and table S2.2(A) (Volume 2) of "Criminal Statistics, England and Wales, Supplementary Tables 1984" and in corresponding tables for earlier years; information on the length of custodial sentences imposed on those found guilty can be found in table S1.5 and tables S2.2 to S2.5 of the same volumes.

Metropolitan Police

Mr. Hickmet asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what restrictions have been imposed upon working overtime on Metropolitan police officers in each year since 1979; what effect such restrictions have had upon the amount of crime being investigated or not investigated, categorised in the most convenient form; and what effect such restrictions have upon individual police officers' inquiries and upon policing as a whole;

(2) if he will make a statement about the retirement of police officers from the Metropolitan police; what is the average length of service of a police officer of the rank of sergeant or below; and how many are serving with a length of service of (a) two years, (b) between two and three years, (c) between three and four years, (d) between four and five years, (e) between five and 10 years, (f) between 10 and 15 years, (g) between 15 and 20 years and (h) over 20 years;

(3) what steps he has taken to seek to prevent the premature retirement of Metropolitan police officers; what effect such retirement has had upon effective and efficient policing; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Giles Shaw: I shall reply as soon as possible.

Mr. Hickmet asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how much time is devoted by Metropolitan police officers to monitoring the case of offenders or suspects; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Giles Shaw: It is not possible to quantify the time spent by Metropolitan police officers on monitoring the care of persons in police custody.

The responsibilites attached to the new post of custody officer includes the care and welfare of offenders and suspects in accordance with the Police and Criminal Evidence Act and the codes of practice issued under it. The Commissioner is conscious of the need to ensure the well being of persons held in police custody and I understand that he is generally satisfied with the way the new procedures are working.

Priority Policing

Mr. Hickmet asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the nature, application, operation and priorities of priority policing within the Metropolitan police area; and if he will call for reports from chief constables outside the Metropolitan police area on the nature, application, operation and priorities of priority policing.

Mr. Giles Shaw: We attach great importance to the determination of objectives and priorities in the police service, and to the allocation of resources and the deployment of police and civilian manpower in a way that will most effectively and efficiently secure those objectives and priorities. Home Office circular No. 114/1983 invited chief officers of police and police authorities to keep their objectives, priorities and resources under review, and provided guidance on how this should be done. A copy of the circular is in the Library.

As regards the Metropolitan police district, for which my right hon. Friend is the police authority, the Commissioner submits to him in January each year a report setting out his strategy, goals and priorities for the forthcoming year. Copies of the report are placed in the Library and sent to right hon. and hon. Members for constituencies within the Metropolitan police district, and the report forms the basis of the annual debate on policing in the metropolis.

Burglary Screening

Mr. Hickmet asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how the system of burglary screening within the Metropolitan police area operates; why and when it was introduced; how many burglaries are being investigated by the CID, categorised by degree of investigation, since its introduction; if he will give comparable figures for the past four years; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Giles Shaw: Burglary screening is a means of assessing the solvability of a case by awarding points derived from a careful analysis of evidence at a scene of a crime; it was introduced in the Metropolitan police district in September 1983 as a result of an examination by Metropolitan police officers of the methods of investigation underlying higher clear-up rates in other forces; the statistical information requested is not available.

Foreign Visitors

Mr. Marlow asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) how many visitors filled in embarkation cards in each of the years 1981, 1982, 1983, 1984 and 1985;

(2) how many visitors who had filled in embarkation cards left the United Kingdom in each of the years 1981, 1982, 1983, 1984 and 1985.

Mr. Waddington: I regret that information in the form requested is not available. However, I will shortly be writing to the hon. Member in reply to his letter of 29 October 1985 explaining the information available on the embarkation of visitors.

Crossbows

Mr. Hickmet asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement about the availability of crossbows and their usage in crime; and if he has any plans to take steps to introduce licences for their use or otherwise restrict their availability.

Mr. Giles Shaw: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply given to a question by my hon. Friend the Member for Plymouth, Drake (Miss Fookes) on 3 February at column 5. I shall write to my hon. Friend as soon as possible.

Police Complaints Authority

Mr. Spencer asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he is making changes in the membership of the Police Complaints Authority; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hurd: Rear-Admiral John Bell is retiring from his post as deputy chairman of the authority on 28 February. I wish to take this opportunity to thank him for his excellent service first with the Police Complaints Board and then with the Police Complaints Authority. His knowledge and experience have made an outstanding contribution to the rapid establishment of the authority as a key part of the police complaints system.

John Pownall OBE, who has been a member of the authority since its establishment, has accepted my invitation to him to succeed to the vacant deputy chairman post from 1 March.

In addition, I have appointed Air Commodore, Stephen King, as a member of the authority. He will be taking up his appointment in the course of next month. I hope to announce a further new appointment shortly.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

Mathematics, Science and Languages

Sir Peter Hordern asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if, from international sources available to him, he will publish the number of students in the United Kingdom, France and West Germany, who, at the age of 17 years, study mathematics, sciences and a foreign language.

Mr. Chris Patten: The information requested for France and Germany is not available. In England less than 1 per cent. of A-level school leavers have passes in these three subjects. It is generally believed that the proportion of pupils in post compulsory education studying such combinations is higher in France and West Germany than in the United Kingdom. My right hon. Friend has taken steps to broaden the future curriculum of A-level students with the introduction of AS levels in 1987 for first examination in 1989.

University Clinical Academic Staff

Sir David Price asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether a settlement has now been reached in respect of the pay of university clinical academic staff; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Soley asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science when he expects to reach a decision on the comparability of pay between clinical academic staff and academic staff generally.

Mr. Walden: The clinical academic staff salaries committee agreed on 7 February that the salaries of clinical academic staff should be increased in line with the 1985 award for NHS doctors and dentists. In reaching this agreement the Committee had before them a letter that my right hon. Friend had sent on the previous day to the Chairman of the Committee of Vice-Chancellors and Principals. The text of this letter is:

6 February 1986

Dear Maurice

I undertook to let the Committee of Vice-Chancellors and Principals have a response before tomorrow's meeting of CASSC to your letter of 18 June about clinical academics' pay. I am sorry not to have been able to write before now.

So far as the outstanding 1985 award is concerned I am able to tell you that the UGC can find the sum necessary to compensate universities with medical schools for the difference between clinical and non-clinical pay awards.

As to the future, the Government agrees that clinical academics' pay should in principle be linked to NHS doctors' pay, which is settled following DDRB recommendations. The universities will not be given less favourable treatment than the Hospital and Community Health Service in any decisions to provide additional funds to meet additional costs arising from DDRB pay awards.

I am sending a copy of this letter to Peter Swinnerton-Dyer.

Yours ever
Keith

Remuneration of Teachers Act

Mr. Cartwright asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what consideration he has given to the proposals made to him by the Professional Association of Teachers for amending the Remuneration of Teachers Act.

Sir Keith Joseph: I replied to the Professional Association of Teachers' proposals on 4 December 1985. I am sending the hon. Member copies of the correspondence.

Teachers (Pay)

Mr. Cartwright asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether, further to his reply of 6 December 1985, Official Report, columns 363-4, he has yet received any detailed submissions from the local authority associations on the reform of the teachers' pay machinery.

Sir Keith Joseph: I am now considering a submission which the local authority associations and the local authorities' conditions of service advisory board sent me on 3 February 1986.

Teacher Training

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what plans he has to extend the postgraduate certificate in education course for teacher training from one year to two years.

Mr. Chris Patten: None.

Higher Education

Mr. Nicholas Winterton asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science how many Republic of Ireland residents have obtained places in undergraduate courses in universities and colleges in England and Wales in the last five years for which figures are available; and what has been the estimated cost to the Exchequer.

Mr. Walden: The numbers of first degree students from the Republic of Ireland on university, polytechnic and college courses in England and Wales and the estimated cost to public funds in each of the last five years were:

	Number of students	Cost to public funds £ million*
1980-81	124	0·3
1981-82	128	0·3
1982-83	120	0·4
1983-84	113	0·4
1984-85	149	0·5

* That is the cost to local education authorities as well as to the Exchequer.

Schools (Capital Allocations)

Mr. Steen asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science (1) what is the capital allocation for 1986-87 for wholly supported schools in the public sector in Devon;

(2) what is the capital allocation for voluntary aided schools in Devon for 1986-87, expressed (a) in total and (b) as a percentage of the total money made available in Devon by way of capital allocation for education;

(3) what is the capital allocation for 1986-87 for wholly supported schools in the public sector in Cornwall;

(4) what is the capital allocation for voluntary aided schools in Cornwall for 1986-87, expressed (a) in total and (b) as a percentage of the total money made available in Cornwall by way of capital allocation for education.

(5) what is the capital allocation for 1986-87 for wholly supported schools in the public sector in Somerset;

(6) what is the capital allocation for voluntary aided schools in Somerset for 1986-87, expressed (a) in total and (b) as a percentage of the total money made available in Somerset by way of capital allocation for education;

(7) what is the capital allocation for 1986-87 for wholly supported schools in the public sector in Avon;

(8) what is the capital allocation for voluntary aided schools in Avon for 1986-87, expressed (a) in total and (b) as a percentage of the total money made available in Avon by way of capital allocation for education;

(9) what is the capital allocation for 1986-87 for wholly supported schools in the public sector in Dorset;

(10) what is the capital allocation for voluntary aided schools in Dorset for 1986-87, expressed (a) in total and (b) as a percentage of the total money made available in Dorset by way of capital allocation for education;

(11) what is the capital allocation for 1986-87 for wholly supported schools in the public sector in Wiltshire;

(12) what is the captial allocation for voluntary aided schools in Wiltshire for 1986-87, expressed (a) in total and (b) as a percentage of the total money made available in Wiltshire by way of capital allocation for education;

(13) what is the capital allocation for 1986-87 for wholly supported schools in the public sector in Lancashire;

(14) what is the capital allocation for voluntary aided schools in Lancashire for 1986-87, expressed (a) in total and (b) as a percentage of the total money made available in Lancashire by way of capital allocation for education;

(15) what is the capital allocation for 1986-87 for wholly supported schools in the public sector in Lincolnshire;

(16) what is the capital allocation for voluntary aided schools in Lincolnshire for 1986-87, expressed (a) in total and (b) as a percentage of the total money made available in Lincolnshire by way of capital allocation for education.

Mr. Dunn: I shall reply to my hon. Friend as soon as possible.

School Meals

Mr. Madel asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether he proposes to obtain and publish statistics on the take-up of school meals in maintained schools in England for the school year 1985-86.

Sir Keith Joseph: A census of the take-up of school meals in local education authorities in England is normally held annually in October. However it was not possible to collect representative figures in October and figures collected at a different time in the year would not be comparable with those for earlier years. Local education authorities are however being asked, as usual, for information on their prices and the use of their discretionary powers.

EMPLOYMENT

Community Programme (Employees' Wages)

Mr. Steel asked the Paymaster General (1) what representations he has received on the review of the average wage for community programme employees;

(2) when the review of the average wage for community programme employees will be complete; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lang: A number of representations have been received from hon. Members and others. We keep under continuous review the level of the average wage and other approved costs which can be reimbursed under the community programme and make changes whenever this would improve the cost effective use of taxpayers' money.

Labour Statistics

Mr. Terlezki asked the Paymaster General what steps he is taking to seek to reduce over-recording in the monthly unemployment count.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: I have announced today that, at the request of the Department's statisticians, I have agreed that the compilation and publication of the monthly unemployment statistics will take place some two weeks later than at present. The changes will produce a more accurate count of unemployed claimants and enable a more complete view to be taken of latest labour market developments. The revised arrangements will be introduced for the March figures, which will now be published on 16 April. Details of the reasons for the change have been placed in the Library.

DEFENCE

International Military Services

Mr. Pavitt asked the Secretary of State for Defence who is the present non-executive Chairman of the International Military Services; and when he was appointed.

Mr. Norman Lamont: Mr. K. H. Walley, 10 April 1985.

Anti-tank Weapons

Mr. Best asked the Secretary of State for Defence what proposals he has for Swingfire and for the further provision of long range anti-tank weapons for armoured units; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Norman Lamont: Swingfire missiles, mounted on Striker CVR(T) vehicles, are planned to remain in service with armoured reconnaissance regiments until replaced by Long Range TRIGAT from the mid-1990s. However, we have concluded that retention of Swingfire mounted on the older FV 438 vehicle would not be the best use of resources, and have decided that it should be withdrawn from service this year.

Tanks

Mr. Best asked the Secretary of State for Defence what plans he has to seek to increase the number of tanks in use for training purposes; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Norman Lamont: The provision of tanks in use for training is reviewed from time to time taking into account, inter alia, the changing balance of the fleet with the introduction of Challenger. The introduction of Challenger is releasing front-line Chieftains for other possible tasks and this may permit the redeployment of some to training tasks.

RAF Establishments

Mr. Michael McNair-Wilson asked the Secretary of State for Defence how many RAF establishments there are in the United Kingdom and overseas; and what is his estimate of the value of their buildings, facilities and stores.

Mr. Norman Lamont: The number of establishments in which the Royal Air Force has the major interest is at present 128, comprising 57 RAF airfields in the United Kingdom and 10 overseas and 57 other RAF stations in the United Kingdom and four overseas. These figures exclude RAF units operating from non-RAF locations and stations in which the RAF does not have the major interest. No estimate is readily available on the value of RAF buildings, facilities and stores and the assembly of this information would involve a disproportionate amount of effort in both the Ministry of Defence and the Property Services Agency.

Strategic Defence Initiative

Mr. Dalyell asked the Secretary of State for Defence if, pursuant to the answer of 14 January, Official Report, column 912, he will list those aspects of the strategic defence initiative which were discussed at the meeting between his Department's officials and Dr. Thompson of the department of artificial intelligence at Edinburgh university on 20 December 1985; what specific response his officials made to the points raised by Dr. Thompson regarding the attainability of appropriate physical and spatial conditions for testing certain aspects of strategic defence initiative research; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Norman Lamont: The discussion between officials and Dr. Thompson on 20 December 1985 identified the topics on which a further meeting with a group of staff from the department of artificial intelligence at Edinburgh university might concentrate. It was not the purpose of the meeting on 20 December to give responses to the points raised by Dr. Thompson.

Mr. Dalyell asked the Secretary of State for Defence when he expects the strategic defence initiative office to write to university vice-chancellors outlining areas of research of interest to strategic defence initiative planners; what form the letters will take; what discussions have already taken place with universities about an outline list of research projects; what will be the deadline for universities to submit proposals; and when he expects contracts to be awarded.

Mr. Norman Lamont: Universities will be kept fully informed along with other interested parties of opportunities for participation in the SDI research programme by correspondence and by the activities of the Department of Education and Science representative working within the SDI participation office in the Ministry of Defence. There are no deadlines in this process. The award of contracts will be determined by such factors as the nature and strength of any interest that is shown by individual universities and their capabilities in the relevant fields.

Mr. Dalyell asked the Secretary of State for Defence what precise role the United Kingdom strategic defence initiative office will play in channelling contracts either with commercial companies involved in strategic defence initiative work or with the strategic defence initiative office in Washington; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Norman Lamont: The United Kingdom strategic defence initiative participation office, working together with Ministry of Defence staffs in the British Embassy, Washington, is available to help British companies obtain contracts in the US SDI research programme, within the context of the memorandum of understanding signed on 6 December 1985. As part of this process close contacts will be maintained with the US SDI organisation.

Mr. Dalyell asked the Secretary of State for Defence what information he has about the implications for the scope, nature and costs of strategic defence initiative-related research in United Kingdom institutions of proposals arising from the American strategic defence initiative programme for the development of optical sensors, tracking devices and advanced electronic systems; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Norman Lamont: As for all technologies open to the United Kingdom for participation through the SDI research programmes there are opportunities for considerable advances. Those potentially involved will take into account such benefits and the resource implications of undertaking such work.

Mr. Dalyell asked the Secretary of State for Defence what information he has about the scope, objectives and cost of an SDI-related contract with Heriot Watt university for work on optical processing; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Norman Lamont: The contract in question, of which I am aware, is a commercial matter between the parties concerned.

Mr. Dalyell asked the Secretary of State for Defence what information he has about the nature and purpose of approaches by the United States Navy to Brunel university regarding SDI-related research into laser gyroscopes; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Norman Lamont: I am aware of a general interest in the matter referred to, as one of many likely to feature as a possibility for United Kingdom participation in SDI research.

Mr. Dalyell asked the Secretary of State for Defence what information he has about approaches by the United States strategic defence initiative office to United Kingdom institutions regarding possible research into X-ray lasers, high powered optical scans, laser communications, short wavelength lasers, composite materials, rocket fuels, electrochemical power sources, and the effect of clouds on beams; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Norman Lamont: The arrangements between the United States and United Kingdom Governments provide the opportunity for United Kingdom participation in SDI research in a number of advanced areas, of which some examples have been placed in the Library. The Ministry of Defence will assist United Kingdom companies or institutions who wish to participate in such research and have the capability to do so.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Anglo-Irish Agreement

Sir John Biggs-Davison asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what formal contacts he has had with representatives of the Unionist parties since the conclusion of the Anglo-Irish agreement.

Mr. Tom King: I attended a meeting between the Prime Minister and a delegation from the Northern Ireland Assembly on Monday 25 November 1985. I regret that I have had no other formal contact. While I have made clear to the leaders of the Unionist parties that I am very ready to meet them at any time to hear their views on any of the issues discussed by the intergovernmental conference or on any other major policy question, I regret that they have not yet been able to accept my invitation.

Belfast Education and Library Board

Mr. Bell asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland (1) what was the total Government budget allocation to the Belfast education and library board for each year since 1979, and the budget allocation for 1986-87;

(2) what effect the £1·6 million cut in the budget allocation to the Belfast education and library board will have on the level of provision by the board of (a) nursery schools and (b) nursery units.

Dr. Mawhinney: I shall reply to the hon. Member as soon as possible.

Housing Budget

Mr. Bell asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland (1) what provisions are being made for the Northern Ireland Housing Executive waiting list in light of the £44 million cutback in the 1986-87 housing budget;

(2) what efforts are being taken to eliminate the 10·4 per cent. of housing in Northern Ireland deemed statutorily unfit by the Northern Ireland Housing Executive.

Mr. Needham: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave to his question about housing finance in Northern Ireland on 29 January 1986. Measures to meet housing need and to improve housing conditions in Northern Ireland will continue to include new housebuilding in the private sector, including shared ownership under the co-ownership scheme, new housebuilding and improvements of existing dwellings by the Northern Ireland Housing Executive and by housing associations, and improvements in the private sector with the assistance of house renovation grants.

Mr. Bell asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what effect the £44 million cutback in the 1986-87 housing budget will have on jobs in the construction industry.

Mr. Needham: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave to his question about jobs in the construction industry on 29 January 1986 at column 544. This remains the position.

Mr. Bell asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland (1) how many planned new home constructions will be cancelled due to the £44 million cutback in the 1986-87 housing budget;

(2) how many planned rehabilitation and major home improvement schemes will be cancelled due to the £44 million cutback in the 1986-87 housing budget;

(3) to what extent improvement work on Northern Ireland Housing Executive homes will be discontinued due to the cutback in the 1986-87 housing budget.

Mr. Needham: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave to his question about housing finance in Northern Ireland on 29 January 1986 at column 544. It is for the Northern Ireland Housing Executive to propose in the first instance how the resources available to it in 1986-87 should be distributed over its capital and revenue programmes. I await the submission of its proposals for approval. Decisions about individual schemes within approved programmes are matters for the Housing Executive.

Mr. Bell asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland (1) how many new homes will be built in Northern Ireland by the Housing Executive outside of Belfast in 1986-87;

(2) how many new homes will be built in Northern Ireland by the Housing Executive in 1986-87 in (a) Fermanagh, (b) Cookstown, (c) Omagh and (d) Dungannon council areas.

Mr. Needham: Until the Housing Executive has completed work on its budgets and programmes for 1986-87 and obtained my Department's approval it will not be possible to provide the information requested. I shall write to the hon. Member when the full details are available from the Housing Executive.

Labour Statistics

Mr. Bell asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland (1) what was the total number of unemployment benefit claimants, the percentage of the work force unemployed and the number of new unemployment benefit claimants in December and January;

(2) What was the total number of male unemployment benefit claimants, the percentage of the male work force unemployed and the number of new male unemployment benefit claimants in December and January.

Dr. Boyson: The information is as follows:

Unemployed claimants in Northern Ireland

	*Number		Unemployment Rate (per cent)†		New Claimants‡
	Total	Males	Total	Males	Total	Males
December 1985	121,470	88,605	20·9	26·7	10,404	6,545
January 1986	125,705	91,591	21·6	27·6	10,495	6,262

* Figures relate to all unemployed claimants i.e. unemployed people claiming unemployment benefit, supplementary benefit and National Insurance credits.

† The unemployment rate is calculated as the number unemployed as a percentage of employees in employment plus the unemployed.

‡ Figures on new claimants relate to the 4 weeks prior to the count dates on 12.12.85 and 9.1.86.

Mr. Bell asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what was the number of people unemployed in Northern Ireland for (a) more than three months, (b) more than one year and (d) more than two years.

Dr. Boyson: The figures are:

Unemployed Claimants in Northern Ireland at 9 January 1986

Duration of Unemployment	*Number
(a) More than 3 months	100,191
(b) More than 6 months	80,587
(c) More than 1 year	60,317
(d) More than 2 years	40,826

* Figures are not mutually exclusive; for example those unemployed more than 1 year are included in the number unemployed more than 3 months.

SCOTLAND

Education Expenditure

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list in the Official Report the level of education spending by his Department for each of the last five years expressed as a proportion of the gross domestic product.

Mr. Allan Stewart: The information is given in the following table:

Percentage of Scottish GDP represented by Central Government expenditure on education within the responsibility of the Secretary of State

Year	Percentage
1980-81	1·07
1981-82	1·07
1982-83	0·96
1983-84	0·91
1984-85	0·88

Examination Markers

Mr. Kennedy asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list in the Official Report the number of Scottish Certificate of Education examination markers appointed for the 1986 diet of examinations in the following categories (a) full-time teachers, (b) part-time teachers, (c) retired teachers, (d) lecturers, and (e) retired lecturers.

Mr. Allan Stewart: I have asked the Scottish Examination Board to write to the hon. Member with this information as soon as possible.

Road Schemes

Sir Russell Johnston asked the Secretary of State for Scotland why 1/2500 scale engineering drawings of road schemes in Scotland are not provided to objectors who request them.

Mr. Ancram: The Scottish Development Department displays engineering drawings at public exhibitions of road proposals and makes them available for discussion at consultations with objectors. However, they are not provided to objectors for retention because of the very considerable expenditure which this would involve, though a request to furnish them on payment would always be considered.

Sir Russell Johnston asked the Secretary of State for Scotland why feasibility studies for roads are not provided on request to objectors to road proposals in Scotland.

Mr. Ancram: Feasibility studies form an early stage in the consideration of options leading to the publication by the Scottish Development Department relating to a preferred route. While my officials are always prepared to provide information from them, where possible, in reply to specific inquiries from objectors, it would both be costly and in our view unjustifiably widen local uncertainty to make such studies available in full.

Sir Russell Johnston asked the Secretary of State for Scotland whether there are items of information which his Department does not provide on request to objectors to trunk road proposals in Scotland which are provided on request to objectors to trunk road schemes in England and Wales after publication of a line order.

Mr. Ancram: This will require consultation with the Department and my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Transport. I shall reply to the hon. Member as soon as I am in a position to do so.

Sir Russell Johnston asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will review the position in regard to provision of information to objectors to trunk road schemes in Scotland to bring it into line with practice in England and Wales.

Mr. Ancram: The Scottish Development Department takes account of the relevant procedures of other trunk road authorities in normal course, but if the hon. Member has any particular point in mind perhaps he would write to me about it.

Sir Russell Johnston asked the Secretary of State for Scotland whether his Department uses the Department of Transport manual of environmental appraisal in road appraisal.

Mr. Ancram: Yes. The manual is used when it is considered appropriate.

Higher Education

Mr. Nicholas Winterton asked the Secretary of State for Scotland how many Republic of Ireland residents have obtained places in undergraduate courses in universities and colleges in Scotland in the last five years for which figures are available; and what has been the estimated cost to the Exchequer.

Mr. Allan Stewart: The numbers of undergraduate students from the Republic of Ireland in universities and colleges in Scotland in the last five years and the estimated cost to the Exchequer are given in the following table:

	Students from the Republic of Ireland on Undergraduate Courses in Scotland
	Number of Students	Estimated cost to Exchequer in that year £
1980-81	13	36,000
1981-82	16	46,000

Abortions

Mr. Willie W. Hamilton asked the Secretary of State for Scotland how many legal abortions were carried out in Scotland in each year since 1968; how many were in National Health Service premises; how many in approved clinics; and how many there were in each health region.

Mr. John MacKay: The available information is set out in the table:

Mr. Willie W. Hamilton asked the Secretary of State for Scotland how many beds were approved for non-National Health Service abortions in each of the health regions for each year from 1968 to 1985.

Mr. John MacKay: The information is set out in the table. No beds have been approved in the other health board areas.

Cervical Screening

Mr. Willie W. Hamilton asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will publish a table showing for each hospital board area in Scotland the availability of cervical smear services; and how far they are meeting demand.

Mr. John MacKay: All Scottish health boards provide facilities for the screening of cervical smears, and priority is given to patients when a smear is required on clinical grounds. Due to an increasing demand for routine smears, backlogs have occurred in one or two areas and the health boards concerned are considering what steps to take to reduce the delays that have arisen because of this.

Patient Statistics

Mr. Strang asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what were (a) the total number of patients, (b) the number in each of the following age ranges (i) under two years, (ii) two to four years, (iii) five to nine years, (iv) 10 to 15 years, (v) 16 to 18 years, (vi) 19 to 64 years, (vii) 65 to 74 years and (viii) 75 years plus, (c) the number of patients per 100,000 population and (d) the number of persons under 16 years; what is (e) the number of persons aged under 16 years per 100,000 population, (f) the number of adults over 16 years of age and (g) the number of adults over 16 years of age per 100,000 population in hospitals for the mentally handicapped in Scotland for each year from 1976 to 1986-87, giving estimated figures where actual figures are not yet available.

Mr. John MacKay: This information is as follows:

Community Residential Places

Mr. Strang asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what were the number of community residential places in Scotland for each year from 1976 to 1986-87, giving estimated figures where actual figures are not yet available; and if he will also give (a) the total number of residents, (b) the number of residents per 100,000 of the population and (c) the number of residents in each of the following age ranges: under two years, two to four years, five to nine years, 10 to 15 years, 16 to 18 years, 19 to 64 years, 65 to 74 years, and 75 plus years.

Mr. John MacKay: The totals of residential places and residents are as follows. The figures in table 1 reflect the way in which figures were made available for separate groups before data were computerised in 1980. It is not possible to provide realistic estimates for 1986 and 1987.

Costains (Yorkhill Contract)

Mr. Dewar asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will now give any estimate of the finishing date of the arbitration between the Greater Glasgow health board and Costains Ltd. over the extension to the hospital for sick children at Yorkhill, Glasgow.

Mr. Rifkind: The matters under arbitration are extremely complex and many factors may influence the length of time likely to be required. No estimate of a finishing date can prudently be offered at this stage.

Mr. Dewar asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what sum was spent in 1984-85 and what sum is provided for 1985-86 and for 1986-87 in the accounts of the Greater Glasgow health board to cover costs of repairs and remedial work to the sick children's hospital, Yorkhill, Glasgow, following the extension to the building constructed by Richard Costain (Construction) Ltd.

Mr. Rifkind: £106,204 was spent in 1984-85. It is estimated that the total for 1985-86 will be £146,500. No further expenditure is expected.

Mr. Dewar asked the Secretary of State for Scotland whether the current three-year lease on accommodation at Amicable House, 71 George street, in connection with the arbitration between the Greater Glasgow health board and Costains, is being renewed by central legal services; and if he will detail the rent and rates paid during this lease by the parties to the arbitration.

Mr. Rifkind: It is intended to renew the lease for a further period. The cost of rents and rates, shared equally by the parties to the arbitration are:

	Rent £	Rates £
1983-84	3,570	2,575
1985-86	8,000	6,175

Mr. Dewar asked the Secretary of State for Scotland on how many days the present arbitrator has sat re-hearing evidence first led before Mr. K. Cameron, QC before his appointment as Lord Advocate in connection with the dispute between the Greater Glasgow health board and Costains over the extension to the sick children's hospital at Yorkhill, Glasgow.

Mr. Rifkind: Four.

Mr. Dewar asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what sum was spent in 1984-85 and what provision has been made for 1985-86 and 1986-87 in respect of central legal services for the arbitration between the Greater Glasgow Health Board and Costains arising from work on the sick children's hospital at Yorkhill, Glasgow; and how many staff in central legal services are engaged in the case.

Mr. Rifkind: £218,341 was spent in 1984-85. The allocation made to the Common Services Agency for the current financial year includes £502,000 for costs which might arise in connection with the arbitration. An allocation in respect of 1986-87 will be made shortly in the light of requirements.

Three of the agency's legal staff are engaged on the case. The number of staff supporting them varies from time to time.

Mr. Dewar asked the Secretary of State for Scotland on how many days the arbiter has sat in connection with the dispute between Richard Costain (Construction) Ltd. and the Greater Glasgow health board over the extension to the sick children's hospital, Glasgow since the first procedural hearing in May 1980; and on how many of these days evidence was taken.

Mr. Rifkind: The number of days is 137, on 114 of which evidence was taken.

Mr. Dewar asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if any tender or offer in settlement has been made in connection with the current arbitration between the Greater Glasgow health board and Costains Ltd. arising from work carried out on the hospital for sick children at Yorkhill, Glasgow.

Mr. Rifkind: Since the arbiter is considering the issues of liability and damage arising between the Greater Glasgow health board and Costains and these matters may in that sense be considered sub judice, it would be inappropriate for me to comment.

Physics Teaching

Mr. Dalyell asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will publish his correspondence with Mr. J. T. Jardine, chairman of the joint working party in physics for standard grade, concerning physics teaching in Scotland.

Mr. Allan Stewart: With Mr. Jardine's agreement, I am placing in the Library copies of his letter of 8 February to my right hon. and learned Friend and of the Scottish Education Department's response.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Common Agricultural Policy

Mr. Deakins asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what action Her Majesty's Government are taking to seek to secure proper management of the European Economic Community common agricultural policy; which European Economic Community institution is responsible for common agricultural policy management; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Jopling: Day-to-day management of the commodity regimes under the common agricultural policy is undertaken by the European Commission acting under powers given to it in regulations adopted by the Council of Ministers. These regulations require in many instances that drafts of its management regulations should first be put to the management committee on which member states' Governments are represented. If the management committee should give a negative opinion (expressed by qualified majority) the matter would normally be considered by the Council. The Commission's actions are also subject to scrutiny by the European Court of Auditors and to questioning by the European parliament.

In general the problems in the operation of the CAP have arisen not from the detailed management of the policy by the Commission but because the Council in taking decisions, especially on support prices, has not responded sufficiently to trends in agricultural production, and as a result surpluses have emerged which are difficult and costly to dispense of.

The United Kingdom Government will continue to press for a more market orientated and rational CAP which in the long term is in the interests of producers, as well as consumers and taxpayers.

Sweetening Agents

Mr. Coombs asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is the latest information available to him on the consumption per capita in the United Kingdom of sucrose, glucose and other calorific sweetening agents.

Mrs. Fenner: The latest readily available information for the United Kingdom is as follows:

*Supplies moving into human consumption† 1984

	kg/head
Sucrose‡	38·0
Glucose‖	7·9
Other calorific sweetening agents	¶

* Provisional.

† Actual consumption will be less because of wastage and some will be in the form of manufactured foods. National food survey estimates for 1984 indicate household purchases of refined sugar at 13·5 kg/head.

‡ Includes an estimate for the sucrose content of net imports of manufactured foods but excludes sucrose used in the production of alcoholic drinks.

‖ Including glucose syrups.

¶ Supplies are relatively small and food use is restricted mainly to incorporation into diabetic foods.

Channel Tunnel

Mr. John Browne asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if, pursuant to the answer of 27 January, Official Report, column 404, he will make a statement as to the practical arrangements to be insisted on by Her Majesty's Government to combat the risk of the spread of rabies to the United Kingdom through the proposed Channel tunnel specifically by rats and bats.

Mrs. Fenner: The Government will require in the forthcoming discussions with the operators of the Channel fixed link adequate physical and other practical measures to minimise the risk of introducing rabies into this country. The specific arrangements which will be introduced will depend upon the outcome of the discussions.

Surplus Foodstuffs

Mr. Teddy Taylor asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is the total tonnage of foodstuffs of all kinds, collectively, in private or public intervention in the European Economic Community; and what was the collective total around the same date in each of the previous 10 years, respectively.

Mr. Jopling [pursuant to his reply, 17 February 1986, c. 2]: The information requested is set out in the table below:

*Year	Million tonnes

SOCIAL SERVICES

Stanley Royd Hospital

Mr. Harrison asked the Secretary of State for Social Services, pursuant to his statement of 21 January, Official Report, column 193, on the report of the enquiry into the salmonella poisoning outbreak at Stanley Royd hospital, Wakefield, if he will make a statement on his discussions with the district and regional health authority chairmen concerned and on the action which they have been asked to take as a result.

Mr. Hayhoe: My right hon. Friend and I had meetings with the chairman of Yorkshire regional health authority and the chairman of Wakefield health authority on 23 January. The main purposes of the meetings were to emphasise the seriousness of what had occurred and our determination that there should be no recurrence. They gave their commitment to making speedy reports of action taken and to be taken by both authorities on all matters in the report calling for responses.

Pharmacists

Mr. Kennedy asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what action he intends to take following discussions which his Department is having with representatives of pharmacists concerning excess profits accruing to certain pharmacists through the importation and sale of discounted drugs; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Pavitt asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will make a statement about the monitoring of payments made to dispensing pharmacists in the light of the information sent to him by the hon. Member for Brent, South.

Mr. Hayhoe: Retail pharmacists are reimbursed the cost of the drugs they use in dispensing National Health Service presciptions. Each receives the actual wholesale cost of the drug used less a stratified average discount which the pharmacist is deemed to be able to obtain.

The amount of the discount deduction is established by periodic statistical inquiries. The last such inquiry took place in 1981. My Department has already initiated discussions with the pharmacists' representatives, the Pharmaceutical Services Negotiating Committee, about a further enquiry which would identify all the various forms of discount available in the market.

Social Security Reform

Mr. Freud asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what representations he has received concerning the proposals in the White Paper on social security as they affect students.

Mr. Newton: Since publication of the White Paper we have received approximately 346 written representations and inquiries regarding these proposals.

Child Prostitution

Mr. Alexander asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will make a statement on the provision made for the rehabilitation of children involved in prostitution.

Mr. Whitney: Statutory and voluntary organisations provide a variety of services for children in need including those involved in prostitution. These would include counselling, family support and sometimes specialist accommodation.

Homelessness and Children in Care

Mr. Boyes asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what study his Department has made of the relationship between homelessness and the reception of children into care.

Mr. Whitney: The Department has a continuing active programme of research into child care matters. Research into the possible links between homelessness, bad housing and reception of children into care has to be considered in the light of competing demands for limited resources. A study by Dr. Packman of Exeter university just completed included amongst other variables the housing situation of a sample of children entering care and of children considered for care but not received at that time. There are no plans for additional research in this area at present.

North-East Thames RHA (Capital Works)

Mr. Proctor asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what is the value of the major capital works undertaken and currently planned in the last five years by the North-East Thames regional health authority; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Whitney: The value of major capital schemes, each costing over £5 million, completed in the North-East Thames region during the period 1981-85 is £63·4 million.

At present, the estimated value of such schemes either in planning or under construction is £56 million.

Hospital Building Programme

Mr. Holt asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he has any plans to accelerate the current hospital building programme.

Mr. Hayhoe: One of the Government's priorities for the National Health Service is the continuing development and modernisation of health service buildings. A substantial capital investment of £765 million in 1986-87 rising to £805 million in 1988-89 is being provided for this purpose, and this sum will be supplemented by the proceeds of sales of surplus land and buildings which health authorities will retain. These receipts are expected to increase markedly from the current level of £50 million a year. Higher investment together with improved value for money is bringing tangible benefits to patients—new hospitals and the refurbishment and upgrading of existing buildings.

At present in England 147 hospital schemes costing over £2 million each are being planned, designed or built which represents a commitment by the Government of over £1 billion. This programme will provide new hospital facilities in every region in the country.

Geriatric Care

Mr. Irving asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will make a statement on the current provision of geriatric care within the National Health Service, both nationally and in the county of Gloucestershire.

Mr. Whitney: Since 1978 expenditure on National Health Service care for elderly people has increased by over 20 per cent. in real terms. The specialty of geriatric medicine continues to expand—between 1978 and 1984 the numbers of consultant geriatricians and nurses working in departments of geriatric medicine increased by 34 per cent. and 18 per cent. respectively and the numbers of elderly persons treated as hospital inpatients and as outpatients increased by 47 per cent. and 35 per cent. respectively.

The South-Western regional health authority's strategic plan requires district authorities to give priority to the development of services for elderly people over the next 10 years. My hon. Friend may wish to contact the chairman of the Gloucester health authority and the Cheltenham and district health authority for details of current and planned provision in Gloucestershire.

Limited List Prescribing

Sir Peter Hordern asked the Secretary of State for Social Services whether he has had representations from the Pharmaceutical Manufacturers Association of the United States of America about the limited list of drugs prescribed in the United Kingdom; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hayhoe: The Department's policy on the selected list has been discussed at meetings between the Pharmaceutical Manufacturers Association and Ministers and officials. I have emphasised, and believe the association has accepted, that it was not intended to discriminate in any way against United States-owned companies, nor indeed against any other companies.

Hospitals (Hygiene Standards)

Mrs. Dunwoody asked the Secretary of State for Social Services whether he has estimated the cost of bringing National Health Service hospitals up to present public health standards; and whether he will make new money available for this purpose.

Mr. Hayhoe: I assume the hon. Member is referring to the standards required by the food hygiene legislation. On estimates of costs, I refer the hon. Member to my reply to the right hon. Member for Stoke on Trent, South (Mr. Ashley) on 4 February at column 141.

My right hon. Friend announced on 6 February at column 211 the Government's intention to bring forward legislation this Session to apply the food hygiene provisions of the Food Act 1984 to health authorities. Any extra costs should be met from within health authorities' existing allocations.

Child Care Law

Mr. Charles Morrison asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many responses he has so far received to his Department's consultation on its review of child care law; and, of these, how many referred to the need to establish a family court system.

Mr. Whitney: At 17 February, comments on the "Review of Child Care Law" had been received from 170 individuals and groups. Of these, 59 made reference to the need to establish a family court.

Patient Statistics

Mr. Strang asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will give for each year from 1976 to 1986-87, giving estimated figures where actual figures are not yet available, for (a) the United Kingdom as a whole and (b) England: (i) the total number of patients, (ii) the number of patients in each of the following age ranges: under two years, two to four years, five to nine years, 10 to 15 years, 16 to 18 years, 19 to 64 years, 65 to 74 years and 75 plus years, (iii) the number of patients per 100,000 population, (iv) the number of under 16-year-olds, (v) the number of under 16-year-olds per 100,000 population, (vi) the number of adults over 16 years of age, and (vii) the number of adults over 16 years of age per 100,000 population in hospitals for the mentally handicapped.

Mr. Whitney: The available information for England is given in the tables. Statistics for the rest of the United Kingdom are a matter for my right hon. Friends the Secretaries of State for Scotland, Wales and Northern Ireland.

Community Residential Places

Mr. Strang asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what were the number of community residential places for (i) England and (ii) the United Kingdom as a whole, for each year from 1976 to 1986-87, giving estimated figures where actual figures are not yet available; and if he will also give (a) the total number of residents, (b) the number of residents per 100,000 of the population and (c) the number of residents in each of the following age ranges: under two years, two to four years, five to nine years, 10 to 15 years, 16 to 18 years, 19 to 64 years, 65 to 74 years and 75 plus years.

Mr. Whitney: Information is not available consistently in precisely the form requested but available figures for England are given in the table. Statistics for the rest of the United Kingdom are a matter for my right hon. Friends the Secretaries of State for Scotland, Wales and Northern Ireland.

Nuclear Defence Establishments (Diseases)

Mr. Michael McNair-Wilson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services whether any causal link has been established among people of all ages living near nuclear defence establishments and known diseases.

Mr. Hayhoe: I am advised that there is no such established causal link.

Heart Disease

Mr. Coombs asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what was the cost to the National Health Service of coronary heart disease for the last year to a convenient date; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Whitney: I shall let my hon. Friend have a reply as soon as possible.

Income Support

Mr. Kirkwood asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how much extra expenditure his Department would incur using the illustrative figures published in the technical annex to Cmnd. 9691, if the income support personal allowance for single people aged 18 to 24 years were £30·60 per week.

Mr. Newton [pursuant to his reply, 5 February 1986, c. 189-90]: I regret that my answer contained some incorrect information. The minimum extra cost of increasing the income support personal allowance in the way proposed by the hon. Member would be of the order of £200 million to £250 million, and not £30 million to £40 million as stated in my reply.

NHS Expenditure

Mr. Meacher asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what has been the percentage cumulative growth of National Health Service expenditure each year since 1979 (a) in retail price index terms, (b) in terms of National Health Service pay and prices and (c) after taking account of the annually growing demand for health services; if he will give actual expenditure figures each year both in current and constant price terms in accordance with each of these three criteria; and if he will state the level of planned expenditure savings each year, both in current and constant price terms, together with the evidence on which these expenditure savings claims are based.

Mr. Hayhoe [pursuant to his reply, 6 February 1986, c. 217]: The tables following provide the information for which the hon. Member asked at (a) and (b) but it is not appropriate to measure NHS expenditure by reference to movements in the retail price index; the appropriate measure of inflationary pressures in the economy as a whole is the GDP deflator.

Percentage cumulative growth of National Health Service Expenditure since 1979-80

* Expenditure figures adjusted to reflect classification changes following the establishment of the NHS Management Board and the changed status of Family Practitioner Committees.
† Not yet calculable.

Part (c) of the question cannot readily be answered on comparable basis. Expenditure on family practitioner services has been increased on line with demand. As for hospital and community health services, it is estimated that between 1979-80 and 1985-86 demand has risen by 4 per cent. as a result of demographic changes. These services have also accommodated the effects of medical advance. They have done so by improved efficiency, a factor which with authorities' growing cost improvement programmes is playing an increasing part also in developing services and remedying existing deficiencies. Such improvements are not, as the question implies, expenditure savings, since more clinical activities are enabled to be financed from a given level of resources. The following table presents the estimated efficiency savings and planned cost improvements that have been achieved since 1981-82.

Health and Community Health Services Cost Improvements £ Million

	Cash equivalent	in terms of Retail Price Index (1984-85)	in terms of HCHS pay and prices (1984-85)
1981-82	15	18	18
1982-83	25	27	28
1983-84	42	44	44
1984-85	107	107	107

* Not yet calculable.

The figures for 1981-82 and 1982-83 are taken from regional health authorities' reports on cash savings achieved. In 1983-84 all RHAs were expected to achieve efficiency savings of some 0·5 per cent., but my Department did not call for detailed reports of achievement. From 1984-85 it has been the practice that RHAs agree cost improvement programmes before the year begins and report on their achievement. The totals planned for 1984-85 were delivered and those for 1985-86 are on course.

Single Payments

Mr. Meadowcroft asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will publish in the Official Report comparable statistics on the total amount paid out in single payments to claimants in different areas, based on the smallest convenient geographical areas, and on the most recent convenient dates.

Mr. Major [pursuant to his reply, 10 February 1986, c. 364-5]: The table giving the information requested by the hon. Member has now been placed in the Library.

ENVIRONMENT

Local Authority Employees (Overtime)

6. Mr. Fallon asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what estimate he has made of the total cost of overtime worked by local authority employees.

Mrs. Rumbold: The information is not collected centrally.

Sunderland District Council (Housing)

15. Mr. Clay asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what has been his Department's allocation, at current prices, to Sunderland district council for housing expenditure for each year since 1979; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John Patten: Sunderland's housing investment programme allocation for 1986-87 is £5 million, the same figure as in 1985-86. At 1985-86 prices, the allocations for the previous years since 1978-79 have been as follows: £20·1 million, £17·1 million, £12·6 million, £6·4 million, £9·5 million £7·6 million, £6·5 million. As the volume of council house sales has increased local authorities have been able to add to their spending power by drawing on their capital receipts. In the last financial year Sunderland's actual expenditure was £14·3 million — more than double the HIP allocation.

Local Authority Housebuilding

16. Mr. Fatchett asked the Secretary of State for the Environment how many houses were completed by local authorities in the years 1979 and 1985.

Sir George Young: Local authorities completed 67,000 dwellings in 1979. The provisional estimate for 1985 is 22,000.

Homesteading

17. Mr. Steen asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what is Her Majesty's Government's policy on homesteading; and if he will make a statement as to the number of units homesteaded in England and Wales in each of the last three years.

Sir George Young: We introduced homesteading to enable local authorities to dispose of substandard properties at advantageous terms, to people prepared to improve them. It remains a useful low cost route to home ownership for those who are able and willing to carry out the necessary work, which we wish to encourage.

In England for the last three financial years for which figures are available the number of disposals notified to us under Homesteading schemes has been:

	Number
1982-83	1,500
1983-84	980
1984-85	860

Homesteading in Wales is a matter for my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales.

Water Authorities (Privatisation)

18. Mr. Freeman asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations he has received following his statement to the House about the proposed privatisation of water authorities.

22. Mr. Tony Lloyd asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will indicate the number of representations he has received, respectively, in favour of and against the Government's proposals to privatise the water authorities.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: My Department has received 23 letters from organisations and others interested following publication of the White Paper. It is for those responding to publicise their views, if they so wish.

Widdicombe Inquiry

19. Mr. Phillip Oppenheim asked the Secretary of State for the Environment when he now expects the Widdicombe inquiry on local government to publish its final report.

Mr. Waldegrave: I understand that the Widdicombe committee of inquiry is aiming to submit its final report in about two months' time. The report will be published as soon as possible thereafter.

Nugee Committee (Report)

20. Sir Hugh Rossi asked the Secretary of State for the Environment when he expects to complete his consideration of the Nugee committee's recommendations on the management of privately owned blocks of flats.

46. Sir Geoffrey Finsberg asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he is now in a position to announce the Government's response to the findings of the Nugee committee on the management of privately owned blocks of flats.

Mr. John Patten: I shall announce the Government's response to this important report as soon as I have considered its recommendations in consultation with colleagues.

Council House Sales

21. Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will provide the most up-to-date figures as to the number of local authority houses and flats sold under the tenants' statutory right to buy, giving also the corresponding figures for Leicester; and if he will make a statement.

Sir George Young: A total of 496,000 dwellings, including 17,000 flats, are estimated to have been sold by local authorities in England under the right to buy between October 1980 and September 1985. A total of 4,030 houses and 10 flats were reported as sold by Leicester city council. (These figures exclude sales by agreement on terms equivalent to the right to buy).

In order to encourage the sale of flats, the Housing and Planning Bill provides for tenants buying flats to have higher discounts and better protection against unexpected service charges.

25. Mr. Knox asked the Secretary of State for the Environment how many council houses have been sold to sitting tenants since May 1979.

Sir George Young: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer I gave him on 22 January 1986, at column 225.

Defective Housing (Repair and Replacement)

23. Sir John Biggs-Davison asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement about the assistance being given by Her Majesty's Government to local housing authorities concerned with the repair and replacement of defective houses.

Mr. John Patten: Gross provision for local authority capital spending in 1986-87 has been increased by £200 million to £2,532 million, to help authorities give increasing priority to tackling the repair and renovation-work needed to their stock. In addition a new indicator, based on the results of the Department's stock condition inquiry, was introduced into the generalised needs index used to distribute housing resources for 1986-87. Particular account has also been taken of the difficulties some authorities are facing in meeting obligations under the Housing Defects Act by modifying the defective dwellings indicator within the GNI and also by distributing £30 million outside the GNI to those regions containing authorities likely to experience the greatest difficulties.

Local Government Reform

24. Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he has had any discussions with the chairman of the London Residuary Body about job prospects for Greater London council employees.

Mr. Tracey: This is one of the matters my right hon. Friend discusses with the chairman from time to time.

Tenants' Charter

26. Mr. Rooker asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he is satisfied with the operation of the consultation process within the tenants' charter; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John Patten: Local authorities are free to decide what in their opinion are matters of housing management on which they must consult their secure tenants, and on the means of consultation. I am aware that in some local authorities consultation is said to be minimal. I am keen to see the dissemination of good practices among local authorities leading to greater involvement by tenants.

"Paying for Local Government"

27. Mr. Allan Roberts asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations he has received about the Green Paper "Paying for Local Government."

28. Mr. Hirst asked the Secretary of State for the environment what reaction there has been so far from members of the public to his Department's Green Paper, "Paying for Local Government"; and if he will make a statement.

29. Mr. Patrick Thompson asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations he has had in response to publication of the Green Paper entitled "Paying for Local Government".

31. Mr. Favell asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations he has received on the proposals for non-domestic rates in the Green Paper, "Paying for Local Government".

33. Mr. Cartwright asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what initial responses he has received to the Green Paper, "Paying for Local Government" so far.

39. Mr. Sedgemore asked the Secretary of State for the Environment how many representations he has received in response to his Green Paper, "Paying for Local Government".

Mr. Waldegrave: I refer the hon. Members and my hon. Friends to the reply my hon. Friend gave earlier to my hon. Friend the Member for Northampton, North (Mr. Marlow).

50. Mr. Evans asked the Secretary of State for the Environment when he next proposes meeting the local authority associations in order to discuss the Green Paper, "Paying for Local Government".

Mr. Waldegrave: We have proposed that the Green Paper should be on the agenda for the meeting of the consultative council on local government finance on 12 March.

51. Mr. Wareing asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will now extend the consultation period in respect of the Green Paper, "Paying for Local Government".

Mr. Waldegrave: Yes. While it would still be helpful to have earlier comments, my right hon. Friend has written to the local authority associations, the Confederation of British Industry and the Association of British Chambers of Commerce informing them that, with the exception of the proposals on capital expenditure, he is prepared to extend the consultation period in England to 1 October 1986.

54. Mr. Ryman asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations he has received from local authorities in response to the proposals on capital expenditure contained in the Green Paper, "Paying for Local Government".

Mr. Waldegrave: It is too soon to assess the response. The consultation period does not close until 14 April.

62. Mr. Corbyn asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make it his policy to publish all responses to the Green Paper, "Paying for Local Government".

Mr. Waldegrave: We shall publish an analysis of the responses we have received at the end of the consultation period and place it in the Library.

Mr. Dewar asked the Secretary of State for the environment if he will give details of the studies which have led to the view on the likelihood of evasion of a community charge expressed in paragraph G.22 of the Green Paper "Paying for Local Government", Cmnd. 9714.

Mr. Waldegrave: The Green Paper acknowledges that taxes levied on immovable property are the easiest to collect. But evasion rates of other taxes such as income tax, are still low overall. While the community charge was being phased in, an element of rates would remain. This would carry over some of the operational strengths of the old system while the new system was settling down. As well as undertaking canvasses of their areas authorities would be able to draw on the many other sources of information available to them in compiling the community charge register.

Schoolchildren (Lunchtime Supervision)

30. Mr. Freud asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what advice he is giving to local authorities on disregarding for the purposes of grant penalties in 1985-86 and 1986-87 the cost of lunchtime supervision.

Mrs. Rumbold: I have received representations under section 8(4) of the Local Government Finance Act 1982 that expenditure on midday supervision during 1985-86 should be disregarded. I am considering these sympathetically. Since I have abolished targets and penalties, disregards are no longer appropriate in 1986-87.

Liverpool (Housing Programme)

32. Mr. Parry asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what discussions he has had recently with Liverpool city council about the housing programme.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: I have had no recent discussions with the city council about its housing programme. Officials of my Merseyside task force met Liverpool councillors and their officers on 12 December 1985 to discuss the council's housing investment programme. Similar meetings were held with all other housing authorities in the task force area.

Planning Consents

34. Sir John Farr asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will introduce legislation to prohibit the granting of planning consent for building in respect of land which the applicant does not own and has made no attempt to acquire.

Mr. Tracey: No. It is quite reasonable for potential developers to be able to test whether their proposals are acceptable in planning terms before seeking to acquire the land in question.

General Development Order

35. Mr. Nicholas Baker asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he has any plans to amend the general development order in such a way as to lower the current limit of 5,000 sq. ft. on the area of new agricultural buildings permitted every two years on an agricultural holding; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Tracey: No. We have published a number of proposals for changes to the general development order in respect of farm developments, but they do not include proposals to reduce the permitted size limits.

Rugby Union

36. Mr. Pendry asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he has any plans to meet officials of the Rugby Football Union and the Welsh Rugby Union.

Mr. Tracey: I have no plans for formal meetings with officials of the Rugby Football Union or the Welsh Rugby Union.

Urban Environment

37. Mr. Stern asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will take steps to encourage public sector owners of unused and unuseable land in urban areas to enter into agreements with voluntary bodies involved in investment and improvement of the environment.

Mr. John Patten: I believe that voluntary organisations have a valuable part to play in helping to bring underused public land back into use and we are already examining ways of encouraging them to do so. Towards the end of 1984 my Department set up a pilot study to identify the scope for and ways of promoting and encouraging the involvement of voluntary organisations in this task. The study covers certain British Rail sites in the north-west and south-west of England and was organised with the help of the National Council for voluntary Organisations. It is too early to reach any firm conclusions from the results so far.

Repair Grants

38. Mr. Allen McKay asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what information he has about how many local authorities are no longer accepting new applications for repair grants.

Sir George Young: Responsibility for administering the home improvement grant system rests with local authorities. We do not collate information in the form requested on the practices of individual authorities in accepting grant applications.

Council House Rents

40. Mr. Nellist asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what estimates his Department makes of the potential impact on council house rents of a reduced number of local authority dwellings leading to the servicing of debt charges by a smaller number of tenants.

Mr. John Patten: Local authorities have discretion in setting rents for their housing. Sales of local authority dwellings give rise to capital receipts which, if not used to finance new capital expenditure, can be used to pay off outstanding loan debt. Alternatively they will earn interest, which must be credited to the housing revenue account. These various factors balance each other and, although their net impact will vary from authority to authority, it is not likely to be large.

Wildlife Inspectorate

Mr. Robert Kilroy-Silk asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what were the disciplinary procedures instituted against a member of the Wildlife Inspectorate and his superior officer, referred to in the reply to the hon. Member for Newbury (Mr. McNair-Wilson) on 17 December 1985, Official Report, columns 107-8.

Mr. Waldegrave: Technically, the inspector and his superior are not civil servants. But, in the interests of equity, my department considered it right to deal with hese cases in accordance with the normal Civil Service disciplinary procedures. Accordingly, they were formally informed of the criticisms of them and offered the opportunity to respond in writing or at an interview before the decision was taken on what disciplinary action should be taken.

The inspector and his superior have accepted the findings of the departmental investigation, which were given in my reply of 17 December at columns 107-8. In the light of those findings and the Director of Public Prosecution's earlier conclusion, on the evidence available, that no criminal offence had been committed, my department considered that neither the removal of the inspector from the panel nor the termination of his superior's contract would be justified.

Disciplinary action against both men has now been taken. It is not normal Civil Service practice to disclose the details of disciplinary action.

Mr. Kilroy-Silk asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what steps he has taken to strengthen the management of the Wildlife Inspectorate following the investigation into complaints against members of the inspectorate and subsequent institution of disciplinary procedures referred to in the reply to the hon. Member for Newbury (Mr. McNair-Wilson) on 17 December 1985, Official Report, columns 107-8; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waldegrave: I have authorised the setting up of a separate administrative unit to manage the Wildlife Inspectorate. The unit will be headed by a principal reporting to a new grade 6 post and will include an enforcement co-ordinator. It will control the activities of the inspectors engaged on work under the provisions of the Wildlife and Countryside Act 1981 and the endangered species legislation. The post of the chief wildlife inspector will be filled on a long-term contract. A new post for an inspector based at Heathrow is to be created to liaise with HM Customs and Excise and provide them with expert advice. New and comprehensive instruction to inspectors are in advance of state of preparation.

As I said in my statement of the 17 December last year I am satisfied that the measures adopted will strengthen management, and improve the performance of the inspectorate in protecting birds and endangered species.

Mr. Kilroy-Silk asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will specify the nature of the enforcement duties carried out or to be carried out by the Wildlife Inspectorate, as distinct from the normal inspection duties of the inspectorate.

Mr. Waldegrave: The enforcement duties of the Wildlife Inspectorate are confined to the initial identification of cases where there is a prima facie evidence of an offence under conservation legislation, and so providing expert advice on all ornithological, zoological and botanical matters to the appropriate enforcement agency when authorised to do so by the inspectorate administrative unit.

Urban Programme

Mr. Holt asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what resources he is proposing to make available under the urban programme in 1986-87 to the non-specifically designated districts.

Mr. John Patten: Despite the great pressure on public expenditure this year, the allocation for 1986-87 for industrial and commercial projects to be carried out by the other designated districts will be the same in cash terms as that for 1985-86. The total sum available for allocation is £8 million and the provisional allocation on a regional basis is:

		£ million
Northern	Hartlepool Langbaurgh	1·55
North West	Burnley Wigan	1·10
Merseyside	Sefton St. Helens	1·10
Yorkshire and Humberside	Barnsley Doncaster Rotherham	1·85
West Midlands	Walsall	0·55
Greater London	Ealing Haringey Southwark Newham Greenwich Lewisham	1·85

Allocations to individual authorities are made subject to the quality of individual projects submitted. Additional resources, over the above allocations, will be available to these authorities for approved urban development grant schemes.

Alexandra Palace

Mr. John Fraser asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he intends to make any financial assistance towards the completion of sports facilities at Alexandra palace.

Mr. Tracey: All Government money specifically allocated to sport is channelled through the Sports Council. The council is considering currently the case for supporting some of the development at Alexandra palace. The decision is entirely for the council to take in the light of their priorities and available resources.

Royal Palaces

Mr. Willie W. Hamilton asked the Secretary of State for the Environment how much of the £69,490,000 provided for in class VIII, 4 of the Supply Estimates 1985-86 is to be spent specifically on royal palaces; and what was the comparable figure for each of the last five years.

Sir George Young: Prior to 1 April 1985, expenditure for works on the royal palaces were included in class VIII vote 4. From 1 April 1985 the works expenditure is in class XIV vote I.

Expenditure on Royal Palaces

	1985-86	1984-85	1983-84	1982-83	1981-82	1980-81
Class VIII Vote 4* £	1,306,000	8,727,000	8,231,000	7,831,000	6,715,000	5,501,000
Class XIV Vote 1 £	*8,048,000

*Provisional

Mr. Willie W. Hamilton asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will give a breakdown of the figure of £280,000 capital expenditure on royal palace furniture, and so on in 1985-86 as shown in Supply Estimates 1985-86 class VIII, 4 subhead detail.

Sir George Young: This sum was intended to include some expenditure on a new telephone exchange at Buckingham palace and the cost of furnishings and so on of the official residences of the royal household. The estimate has been revised downwards to £180,000 in the spring Supplementaries to take account of slippage in the programme for the provision of the new exchange.

Portsdown Park

Mr. Hancock asked the Secretary of State for the Environment when he will make his decision on whether to give consent to Portsmouth city council's scheme for Portsdown park.

Sir George Young: As soon as possible. Information supplementing the city council's original application reached my Department on 10 February and is being considered urgently. I hope that a response will be possible within a few days.

Tobacco Sponsorship

Mr. Macfarlane asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what contact the Minister with responsibility for sport has had with the Tobacco Advisory Committee; and if he will list the tobacco companies' representatives he has met to discuss sports sponsorship.

Mr. Tracey: I have had informal discussions with the chief executive of the Tobacco Advisory Council and with representatives of Imperial Tobacco Ltd.

Housing Improvement Programme

41. Mr. Sackville asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations he has received about the housing improvement programme allocations.

Sir George Young: My Department has received about 50 representations about the housing investment programme allocations for 1986-87.

59. Mr. Michie asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will give the housing investment programme total allocation for 1986-87 as a percentage in real terms of the allocation in 1978-79.

Sir George Young: The housing investment programme allocation total for 1986-87 is 30 per cent. in real terms of the allocation total for 1978-79. However, since 1981-82 authorities have been able to supplement their allocation by spending the prescribed proportion of their capital receipts.

Colliery Housing

42. Mr. Beith asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he has any plans to increase the amount of public assistance available for the improvement of housing built for colliery workers between 1919 and 1939; and if he will make a statement.

Sir George Young: The Government have no plans to give special assistance for the improvement of housing built for colliery workers. An application for a home improvement grant for such a house can be made to the local authority, in the same way as for other housing. Loans may be available through a European Coal and Steel Community scheme towards the costs of improving housing occupied by those working in the coal industry. Improvements may also be brought about through the involvement of a housing association or private developer.

GLC (Capital Receipts)

43. Mr. John Fraser asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statment about the allocation of capital receipts held by the Greater London council.

Mrs. Rumbold: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the answer my right hon. Friend gave on the subject of balances generally to my hon. Friend the Member for Harlow (Mr. Hayes) on 11 February.

Rating Reform

44. Mr. Leigh asked the Secretary of State for the Environment how he proposes to protect shire counties against loss of Government grant in the transition to the imposition of a community charge; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Rumbold: I am aware of the concern among shire counties but it is too early to say what the outcome of the rate support grant settlement for future years will be.

Afforestation and Nature Conservation

45. Mr. Ron Davies asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what response he has made so far to the Nature Conservancy Council's draft report on afforestation and nature conservation.

Mrs. Rumbold: I understand NCC consulted over 60 organisations about this draft report including this Department, who offered preliminary comments as part of the confidential consultation. I understand that the NCC hope to publish a final report in the spring.

Local Government Reform

47. Mr. John Hunt asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what response he has made to the representations from the London borough of Bromley regarding the level of grant payment for the upkeep of the highways to be transferred from the Greater London council to Bromley after abolition.

Mrs. Rumbold: I am consulting the local authority associations about how best to correct the problem identified by the London borough of Bromley. I hope to make a firm announcement of our intentions shortly.

Rate Support Grant

48. Mr. Stephen Ross asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what recent representations he has received from shire county councils on the rate support grant for the next financial year; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waldegrave: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave earlier today to the hon. Member for Preston (Mr. Thorne).

Local Authority Capital Expenditure

49. Mr. Soley asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he proposes introducing legislation in the current Session in respect of local authority capital expenditure.

Mrs. Rumbold: We have asked for responses on capital controls to a shorter time scale than on the other proposals in the Green Paper "Paying for Local Government" (Cmnd. 9714) so that early legislation can be sought if that seems desirable. But it would not be practicable to introduce legislation in the 1985-86 Session.

Housing Investment Programme

52. Mr. Pike asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the housing investment programme net of capital receipts for 1986-87 as a fraction in real terms of the programme for 1978-79.

Sir George Young: The net capital provision for housing investment by local authorities in 1986-87 is £1,097 million which is 32 per cent. in real terms of net capital expenditure in 1978-79. However, this comparison ignores the very large spending power which is now available to local authorities from capital receipts, and was not available in 1978-79.

Rating Reform

53. Mr. Kirkwood asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish the background studies undertaken by his Department on the feasibility of introducing a system of local government finance based on local income tax.

Mr. Waldegrave: Chapter 3 of the Green Paper summarises the reasons why we believe a local income tax would be undesirable.

Radioactive Waste Disposal

55. Mr. Wallace asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will report on the progress being made by the Nuclear Industry Radioactive Waste Executive into locating sites for the disposal of intermediate radioactive waste.

Mr. Waldegrave: The chairman of UK NIREX Ltd. wrote to my right hon. Friend on 8 January, setting out proposals for possible disposal sites for low and shorter-lived intermediate level radioactive wastes. These are currently being considered.

Improvement Grants

56. Mr. Latham asked the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he will make a statement on his policy on improvement grants, following the consultation period on the Green Paper.

Sir George Young: We are considering the comments we have received on the Green Paper, and expect to come forward with our conclusions and proposals in due course.

Home Improvement and Repair Grants

57. Mr. Galley asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what was the total public expenditure on (a) mandatory and (b) discretionary home improvement and repair grants in 1984-85; and what is the estimated expenditure for 1985-86.

Sir George Young: In 1984-85 payments on (a) mandatory grants were £126 million and (b) on discretionary grants were £608 million. Expenditure on home improvement grants in 1985-86 is expected to be around £500 million. We cannot break this estimate down between mandatory and discretionary grants.

Leasehold Flats (Management)

58. Mr. Knowles asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what recent representations he has received about statutory provisions relating to the management of leasehold blocks of flats.

Mr. John Patten: The committee on the management of privately owned blocks of flats chaired by Mr. E. C. Nugee QC presented its report on 14 November. I am considering its recommendations as quickly as possible.

Green Belt

60. Mr. Soames asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what is his policy on planning and the green belt.

Mr. Tracey: The Government's policy is set out in the Department of the Environment's circular 14/84. It confirms that planning permission should not be given, except in very special circumstances, to develop land inside a green belt for purposes other than agriculture, sport, cemeteries, institutions standing in extensive grounds and other uses appropriate to rural area.

Housing Sales (Basildon)

61. Mr. Amess asked the Secretary of State for the Environment how many houses Basildon council and development corporation have sold in each of the last four years.

Sir George Young: Dwelling sales in the years 1981-82 and 1982-83 reported by Basildon district council and development corporation appear in issues 63 and 67, respectively, of "Local Housing Statistics" and those in 1983-84 and 1984-85 are in issue 75: copies are available in the Library.

Local Government Services (Privatisation)

63. Mr. David Atkinson asked the Secretary of State for the Environment when he next plans to meet representatives of the local authorities to discuss progress on the privatisation of local government services.

Mrs. Rumbold: My right hon. Friend has at present no plans for such discussions.

Leasehold Property (Insurance)

64. Mr. Heddle asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he has any plans to introduce legislation to give residents of leasehold property the right to choose the insurer of the property.

Mr. John Patten: We are looking at the insurance of leasehold dwellings in the course of considering the recommendations of the Nugee committee on the management of privately owned blocks of flats.

Berkshire Structure Plan

65. Mr. Andrew MacKay asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations he has received in connection with his review of the Berkshire structure plan.

Mr. Tracey: A considerable number of representations has been received by my right hon. Friend both in support of and objecting to proposals in the replacement structure plan for Berkshire submitted to him by the county council on 9 January.

Rural Environment

66. Mr. Flannery asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will take steps to protect the rural environment of hedges, hedgerows, walls and the wildlife of the adjacent environment; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Rumbold: Yes. The Countryside Commission and the Nature Conservancy Council have received substantial increases in their grants-in-aid to encourage sound conservation practices. Grants are also available under the agriculture improvement scheme for environmentally positive schemes including the planting of trees and hedges, and the building of traditional walls, banks and dykes.

Local Authority Expenditure

67. Mr. Hardy asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what estimate he has of the number of local authorities which will be deemed to have exceeded approved levels of expenditure in 1986-87 and of the number of authorities which appear to be overspending in the current year.

Mrs. Rumbold: No expenditure guidance figures for individual local authorities have been issued for 1986-87. At the time of the Rate Support Grant Supplementary Report (England) No. 2, published in December 1985, 94 English authorities were budgeting to spend above their expenditure guidance in 1985-86.

Rent Arrears

Mr. Maples asked the Secretary of State for the Environment when he proposes to provide the detailed breakdown of gross rent arrears owed to each local authority, referred to in the reply given by the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for the Environment on Monday 9 December, Official Report, column 468, to the hon. Member for Dorset, North (Mr. Baker); and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John Patten: I have put this information in the Library today. The hon. Member will be aware from my hon. Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State's reply to the hon. Member for Dorset, North (Mr. Baker) on 2 December—column 59—that rent arrears owed to local authorities in England have shown an appalling and unacceptable increase: Figures provided by local authorities to my Department indicate that on 1 April 1985, rent arrears totalled about £200 million, or 5·7 per cent. of the collectable rent in 1984-85. The figures excludes rates and service charges arrears.

Of the £200 million, £49 million was owed by former tenants and £149 million by current tenants. The situation is particularly alarming in inner London where arrears amount to over £57 million, or 16 per cent. Nationally performance varies enormously between comparable authorities as the figures given below demonstrate. Many authorities have commendably low arrears figures, often less tha 1 per cent. of collectable rent.

My Department and the Audit Commission are continuing to provide advice on good management practice and on training staff, but it is the local authorities which must act urgently to tackle this problem. As the Audit Commission has pointed out ". . . good management can affect a local situation even in the most difficult circumstances. More successful authorities can often have arrears 50 per cent. or more below the level of authorities facing similar socio-economic conditions".

I will be meeting the local authority associations to discuss what urgent steps can be taken to bring rent arrears under proper control. My Department is exploring the scope for more frequent and up to date monitoring of rent arrears.

The total arrears as at 1 April 1985 represented a £20 million increase on 1 April 1984 and a £38 million increase on 1 April 1983. Proportionally arrears have risen from 4·8 per cent. to 5·7 per cent. collectable rent over the same period.

Local Authority Rent Arrears (England) at April 1985

The tables below give details of the numbers of local authority dwellings at 1 April 1985, the total rent collectable between 1 April 1984 and 31 March 1985 (in £'s) and the rent owed by former and current tenants at 1 April 1985 (in £'s) by authority and class of authority. Except where noted, the figures are taken from the Department of Environment's housing subsidy claim forms returned by individual local authorities. They will be published by the Chartered Institute of Public Finance and Accountancy in the series "Housing Revenue Account Statistics —Actuals".

To facilitate comparisons between authorities, the ratio of the total rent arrears to the total rent collectable (expressed as a percentage) is also given.

The right-hand column on each table (headed "form used") indicates the source of the information ie.

0— No information given on the 1985-86 Claim Form. The figures are estimates given by the authority on 1984-85 Form.

1— Figures from the 1985-86 Form.

2— No information or incorrect information given on the 1985-86 Form. Figures provided subsequently by the local authority.

Local authority rent arrears (England): 1 April 1983—April 1985

The tables below give details of local authorities' gross rent arrears at 1 April 1983, 1 April 1984 and 1 April 1985. The ratio of gross rent arrears to the total rent collectable for each year (expressed as a percentage) is also given. The right hand-column on each table gives the number of local authority dwellings at 1 April 1985.

The figures have been taken from the Department of the Environment's Housing Subsidy Claim Forms for the respective years. Where no figures were provided by the local authorities, the tables have been marked 'N/A".

Mr. William Powell asked the hon. Member for Wokingham, as representing the Church Commissioners, if he will list in the Official Report the names of all assistant bishops in the Church of England, the date of appointment and the diocese to which attached, for whose stipends the Church Commissioners are not in any way responsible.

Sir William van Straubenzee: There are no full-time assistant bishops for whose stipend the commissioners are not in any way responsible. Those part-time assistant bishops for whose stipends the commissioners are not in any way responsible are:

Name	Appointment	Diocese
Maddocks, M. H. St. John	1983	Bath and Wells
Wheeldon, P. W.	1977	Wakefield
De Pina Cabral, D. P.	1976	Europe
Fisher, R. L.	1985	Ely
Marshall, M. E.	1984	London
Pickard, S. C.	1984	Worcester

Mr. William Powell asked the hon. Member for Wokingham, as representing the Church Commissioners, (1) what was the annual cost, to the latest convenient date, to the Church Commissioners of the upkeep of the staffs of suffragan bishops;

(2) what was the annual cost, to the latest convenient date, to the Church Commissioners of the upkeep of the staffs of assistant bishops.

Sir William van Straubenzee: The commissioners do not have the information necessary to answer these questions.

Mr. William Powell asked the hon. Member for Wokingham, as representing the Church Commissioners, if he will list in the Official Report the names of all assistant bishops, the date of appointment and the diocese to which attached for whose stipends the Church Commissioners are in whole or in part responsible.

Sir William van Straubenzee: The commissioners are responsible in whole or in part for the stipends of two full-time assistant bishops and eight part-time assistant bishops and these are as follows:

Name	Date	Diocese
Full-time
Gill, K. E.	1980	Newcastle
Franklin, W. A.	1978	Peterborough

Mr. William Powell asked the hon. Member for Wokingham, as representing the Church Commissioners, what was the annual cost, to the latest convenient date, to the Church Commissioners of the stipends of assistant bishops.

Sir William van Straubenzee: The annual cost to the Church Commissioners of the stipends of the two full-time assistant bishops was £20,420 at 31 March 1985.

Mr. William Powell asked the hon. Member for Wokingham, as representing the Church Commissioners, what was the annual cost, to the latest convenient date, to the Church Commissioners of the stipends of suffragan bishops.

Sir William van Straubenzee: The annual cost to the Church Commissioners of the stipends of suffragan bishops as £680,960 at 31 March 1985.

Mr. William Powell asked the hon. Member for Wokingham, as representing the Church Commissioners, what was the annual cost, to the latest convenient date, to the Church Commissioners of the residences of assistant bishops.

Sir William van Straubenzee: The annual cost to the Church Commissioners of the residences of the two full-time assistant bishops in 1984 (and paid by the commissioners in 1985) was £2,712.

Mr. William Powell asked the hon. Member for Wokingham, as representing the Church Commissioners, what was the annual cost, to the latest convenient date, to the Church Commissioners of the residence of suffragan bishops.

Sir William van Straubenzee: The annual cost to the Church Commissioners of the residences of the 64 suffragan bishops in 1984 (and paid by the commissioners in 1985) was £57,612.

Mr. William Powell asked the hon. Member for Wokingham, as representing the Church Commissioners, if he will list in the Official Report the names of the suffragan bishops, the date of appointment and the diocese to which attached for whose stipends the Church Commissioners are in whole or in part responsible.

Mr. William Powell asked the hon. Member for Wokingham, as representing the Church Commissioners, if he will list in the Official Report the names of all suffragan bishops in the Church of England, the date of appointment and the diocese to which attached, for whose stipends the Church Commissioners are not in any way responsible.

Sir William van Straubenzee: There are no such suffragan bishops.

PRIME MINISTER

Family Life (Development)

Q73. Mr. Soames asked the Prime Minister what steps Her Majesty's Government are taking to seek to promote the development of family life.

The Prime Minister: The development of family life is above all a responsibility of the members of families themselves. But the Government of course recognise the central importance of family life. They have sought to provide a framework of taxation, social security and other policies which take account of the need to protect and encourage family life.

So far as taxation is concerned, the married man's personal allowance is now at its highest level in real terms since the second world war. We shall be publishing shortly a Green Paper on personal taxation, which will set out the option of moving to a new system in which allowances are transferable between husband and wife.

On social security, the position of families has been protected and improved since 1979. Most of the main benefits available to families have increased in real terms, including family income supplement. The White Paper in the "Reform of Social Security" (Cmnd. 9691) contains new proposals designed to help low-income families. Other specific areas in which Government policy has supported family life include:

Encouraging wider home ownership, especially among young people; substantial increases in grants to voluntary organisations which assist families; measures to support those who provide care within families for elderly or disabled relatives; increased emphasis on encouraging school attendance and combatting truancy.

In addition, the impact of particular proposals on family life is one of the considerations which is taken into account in the development of the whole range of Government policies.

Westland plc

Q82. Mr. Dalyell asked the Prime Minister whether she was informed about any action which was to be taken, or which had been taken, against an official in the Cabinet Office in relation to his or her conduct in contacting the private offices of Ministers to see whether they would be available for a meeting about Westland plc on Friday 13 December; and if she will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: I have nothing to add to what I told the House on 23 January, at column 449-60.

Mr. Dalyell asked the Prime Minister what action her office took on 7 January on being informed by the Attorney-General's office of his approach to the head of the Civil Service on the setting up of a leak inquiry.

The Prime Minister: I have nothing to add to the full account which I gave to the House in my statement on 23 January, at columns 449-60, and in the debate on 27 January, at columns 651-58.

Sunday Trading

Mr. Frank Field asked the Prime Minister if she will state the number of letters her office has received on the question of Sunday trading; and if this total can be broken down into those who are for or against the proposed reform.

The Prime Minister: The Government have received about 100 representations in favour of our proposals and about 34,000 against since the debate on the Auld report in the House of Commons in May last year.

Labour Statistics

Mr. Wigley asked the Prime Minister how many persons are employed in (a) the Civil Service, (b) local government, (c) nationalised industries, (d) the police service, (e) non-governmental public bodies and (f) the armed forces at the most recent available date; and what were the corresponding figures in 1979.

The Prime Minister: The United Kingdom figures for public sector employment on a full-time equivalent basis are as follows:

Thousands

	Mid-year
	1979	1985
Civil Service	724	596
Her Majesty's Forces	314	326
National Health Service	975	1,026
Other central government	200	198
Police*	172	182
Other local authorities	2,196	2,090
Nationalised industries
actual	1,818	1,124
excluding corporations subsequently privatised	(1,455)	(1,124)
Other public corporations†
actual	190	117
excluding corporations subsequently privatised	(171)	(117)

* Including civilians.
† Excluding trading funds.
Sources: Her Majesty's Treasury and Economic Trends December 1985.

The number of staff in non-departmental public bodies (excluding English and Welsh water authorities) were 147,000 in 1979 and 138,000 in 1985. These are included in the above figures for public sector employment.

Community Service Projects

Mr. Irving asked the Prime Minister if she will estimate how many people have been involved in community service schemes supported by the Government in each of the last five years; and if she will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: As I explained in my reply to a question from my hon. Friend on 24 July 1985, at columns 535-37, the concept of "community service" is very wide. Some (but not all) of the work done by or through voluntary organisations which are funded by Government Departments under various powers may be described as "community service", but it is not practicable to identify the numbers of people involved, often on a voluntary or part-time basis, in such a variety of social and environmental projects. I regret that no estimate can therefore be made of the total numbers of people involved in Government supported community service schemes. Some information is, however, available about the number of persons who have taken part in schemes which have enabled unemployed people to offer service to the community, and I shall write to my hon. Friend about this.

Engagements

Mr. Ron Davies asked the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 20 February.

Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 20 February.

Mr. Pike asked the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 20 February.

Mr. Marlow asked the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 20 February.

Mr. Greenway asked the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 20 February.

Mr. Yeo asked the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 20 February.

The Prime Minister: This morning I presided at a meeting of the Cabinet and had meetings with ministerial colleagues and others. In addition to my duties in this House I shall be having further meetings later today. This evening I shall attend a reception to mark the 75th anniversary of the Royal National Institute for the Deaf.

"Question of Procedure for Ministers"

Mr. Kirkwood asked the Prime Minister if, given that extracts from the 1976 edition of "Questions of Procedure for Ministers" have been published, she will now authorise the publication of the complete document.

The Prime Minister: No.

Advisory Board of Research Councils

Mr. Carter-Jones asked the Prime Minister if she receives any representations or advice on the composition of the Advisory Board of Research Councils; and if she will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: Appointments to the Advisory Board of Research Councils are the responsibility of my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Education and Science, who consults other Government Departments and the Chief Scientific Adviser (Cabinet Office). The composition of the Advisory Board of Research Councils is set out in "Framework for Government Research and Development" Cmnd: 5046.

ENERGY

North Sea Oil

Mr. Robert Hughes asked the Secretary of State for Energy what percentage of North sea oil supply contracts valued at more than £100,000 were won by British companies, in each of the five years before, and after, November 1975; and what was the cash value of these contracts in each of these 10 years.

Mr. Buchanan-Smith: The first year for which figures are available is 1974. The information requested for the remaining years is as follows:

Year	UK Value £ million	UK Percentage Share
1974	516	40
1975	613	52
1976	591	57
1977	806	62
1978	1,037	66
1979	2,111	79
1980	1,679	71

Sizewell Inquiry

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett asked the Secretary of State for Energy when he expects the report of the Sizewell public inquiry to be published.

Mr. Goodlad: My right hon. Friend has made it clear that he will consider the date of publication when he has received the inspector's report.

Health and Safety

Mr. Pawsey asked the Secretary of State for Energy how many persons have been (a) killed and (b) injured in the nuclear industry in each year since 1960.

Mr. Goodlad [pursuant to his reply, 19 December 1985, c. 250]: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer given by my hon. and learned Friend the Member for Tunbridge Wells (Mr. Mayhew) on 31 January 1980 to a question from my hon. Friend the Member for Birmingham, Selly Oak (Mr. Beaumont-Dark) which gives figures for deaths and injuries resulting in more than three days absence from normal work in the nuclear industry, for the period up to 1979. Figures for later years, on the same basis, are as follows:

	Fatal injuries	All injuries (including fatal)
1980	1	591
1981	1	581
1982	1	504
1983	2	462

Notes:

1. The figures relate to operators' employees at sites operated by the Central Electricity Generating Board, the South of Scotland Electricity Generating Board, British Nuclear Fuels plc and establishments of the United Kingdom Atomic Energy Authority concerned with nuclear research and development. The injuries included are those resulting in more than three days absence from normal work.
2. The fatalities were the result of industrial accidents: none was related to radiological hazards.
3. The definition of all injuries is not consistent with that used by the National Coal Board in the answer given on 19 December 1985, at columns 250-51.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

New Companies

Mrs. McCurley asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many new companies were registered in Scotland during each of the years from 1975 to 1985.

Mr. Howard: New company incorporations in Scotland for calendar years are:

	Number
1975	2,250
1976	2,266
1977	2,327
1978	2,955
1979	3,514
1980	3,270
1981	3,475
1982	4,211
1983	4,718
1984	4,976

Airbus

Mr. Carter-Jones asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what preliminary consideration has been made by his Department of the possible new Airbus A330 and A340; if an assessment has been made of the proposed British input to this venture; what information he has on the technology involved in the new proposed wing structure; if he will take steps to encourage this new venture; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Pattie: My Department has had preliminary discussions with British Aerospace about these possible new programmes, and contacts with the company will be continuing. British Aerospace is still considering the extent of its own involvement in the design and development of a new wing for the aircraft. I have no information as yet on the technology involved in the proposed new wing. British Aerospace has indicated that it would expect in due course to apply for Government launch aid in respect of its participation in these programmes.

Mr. Carter-Jones asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry (1) what information he has as to the proportion of the production of the British Aerospace industry represented by the Airbus A320; what information he has as to the proportional contribution of the industry to the manufacture of the Airbus A320; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what information he has as to how many Airbus A320s have been firmly ordered, and by which airlines; how many options exist for this aircraft, and from which airlines; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Butcher: I shall reply to the hon. Member as soon as possible.

Paraquat

Mr. Meadowcroft asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry which countries have imposed restrictions on the importation of paraquat from the United Kingdom.

Mr. Alan Clark: Such information is not collected comprehensively, but the only instance known to me where the importation of paraquat is restricted is Finland.

Mr. Meadowcroft asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will impose new safety conditions under which paraquat is exported to Third world countries; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Alan Clark: I shall reply to the hon. Member as soon as possible.

Westland plc

Mr. Dalyell asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry which Ministers or officials in his Department, other than the then Secretary of State for Trade and Industry, the right hon. and learned Member for Richmond, Yorks (Mr. Brittan) Ms. Colette Bowe and Mr. John Mogg, saw the letter from the then Secretary of State for Defence, the right hon. Member for Henley (Mr. Heseltine), to the Solicitor-General, between the time of receipt of a copy at his Department and the release of part of its contents to the Press Association on 6 January.

Mr. Channon: I have nothing to add to what my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister said in her statement on 23 January and in the debate on 27 January.

Ms. Colette Bowe

Mr. Dalyell asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether Ms. Colette Bowe was temporarily suspended from any of her functions as Director of Information at his Department between 22 and 29 January.

Mr. Channon: No.

PCW Syndicate (Inquiry)

Mr. Ashdown asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether he intends to publish his Department's inquiry into the affairs of PCW.

Mr. Howard: PCW is a subsidiary of Minet Holdings plc, which is under investigation by inspectors appointed under section 165 of the Companies Act 1948. The question of publication will be considered when a report is received from the inspectors.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Credit Control

Mr. Speller asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what assessment he has made of the present correlation between dependent credit control departments in the banking system and the rate of failure; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ian Stewart: The Government set out their conclusions on the internal and external prudential controls needed on bank lending in their White Paper "Banking Supervision" (Cmnd. 9695). This states the Government's intention that the maintenance of appropriate internal control systems should become an explicit statutory requirement.

Foreign Currency Expenditure

Mr. Gould asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer under what authority the exchange equalisation account is used to meet the Government's own foreign currency expenditure.

Mr. Ian Stewart: Under section 1(3) of the Exchange Equalisation Account Act 1979. The Government Departments concerned account to Parliament for their expenditure in the normal way.

Venture Capital Investment

Mr. Chope asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer how the current level of venture capital investment in the United Kingdom compares with that prior to June 1979.

Mr. MacGregor: According to figures published in the January 1986 edition of "UK Venture Capital Journal", the total capital raised by independent venture capital funds in 1985 is estimated to have reached £273 million per annum compared with some £10 million in 1979.

THE ARTS

Theatres and Concert Halls

Mr. Alton asked the Minister for the Arts if he will make a further statement on the effect of metropolitan authorities' abolition on grants available to theatres and concert halls.

Mr. Luce: I was able to give the Arts Council £25 million as the central Government contribution to post-abolition funding. I believe that the council is the most suitable organisation to allocate this money. However, responsibility for funding has to be shared with successor authorities, which are being relieved of substantial precepts. Negotiations are proceeding about the specific funding of certain theatres and concert halls, and I am hopeful that those negotiations will enable the building in question to remain open.

Royal Festival Hall

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Minister for the Arts what information he has as to whether the literary centre in the Royal Festival Hall will be retained following the abolition of the Greater London council.

Mr. Luce: The South Bank board is considering a number of ways in which it can give more emphasis to literature in the South Bank centre. The board has already indicated that it does not wish the existing bookspace facility to continue in its present location, but will be considering possible alternative locations.

Arts Council

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Minister for the Arts how many consultants are currently engaged by the Arts Council; what are their areas of activity; and what is the total cost involved.

Mr. Luce: The Arts Council is using the services of three consultants' organisations, in the fields of computing, marketing and personnel management. Consultants are used on an ad hoc basis, and I shall write to the hon. Member when details of the total cost are available.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Anglo-Irish Intergovernmental Conference

Sir John Biggs-Davison asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what matters within the internal jurisdiction of the Irish Government have been raised by Her Majesty's Government in the Anglo-Irish Intergovernmental Conference.

Mr. Scott: Policing in border areas in the Republic of Ireland has been discussed under article 9(a) of the agreement, and British and Irish Ministers have authorised officials to undertake further work on matters of mutual concern under article 8 of the agreement, including extradition, the possible harmonisation of areas of the criminal law and the search for measures to enhance public confidence in the administration of justice.

Mr. Bell asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland on how many occasions the joint chairman of the Anglo-Irish Intergovernmental Conference, Mr. Peter Barry, has called for a special meeting of the conference in accordance with article 3 of the Anglo-Irish agreement.

Mr. Tom King: The joint chairman of the Intergovernmental Conference, Mr. Peter Barry, has requested a special meeting of the conference on one occasion. The meeting was held on 30 December.

Harland and Wolff

Mr. Sayeed asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what is his policy in offering guarantees or subsidies to Harland and Wolff in relation to specific tenders for warships or naval vessels to be built in the United Kingdom when Harland and Wolff would be in competition with other United Kingdom warship yards for the contract.

Dr. Boyson: It is Government policy not to offer guarantees or subsidies to Harland and Wolff in relation to specific tenders for warships or naval vessels when there is competition from other United Kingdom warship yards for the contract.

Life Expectancy

Mr. Michael Forsyth asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will list in the Official Report the expectation of life at age 16 years for men and women in each of the past 30 years.

Mr. Needham: Expectation of life tables for Northern Ireland do not contain estimates at age 16 years. The figures at age 15 years, for the years for which information is available, are as follows:

Year	Male	Female
1957	55·32	58·62
1958	55·27	59·14
1959	55·10	59·23

1964	55·45	60·00
1965	55·34	60·04
1966	55·25	60·10
1967	55·46	60·46
1968	55·56	60·50
1969	55·65	60·69
1970	55·24	60·37
1971	55·08	60·58
1972	54·84	60·53
1973	54·37	60·48
1974	53·86	60·86
1975	54·31	60·43
1976	54·16	60·56
1977	54·32	60·54
1978	54·50	60·67
1979	54·60	60·93
1980	54·81	61·13
1981	55·28	61·44
1982	55·67	61·70
1983	56·18	62·12

Mortality Statistics

Mr. Michael Forsyth asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will list in the Official Report the deaths in Northern Ireland in each of the last five years for which records are available attributable to (a) malignant neoplasm of trachea, bronchus and lung, (b) bronchitis and emphysema and (c) ischaemic heart disease, giving the figures for all deaths and broken down by sex.

Mr. Needham: The information requested is as follows:

Year	Persons	Males	Females
Malignant neoplasm of trachea, bronchus and lungs
1980	676	522	154
1981	689	511	178
1982	690	510	180
1983	691	526	165
1984	788	568	220
Bronchitis and emphysema
1980	415	298	117
1981	334	243	91
1982	301	215	86
1983	270	195	75
1984	209	139	70
Ischaemic heart disease
1980	4,858	2,897	1,961
1981	4,909	2,873	2,036
1982	4,563	2,611	1,952
1983	4,785	2,779	2,006
1984	4,825	2,812	2,013

RUC (Code of Conduct)

Mr. Bell asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland when he proposes to publish the code of conduct of the Royal Ulster Constabulary.

Mr. Scott: A working party has been established by the Chief Constable to prepare as early as possible this year a code of conduct for the Royal Ulster Constabulary. The Chief Constable will be responsible for its publication.

Flags and Emblems Act 1954

Mr. Bell asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland when he proposes to introduce legislation to abolish the Flags and Emblems Act 1954.

Mr. Tom King: I am considering this matter at present.

Prisoners (Statistics)

Mr. McNamara asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many prisoners charged with scheduled offences in the latest calendar year were remanded in custody prior to trial for periods between (a) nought to three months, (b) three to six months, (c) six to nine months, (d) nine to 12 months, (e) 12 to 18 months and (f) over 18 months for scheduled and non-scheduled offences.

Mr. Scott [pursuant to his reply, 3 February 1986, c. 75]: The length of time spent in custodial remand for persons tried in 1985 and who were in custody at the time of their trial and charged with scheduled and non-scheduled offences respectively was as follows:

Time in custody	Scheduled offences	Non-scheduled offences
Less than 3 months	121	401
3 months up to 6 months	59	37
6 months up to 9 months	49	21
9 months up to 12 months	52	12
12 months up to 18 months	59	2
Over 18 months	73	0
Total	413	473

Mr. McNamara asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland (1) how many prisoners for each year since 1980, were remanded in custody prior to trial for scheduled and non-scheduled offences, respectively;

(2) how many prisoners were remanded in custody prior to trial for scheduled and non-scheduled offences, respectively, for the latest calendar year and the year to date.

Mr. Scott [pursuant to his reply, 3 February 1986, c. 75]: The information is as follows:

Year	Scheduled offences	Non-scheduled offences
1980	828	854
1981	1,373	1,092
1982	1,199	1,122
1983	1,154	1,009
1984	1,005	905
1985	931	807

Information for 1986 is not available.

Mr. McNamara asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what percentage of prisoners on custodial remand for scheduled and non-scheduled offences, respectively, were (a) given a non-custodial sentence, (b) given a custodial sentence and (c) found not guilty or not proceeded against for the latest calendar year and the year to date.

Mr. Scott: [pursuant to his reply, 3 February 1986, c. 75]: The information in relation to those tried in 1985 is as follows:

Disposal	Scheduled Offences Per cent.	Non-scheduled Offences Per cent.
(A) Non-custodial Sentence	7·24	11·20
(B) Custodial Sentence	68·36	59·41
(C) Found not guilty or not proceeded against	24·40	29·39

Information for 1986 is not available.

Mr. McNamara asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what was the average length of time that prisoners spent on custodial remand for scheduled and non-scheduled offences respectively for the latest calendar year and the year to date.

Mr. Scott [pursuant to his reply, 3 February 1986, c. 75]: The average length of time spent on custodial remand for persons tried in 1985, who were in custody at the time of trial was 39·2 weeks for persons charged with scheduled offences and 5·5 weeks for persons charged with non-scheduled offences.

Information for 1986 is not available.

Mr. McNamara asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will give the average period between remand and trial for prisoners refused bail and charged with scheduled offences in Northern Ireland in the latest calendar year and to date.

Mr. Scott: [pursuant to his reply, 3 February 1986, c. 75]: For persons tried in 1985 who were (a) in custody at the time of trial, (b) never released on bail and (c) charged with scheduled offences, the average time spent on custodial remand was 38·7 weeks.

Information for 1986 is not available.

Non-Scheduled Offences

Mr. McNamara asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many persons were charged in Northern Ireland with non-scheduled offences; and how many persons were found not guilty of all or some of the offences with which they were charged in the year 1985 and to date.

Mr. Scott [pursuant to his reply, 3 February 1986, c. 75-76]: The information is not available in the form requested, but the number of persons proceeded against for non-scheduled offences in the year 1985 was 49,101. Records on findings of guilt relate only to the principal offence in each case; on that basis, the number of persons found not guilty of non-scheduled offences was 2,848.

Mr. McNamara asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will give separately for magistrates' courts and Crown courts for 1985 the number of cases involving non-scheduled offences in which pleas of not guilty were entered; in how many of these cases verdicts of not guilty were returned; and in how many of these cases trial was by jury.

Mr. Scott [pursuant to his reply, 3 February 1986, c. 75-76]: The information requested is as follows:

	1985
	Crown Courts	Magistrates' Courts
Pleas "Not Guilty" entered	243	6,273
Verdicts "Not Guilty" returned	128	2,720

In all non-scheduled cases tried in the Crown courts, trial is by jury.

Notes:
1. The figures refer only to the pricipal offence.
2. The figures for the magistrates' court include motoring offences.

Female Prisoners

Mr. McNamara asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what was the average period of custodial remand for female custodial remand prisoners in Northern Ireland for the years 1982, 1983, 1984 and 1985.

Mr. Scott [pursuant to his reply, 3 February 1986, c. 78]: The average number of days spent in custody from first remand to termination of trial for females in 1983, 1984 and 1985 was 125·5, 105·4 and 63·0 respectively. A comparable figure for 1982 is not available.

Belfast Education and Library Board

Mr. Bell asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what was the total Government budget allocation to the Belfast Education and Library Board for each year since 1979, and the budget allocation for 1986-87.

Dr. Mawhinney [pursuant to his reply, 19 February 1986, c. 186-87]: The information is as follows:

"000's

	Number
1979-80	36,135
1980-81	40,233
1981-82	43,273
1982-83	45,041
1983-84	44,420
1984-85	44,550
1985-86*	45,559
1986-87†	48,000

* Estimated outturn.
† Projected.

Mr. Bell asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what effect the £1·6 million cut in the budget allocation to the Belfast Education and Library Board will have on the level of provision by the board of (a) nursery schools and (b) nursery units.

Dr. Mawhinney [pursuant to his reply, 19 February 1986, c. 186-87]: While I am aware that the board has been considering projected expenditure in the nursery sector I have not to date been advised by the board of its decisions nor have I received the board's financial scheme detailing its spending plans for 1986-87. Any proposals to close existing schools or units will require the approval of my Department.

EMPLOYMENT

Warehouse (Brightside Lane)

Mr. Caborn asked the Paymaster General what is the status of the Chemical Industry Association's recommendations on the safe warehousing of chemicals; what information he has as to the degree of observance of these recommendations by Laporte Industries at the Brightside lane warehouse; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Trippier: The Chemical Industries Association's guidelines are voluntary.

The management of the warehouse was responsible for the way in which goods were stored. The storage of chemicals, with the exception of sodium nitrate, was in line with the Chemical Industries Association's general recommendations.

Mr. Caborn asked the Paymaster General exactly when the Health and Safety Executive investigation into the Brightside lane warehouse fire began.

Mr. Trippier: The Health and Safety Executive investigation began on the morning of Saturday 15 December 1984.

Mr. Caborn asked the Paymaster General exactly when officers of the Health and Safety Executive first saw the Brightside lane warehouse fire.

Mr. David Trippier: On the morning of Saturday 15 December 1984.

Mr. Caborn asked the Paymaster General how many officers of the Health and Safety Executive took part in the 1980 visit to the transit shed and warehouse at Brightside lane; and how long the visit lasted.

Mr. Trippier: Two inspectors visited the site on 7 May 1980. There is no record of how long the visit lasted.

Mr. Caborn asked the Paymaster General when South Yorkshire county fire service first officially notified the Health and Safety Executive as dangerous occurrences instances of firemen having been so affected at the Brightside lane warehouse fire as to require medical treatment.

Mr. Trippier: Notification of this incident as a dangerous occurrence from the South Yorkshire and Humberside county fire service was received on 6 February 1985.

Firemen (Smoke Exposure)

Mr. Caborn asked the Paymaster General what level of short-term exposure to smoke he estimates that firemen can reasonably be expected to cope with without undue adverse effect.

Mr. Trippier: Adverse effects from smoke will depend on the products of combustion, and the nature and degree of exposure. Exposure should be kept as low as is reasonably practicable.

Young Workers Scheme

Mr. McNamara asked the Paymaster General whether 17 and 18-year-old full-time agricultural workers are eligible for the young workers scheme; and what instructions he has given to his officials in Yorkshire and Humberside on this matter.

Mr. Lang: Payments under the young workers scheme can be made in respect of 17 and 18-year-olds in agricultural employment as for those in other employment provided the rules and conditions of the scheme are met. Departmental instructions reflect this.

Youth Training Scheme

Mr. Sean Hughes asked the Paymaster General how many persons aged 16 and 17 years, respectively, are presently engaged in YTS in the borough of Knowsley; and what increase in numbers he expects over the next year.

Mr. Trippier: At 31 January 1986, the latest date for which statistics are available, there were 1,207 16-year-olds and 94 17-year-olds on YTS in the borough of Knowsley.

Plans for expected numbers of entrants in 1986-87 have not yet been finalised at local authority district level.

Mr. Hughes asked the Paymaster General how many young persons he expects will join the proposed extended YTS scheme (a) nationally and (b) in Knowsley in its first and second year of operation, respectively.

Mr. Trippier: We estimate that around 360,000 young people will enter YTS nationally in 1986-87 and a similar number in 1987-88. Plans for 1986-87 and 1987-88 have not yet been finalised at local authority district level.

Community Industry Scheme

Mr. Hughes asked the Paymaster General how many persons aged 18 years or younger are presently engaged in the community industry scheme in the borough of Knowsley; and what change in numbers there has been over the past year.

Mr. Lang: The Kirkby and Knowsley community industry units both recruit from within the metropolitan borough of Knowsley. In January 1986 they employed 208 young people aged 18 and younger. The corresponding figure for January 1985 was 206.

News International

Mr. Gould asked the Paymaster General whether any work permits have been granted in respect of people recently engaged by News International.

Mr. Lang: In the last 12 months one such work permit has been issued.

Technical and Vocational Education Initiative

Mr. Gerald Bowden asked the Paymaster General whether any application has been received, in respect of the coming financial year, from the Inner London education authority for funding under the technical and vocational education initiative; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Trippier: No such application has, I understand, been received by the Manpower Services Commission. It is for each education authority to decide whether it wishes to submit proposals for support under the initiative. I am glad to say that 73 of the 116 education authorities in England, Scotland and Wales are already involved and a further 25 are seeking to participate.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Legal Aid

Mr. Michael Brown asked the Attorney-General how many letters he has received requesting an increase in the fees offered to barristers carrying out criminal legal aid work.

The Attorney-General: One; the Lord Chancellor has received three.

Mr. Michael Brown asked the Attorney-General if he will set up an advisory committee to examine the methods of remuneration for barristers carrying out criminal legal aid.

The Attorney-General: The Government's position is as set out in its response to the Royal Commission on legal services.

Mr. Michael Brown asked the Attorney-General how many meetings have been held and on what dates between officials from his Department and the Bar over remuneration for barristers carrying out criminal legal aid; whether officials from other Departments were involved; what further meetings are planned and on what dates; and if he will make a statement.

The Attorney-General: Officials from the Lord Chancellor's Department met representatives of the Bar on 17 December. That meeting was also attended by officials of my Department and of the Director of Public Prosecutions, because I have responsibility for the level of fees which will be paid to counsel instructed by the Crown Prosecution Service. The Lord Chancellor has told the chairman of the Bar that he wishes to have further discussions.

Mr. Michael Brown asked the Attorney-General when his Department received a copy of the report from Coopers and Lybrand on remuneration for barristers carrying out criminal legal aid.

The Attorney-General: I received a copy of the report under cover of a letter from the chairman of the Bar dated 13 September. The Lord Chancellor received a copy on 16 September 1985.

"New Statesman" (Official Secrets Act)

Mr. Kirkwood asked the Attorney-General if he will prosecute the New Statesman under the Official Secrets Act for publication of extracts from the 1976 edition of "Questions of Procedure for Ministers".

The Attorney-General: No.

Cabinet Papers

Mr. Dalyell asked the Attorney-General under what circumstances (a) the Director of Public Prosecutions and (b) the police are given access to Cabinet papers relevant to an investigation.

The Attorney-General: The Director of Public Prosecutions and the police would be given access to Cabinet papers where I, having consulted the Secretary of the Cabinet, regard it as necessary for the purposes of an investigation.

Select Committee on Defence

Mr. Dalyell asked the Attorney-General if, pursuant to his answer of 3 February, Official Report, column 14, the Solicitor-General will accept an invitation to give evidence to the Select Committee on Defence.

The Attorney-General: The Solicitor-General has indicated to the Chairman of the Select Committee on Defence that it will not be possible for him to accept the Committee's invitation to appear before them. The Law Officers are not answerable to Parliament for the legal advice which they give to the Government and the established convention is that neither they nor anybody else should be aske to disclose whether, and if so in what circumstances, they have given such advice, let alone what such advice may have been. It was for that reason among others that it was agreed, when the present system of Select Committees was being established, that no Committee would be empowered to monitor the Law Officers or their Department.

Appeals (Delays)

Ms. Harman asked the Attorney-General if he will give figures for the average time a convicted prisoner held in custody has had to wait for appeal against sentence in the latest year for which figures are available; and if he will give a breakdown between cases involving sentences of less than and more than one year.

The Attorney-General: Figures for average waiting times for appeals to the Crown court against conviction and/or sentence in magistrates' courts are available only in aggregate. In 1985 the average waiting time in England and Wales for all appellants given a custodial sentence who were dealt with at the Crown court (whether held on custody or on bail, and whether appealing against sentence only or against sentence and conviction) was 5·1 weeks. No breakdown is available by length of sentence passed. Statistics on waiting times for appeals against sentence imposed by the Crown court are not at present collected.

WALES

A5 (Traffic)

Mr. Harvey asked the Secretary of State for Wales whether the volume of traffic on the A5 between Gobowen and Chirk, Chirk and Pentrefoelas and on the Chirk-Ruabon road has been counted recently; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: An automatic traffic counter, sited at Cerrigydrudion, continuously records the volume of traffic on the A5 between Chirk and Pentrefoelas. Traffic on the A483 between Chirk and Ruabon was last counted in April 1983.

Traffic counting on the A5 between Gobowen and Chirk is the responsibility of the Secretary of State for Transport.

Anglesey

Mr. Best asked the Secretary of State for Wales what representations he has received about the inclusion of the southern part of Anglesey within the Bangor travel-to-work area in the development area status of the rest of the island; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: We have received two letters about the assisted area status of the southern part of Anglesey.

"Housing for Senior Management"

Mr. Wigley asked the Secretary of State for Wales what is the status of the Welsh Office draft circular "Housing for Senior Management"; and if he has any plans to seek to amend planning law in line with the draft circular.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: The draft circular has been sent to interested bodies on a consultative basis. Its provisions do not call for amendment to the planning law.

Milk Marketing Board

Mr. Wigley asked the Secretary of State for Wales if he will seek an urgent meeting with the chairman of the Milk Marketing Board to discuss the impact of the Board's policies on the Welsh economy.

Mr. Nicholas Edwards: I and my officials maintain regular contact with the Milk Marketing Board at all levels on issues of concern for Wales.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Council of Europe

Mr. Coleman asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list the scholarships, bursaries, grants and training schemes operated by the Council of Europe for which United Kingdom nationals are eligible; and how many United Kingdom nationals have benefited from each such scheme in each of the previous three years, indicating what proportion of the total take-up each share represents.

Mr. Renton: It has not been possible to obtain the information requested in the time available. As soon as I have the information I shall write to the hon. Member.

Mr. Coleman asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether he will seek an increase in the resources of the directorate of press and information of the Council of Europe.

Mr. Renton: No.

Mr. Coleman asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is the proportion attributable to the United Kingdom of the annual budget of the directorate of press and information of the Council of Europe; and what sum this represents in (a) the current financial year and (b) the preceding financial year.

Mr. Renton: The United Kingdom proportion is 16·73 per cent. In 1986 this represents £344,438; in 1985 it was £337,800.

Mr. Coleman asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs (1) what steps he has taken to assess the value for money given by the work of the directorate of press and information of the Council of Europe; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what assessment he has made of the current public impact of the work of the directorate of press and information of the Council of Europe.

Mr. Renton: No such assessment has been undertaken.

Mr. Coleman asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many of Her Majesty's Government's officials are currently members of Council of Europe committees and working parties.

Mr. Renton: The information requested is not readily available and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Coleman asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether he will make it his policy to make a regular quarterly report to Parliament of the activities of the Committee of Ministers of the Council of Europe and of the role played by the United Kingdom in the organisation during the preceding three months.

Mr. Renton: No. A copy of the report presented by the chairman of the Committee of Ministers to each session of the Parliamentary Assembly is placed in the Library of the House.

Mr. Coleman asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether he will place in the Library a comprehensive summary of the proceedings of the ordinary part-session of the Parliamentary Assembly of the Council of Europe held in Strasbourg from 27 to 31 January.

Mr. Renton: The summary of the proceedings on 27-29 January prepared by the Council of Europe secretariat is already available in the Library. The summary of the proceedings on 30-31 January is expected to arrive shortly.

Mr. Coleman asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what were the principal subjects debated, texts adopted, and other decisions taken at the ordinary part-session of the Parliamentary Assembly of the Council of Europe held in Strasbourg from 27 to 31 January; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Renton: The subjects debated and texts adopted were as follows:

European Social Charter (Recommendation 1022)
Youth Unemployment (Recommendation 1023)
European Response to Terrorism (Recommendation 1024)
The Situation of Palestinian Refugees (Recommendation 1025)
Amendment of Articles 14 and 25 of the Council of Europe (Recommendation 1026 and 1027)
Scientific Exchanges between Europe and Japan (Recommendation 1028)
European Scientific and technological cooperation (Recommendation 1029)
Monetary cooperation between Europe and Latin America (Recommendation 1030)

Resolutions were also adopted on equality between women and men, the Africa food crisis, Europe's agro food industry and European integration, 30th and 31st annual reports of the European conference of Ministers of Transport.

Mr. Coleman asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how he monitors the proceedings of ordinary part-sessions of the Parliamentary Assembly of the Council of Europe; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Renton: The proceedings of these sessions are monitored from the record of the proceedings prepared by the Council of Europe secretariat which is received by the Foreign and Commonwealth Office.

Mr. Coleman asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what steps Her Majesty's Government is taking to improve public awareness in the United Kingdom of the work of both organs of the Council of Europe.

Mr. Renton: None. Publicity in the United Kingdom for the work of the Council of Europe is one of the functions of the Council's directorate of press and information.

Mr. Coleman asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what steps he is seeking through the Committee of Ministers of the Council of Europe to improve public awareness of the work of both organs of the Council of Europe.

Mr. Renton: I currently have no plans to seek such steps.

Mr. Coleman asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the existing means of informing (a) Parliament and (b) the public of the deliberations, decisions and other activities of the Committee of Ministers of the Council of Europe and of the Secretariat General; and if he proposes to seek any change in this machinery.

Mr. Renton: Documentation recording the deliberations, decisions and other activities of the Committee of Ministers of the Council of Europe and of the Secretariat General is available in the Library.

It is one of the functions of the directorate of press and information to inform the public of these matters. It is not proposed to seek any changes in the existing arrangements.

Mr. Coleman asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the existing means of informing (a) Parliament and (b) the public of the deliberations, decisions and other activities of the Parliamentary Assembly of the Council of Europe; and if he proposes to seek any change in this machinery.

Mr. Renton: Documentation on the deliberations, decisions and other activities of the Parliamentary Assembly of the Council of Europe is available in the Library. It is one of the functions of the directorate of press and information to inform the public of these proceedings. It is not proposed to seek any changes in the existing arrangements.

Test Ban Treaty

Mr. Michie asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is the policy of Her Majesty's Government towards the signing of a comprehensive test ban treaty between the United States of America and the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics.

Mr. Renton: We are not aware of such a treaty.

Mr. Michie asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what are the implications for the British nuclear deterrent of the proposed comprehensive test ban treaty between the United States of America and the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics.

Mr. Renton: This is a hypothetical question in the light of the answer I gave the hon. Gentleman earlier today.

Grand Harbour, Valletta (Wreckage)

Mr. Andrew MacKay asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what final settlement has been reached with the Maltese Government over the clearance of wartime wreckage from Grand Harbour, Valletta.

Mr. Renton: We have agreed to pay costs amounting to approximately £1·7 million for the removal of wartime wreckage in Grand Harbour, Valletta. In addition, the Ministry of Defence waived the costs of the Royal Navy diving detachment which working in close co-operation with the Maltese authorities and contractors provided specialised assistance. We welcome the satisfactory resolution of this problem.

Discrimination Against Women

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when the Government will ratify the convention on discrimination against women signed in 1981.

Mr. Renton: We intend to complete the preparation of the instrument of ratification in the week beginning 17 March 1986 and deposit it with the Secretary-General of the United Nations as soon as possible thereafter.

Foreign Affairs Council

Mr. Rowe asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will report on the outcome of the meeting of the Foreign Affairs Council on 17 and 18 February.

Mrs. Chalker: I attended the FAC in Luxembourg for discussions on 17 February. My hon. Friend the Minister for Trade, was present for the discussions on 18 February.

The United Kingdom and eight other member states signed the documents embodying the agreement reached by Heads of Government at the Luxembourg European Council on 2-3 December last. In doing so, they expressed the hope that it would shortly be possible for Denmark, Italy and Greece to sign. The Danish Government hope to do so immediately following the referendum in Denmark on 27 February. The Italians and Greeks hope to be able to sign in due course. Ratification procedures will not be set in hand until all member states have signed.

Ministers discussed relations with Turkey in the light of the Turkish request for a meeting of the Association Council. Work is now going ahead on a number of outstanding matters, including the unblocking of some of the aid committed to Turkey, with the aim of holding an Association Council in the autumn.

Ministers discussed relations with Japan. They reaffirmed the importance they attach to the Japanese Government taking steps to reduce Japan's overall trade surplus on the basis of the conclusions it reached in March and October last year. They agreed to resume detailed discussion at the March Foreign Affairs Council.

Ministers made progress in moving towards agreement on the main elements of the Community negotiating mandate on the renewal of the multi-fibre arrangement. There will be further discussion in March.

The Council agreed a mandate to resolve outstanding problems in the negotiations with the EFTA countries on the adaptation of the EC-EFTA agreement to take account of the accession of Spain and Portugal.

The Council agreed to a request from the ACP for a special meeting of the ACP/EEC Council of Ministers to be held on 4 March.

A meeting of the Co-operation Council between the EC and Egypt was held which considered economic and commercial relations in the light of recent developments, including the enlargement of the Community.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

Crime Prevention

75. Mr. Bellingham asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what plans he has for promoting crime prevention in schools.

Mr. Chris Patten: My right hon. Friend has undertaken to give serious consideration to making education support grant available for schemes to promote crime prevention in schools. A decision on the activities to be supported by education support grant in 1987-88 will be taken in late spring.

Children (Special Education Needs)

Mr. Wigley asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what is his estimate of the additional public expenditure each year arising from the provision of the Education Act 1981 for assessing the needs of, and preparing statements for, children with special education needs.

Mr. Dunn: The Department does not collect the information which would enable such an estimate to be made. It is clear from a survey carried out by the Association of County Councils in 1985 that it is very difficult to isolate changes arising from these provisions of the 1981 Act from other changes in expenditure on special educational provision.

Schools (Nuclear Information)

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what steps his Department takes to supply to schools information on nuclear matters other than literature distributed from NIREX or British Nuclear Fuels Ltd.

Mr. Chris Patten: The Department does not supply schools with information on such matters either directly or on behalf of other bodies.

Medical Research Council

Mr. Carter-Jones asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if, under the headings of (a) London, (b) Oxford and Cambridge, (c) other south, (d) Scotland, (e) northern, (f) other univesities and (g) lay members, he will give the origin by university affiliation of the members of the council of the Medical Research Council; if he will also express these numbers as percentages of the council; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Walden: Assuming that the hon. Member is referring to current affiliation, the information is as follows:

MRC Council membership for 1985-86

	Number	Percentage
Member whose affiliation can be determined:

	Number	Percentage
London	4	21
Oxford and Cambridge	2	11

* The Council's Chairman and Secretary, the directors of 2 MRC Units, a representative of the House of Commons and 3 members representing government Departments.

There is regular turnover of a proportion of the membership each year.

I also refer the hon. Member to the second part of my reply at column 16, to his question of 3 February 1986.

Mr. Carter-Jones asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science (1) if he will name the three principle Medical Research Council boards; if he will give the origin by university affiliation of the members of the three boards; if he will express these numbers as a percentage; and if he will make a statement;

(2) if he will give the origin by university affiliation of the members of the grant awarding committees of the Medical Research Council for (a) neurobiology and mental health, (b) cell board A, (c) cell board B, (d) systems board A and (e) systems board B; if he will express these figures as percentages; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Walden: These are matters for the Medical Research Council. I have asked the Council to write to the hon. Member.

Mr. Lewis Carter-Jones asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will give the number and percentage of United Kingdom medical students at (a) London, (b) Oxford and Cambridge, (c) other south, (d) Scotland, (i.e.) northern and (f) other universities; if he will give in this form in numbers and percentage terms the location of Medical Research Council units; if he will give the numbers and percentages for unit staff; if he will give the number and percentage of programme grants; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Chris Patten: The information which cannot be categorised precisely as requested, is as follows:

London University Research Project

Mr. Carter-Jones asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science when he expects to receive the London university research project report on the policy and implementation of the Education Act 1981; if the report will be available to the general public; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Dunn: The report on the research project based at London University Institute of Education is due to be made available to the Department in September 1986. No decision has yet been taken about publication but the findings are expected to be disseminated by the research team at a seminar which is likely to be held in November. It is intended that an invitation to attend the seminar will be extended to the all-party disablement group.

GCSE Examination

Mr. Radice asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether he remains satisfied with the preparations for the introduciton of the GCSE examination; and if he wil make a statement.

Sir Keith Joseph: Yes. The Secondary Examinations Council, the GCSE examining groups and the local education authorities have all combined to provide a programme of preparation for the new examination courses which is thorough and of high quality and to which the Department is making a substantial financial contribution. Teachers now need to play their part, in particular by attending the training seminars which are being mounted this term and next. I look to teachers to consider the responsibilities they have to their pupils who will be the first GCSE candidates.

Teachers (Pay)

Mr. Teddy Taylor asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if it is the practice of the appropriate Education Ministers in EEC countries to apply differential payments for teachers in junior secondary schools.

Sir Keith Joseph: I shall write to my hon. Friend.

Central Advisory Councils

Mr. Parris asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make a statement as to the future of the two central advisory councils as provided for in section 4 of the Education Act 1944; and if he plans to seek any change in the requirements in section 5 that he should make an annual report to Parliament.

Sir Keith Joseph: In its response to the second report from the Education, Science and Arts Committee, Session 1981-82 (Cmnd. 8648) the Government concluded that there is no need for separate and permanent central advisory councils and that they would take the first legislative opportunity to repeal Section 4 of the Education Act 1944. As explained then, successive Secretaries of State have found it more effective to charge committees of inquiry or independent individuals with specific remits for advice than to refer to permanent councils. The Education Bill introduced in another place therefore includes the proposal that the provision in the Education Act 1944 for two central advisory councils for education be repealed.

The Bill also proposes the repeal of the provision which requires the holder of my office to make an annual report to Parliament. The report generates little interest because most of the facts and statistics contained in it have already been reported to Parliament, or made public in other ways. It no longer justifies the commitment of time and cost made by the Department in its preparation. The bibliography to the chapter relating to the Department in the annual public expenditure White Paper provides a reference point for the main publications about education and science.

Disabled Persons

Mr. Wigley asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will publish in the Official Report a list of those organisations which he has consulted concerning the Disabled Persons (Services, Consultation and Representation) Bill, the date on which the consultation letter was sent out by his Department, and the date by which responses are needed.

Mr. Dunn: My right hon. Friend is consulting the education committees of the Association of County Councils and the Association of Metropolitan Authorities and the Society of Education Officers. The consultation letter was despatched on 11 February; responses are required by 4 March.

Education Personnel

Sir Peter Hordern asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science (1) if he will give the number of full-time teachers and lecturers, and part-time, listed separately, in 1960, 1970, 1980, and at the latest available date;

(2) if he will give the number of those employed in education, who neither lecture nor teach in 1980, 1970, 1960 and at the latest available date.

Mr. Chris Patten: The figures available for teaching and non-teaching staff for the years requested are as follows: The latest year for which figures are available on a comparable basis is 1984.

Schools (Asbestos)

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what grants are available to local education authorities which have school buildings containing dangerous amounts of asbestos.

Mr. Dunn: There are no grants for this purpose. It is for local education authorities individually to accommodate the costs of dealing with asbestos within the total resources, capital and current, available to them.

School Year

Mr. Stephen Ross asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science when he expects to reply to the letter from the Association of Holiday Centres supporting the proposal for a four-term year in schools.

Mr. Dunn: A reply was sent on 17 February.

Mr. Stephen Ross asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what representations he has received in favour of a four-term year for schools in England and Wales;

(2) when he expects to respond to the proposals submitted by the Association of County Councils in favour of a four-term year in schools.

Mr. Dunn: A paper was forwarded last August to my right hon. Friend by the National Association of Head Teachers. More recently the National Association of Holiday Centres Ltd has expressed an interest.

Proposals in favour of a four term year for schools in England have not been submitted to the Government by the Association of County Councils, but I understand that a consultative document on the subject has been recently issued by the Association with a wide circulation as a basis for discussion. I will be interested to see the responses which are made to the document.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Official Secrets Act

13. Mr. Freud asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will institute an inquiry into the operation of section 2 of the Official Secrets Act in cases of disclosure of Government papers.

Mr. Hurd: No.

Sentencing Policy

16. Mr. Galley asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he has any plans for further changes in sentencing policy for serious crimes.

Mr. Hurd: The Government's policy is to provide courts with a full range of sentencing powers, including substantial terms of imprisonment for the most serious offences. We keep these powers under review. I intend to introduce legislation as soon as possible to increase to life imprisonment the maximum penalty for carrying firearms in the furtherance of crime.

Crime Prevention

17. Mr. Mates asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what action his Department is taking to follow up the seminar held at No. 10 Downing street on crime prevention.

Mr. Hurd: I would refer my hon. Friend to the reply given to a question from my hon. Friend the Member for Penrith and Border (Mr. Maclean) earlier today.

40. Mr. Fallon asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the progress of the crime prevention initiatives being taken by his Department.

62. Mr. Sackville asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what further steps he is taking to promote crime prevention.

Mr. Giles Shaw: The recent crime prevention seminar chaired by my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister resulted in agreement on a range of initiatives by industry, commerce and Government which will be followed up at a seminar to be chaired by my right hon. Friend the Home Secretary in the summer. They include: a British Standard for car security which will be prepared by the British Standards Institution with the help of the motor manufacturers; the insurance industry will consider what scope there is to encourage policy holders to improve the security of their homes; advisory packages on security in inner city households and commercial premises will be produced; and studies will be established and completed urgently on crime on the London Underground, security on new residential estates and violence to bus crews and to health service staff.

Work is progressing well on the five local crime prevention projects and the national community programme crime prevention initiative announced last autumn. Following encouraging results in London and the Midlands, the "Magpies" television and press crime prevention campaign has been extended to the north of England for a six-week period from 11 February.

43. Mr. Maclennan asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what consultations he has held with local authorities on crime prevention.

Mr. Giles Shaw: Local authority associations are represented on the Home Office standing conference on crime prevention. There is also regular consultation with individual authorities on crime prevention including the development of the five local crime prevention projects and the national community programme crime prevention initiative announced last autumn. The crime prevention unit in the Home Office in collaboration with the Society of Local Authority Chief Executives and the Association of Chief Police Officers, has gathered information on good local crime prevention practice which it is planned to disseminate to local authorities.

45. Mr. Sedgemore asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he will establish a fund providing pump priming finance to selected local schemes involving the community in crime prevention.

Mr. Giles Shaw: Funds are already available under the crime prevention initiative under the community programme as well as through the urban programme and private sponsorship. In addition my right hon. Friend has made funds available to provide co-ordinators for the five local crime prevention projects which he announced last October.

48. Mrs. Roe asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the progress made in establishing crime prevention projects with his Department's funding in the five towns selected for this experiment.

Mr. Giles Shaw: Local co-ordinators have been selected in four of the areas, and the local steering committees will shortly be meeting in each area to decide what measures should be taken. The police, local statutory and voluntary agencies, and the private sector are all playing their part. The projects have generated much local interest.

51. Miss Boothroyd asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has for crime prevention schemes within the Sandwell area.

Mr. Giles Shaw: Although my right hon. Friend has no specific plans to introduce crime prevention schemes in the Sandwell area, the chief constable of West Midlands gives a high priority to crime prevention in his force strategy. There are 23 neighbourhood watch schemes in operation, an active crime prevention panel, and a number of new crime prevention initiatives. For example, the police and the district council are exploring the possibility of sending out crime prevention campaign literature with rate demands; the crime prevention panel is working with the press to obtain a regular crime prevention feature in the local newspaper; a conference on security in the offices of building societies and post offices was held on 18 February; and a traders early warning system operates in the area.

59. Mr. Wareing asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he has any plans to finance crime prevention schemes on Merseyside.

Mr. Giles Shaw: No. As part of the expansion of the community programme, however, a substantial number of places are now available for local crime prevention projects. I understand that three such schemes have been approved in Merseyside, two of which are already in operation. Furthermore, funding for crime prevention projects continues to be available through the urban programme.

Mr. Thurnham asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what new measures he is proposing to reduce crime committed by young people; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mellor: Our aim is to ensure that the police and the courts have adequate powers to deal with crime, including crime committed by young people, and we are considering a number of specific proposals for stengthening courts' powers to deal with young offenders. The two major crime prevention measures that my right hon. Friend announced last autumn—the establishment of local crime prevention initiatives supported by the Home Office and the inclusion of crime prevention projects in the community programme—are relevant to crimes committed by the young; and my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Education and Science is also considering a proposal to support schemes in schools to combat juvenile crime.

Civil Defence

18. Mr. Aspinwall asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will consider endowing a British university chair for civil defence.

19. Mr. Speller asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will consider establishing a research fellowship in civil defence.

25. Mr. Baldry asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he will make it his policy to establish a research fellowship in civil defence.

Mr. Giles Shaw: I would refer my hon. Friends to the reply given to a question from my hon. Friend the Member for Twickenham (Mr. Jessel) earlier today.

34. Mr. Gerald Bowden asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how he will establish whether local authorities are meeting the objectives and priorities he will be setting them on the civil defence register.

Mr. Giles Shaw: Whilst there is no register, I can confirm that monitoring local authority performance is included in the proposed programme for implementing the Civil Defence Regulations 1983.

56. Mr. Bill Walker asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he is satisfied that the civil defence adviser has sufficient staff to enable him to assess what local authorities are doing to meet their civil defence commitments.

73. Mr. Waller asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he is satisfied that the civil defence adviser has sufficient staff to enable him to assess what local authorities are doing to meet their civil defence requirements.

Mr. Giles Shaw: I am satisfied at present, but I shall be looking at this in preparing a staged programme for implementation of the 1983 regulations.

69. Mr. Terlezki asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he will be in a position to start providing regular reports to the House on how local authorities are proceeding with their civil defence requirements.

Mr. Giles Shaw: I would refer my hon. Friend to the reply given to a question from my hon. Friend the Member for Newark (Mr. Alexander) earlier today.

Autocrime

20. Mrs. Virginia Bottomley asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what steps he is taking to improve crime prevention with regard to rising crime involving motor vehicles.

Mr. Giles Shaw: The action points agreed at the recent crime prevention seminar held by my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister included agreement by the British Standards Institution to prepare a British standard for car security with the help of motor manufacturers for publication next autumn. At the same time, the working group on car security of the Home Office standing conference on crime prevention seeks through its publicity to increase the public's awareness of autocrime and the scope for preventing it.

41. Sir Anthony Grant asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what progress is being made in the campaign of his Department against motor vehicle theft; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Giles Shaw: I would refer my hon. Friend to the reply given to a question from my hon. Friend the Member for Surrey, South-West (Mrs. Bottomley) earlier today.

Prisoner Segregation (Report)

21. Mr. Pike asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the timetable for the publication of the report of Her Majesty's chief inspector of prisons on procedures for segregating prisoners under rule 43 of the prison rules.

Mr. Mellor: My right hon. Friend has received the report and will be publishing it shortly.

Police Manpower

22. Mr. Watts asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what criteria he uses to determine the appropriate level of police manpower.

Mr. Giles Shaw: My right hon. Friend considers applications for increases in police establishments on the basis of the demonstrated needs of police forces, and in the light of advice from Her Majesty's inspectors of constabulary. Among the factors which he takes into account are the current number of police officers and civilian staff; the purpose for which the additional posts are needed; the scope for redeployment of police officers and greater use of civilian staff; the population size and distribution; the level of crime; and the particular policing responsibilities of the area.

Crime Statistics

23. Mr. Torney asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he proposes to increase the information available to his Department on the number and nature of victims of crime.

Mr. Mellor: We have no current plans to increase the centrally collated information on victims beyond that supplied by the British crime survey, the regular collection of statistics on homicide and that available to the Criminal Injuries Compensation Board; information from all these sources is published. However, we do intend to publish an analysis of data available from the 18 police forces who record the fullest information; and information about victims is also collected in specific research studies when appropriate.

32. Mr. Ashton asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department for the most recent period for which figures are available, what is the number of crimes committed each day in England and Wales.

49. Mr. Hardy asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many criminal offences were committed on an average day in 1985; and what was the number committed on an average day in 1979.

Mr. Mellor: The information available relates to the number of notifiable offences recorded by the police and is published quarterly in Home Office statistical bulletins and annually in the Command Paper "Criminal Statistics, England and Wales". The average daily number of notifiable offences recorded by the police was 6,950 in 1979 and 9,830 in the period October 1984 to September 1985. Information for the whole of 1985 is not yet available.

54. Mr. Amess asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will call for a report from the chief constable of Essex as to the total number of crimes reported in Basildon in each of the last three years; and what was the detection rate in each of those years.

Mr. Mellor: The information that is available is of notifiable offences recorded in Essex police force area, figures for which are published annually in "Criminal Statistics, England and Wales, Supplementary Tables" (table s3.1 of volume 3 of the issue for 1984). The clear-up rate in the Essex police force area was 40 per cent. in 1982, 41 per cent. in 1983 and 40 per cent. in 1984.

63. Mr. Allan Rogers asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will state the increase since 1979 in the number of victims of crime.

Mr. Mellor: The information requested is not available. I would refer the hon. Member to the reply given to a question from the hon. Member for Sheffield, Central (Mr. Caborn) on 23 January, at columns 257-58.

66. Mr. James Hamilton asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will state, in respect of the most recent period of 12 months for which figures are available, the percentage increase since the 12 months ended March 1979 in all offences, and offences of (a) violence against the person, (b) burglary, (c) theft, (d) fraud and forgery and (e) criminal damage, respectively.

Mr. Mellor: Figures for 1979 are not directly comparable with those for 1984-85 because of changes made by the new counting rules which were introduced at the beginning of 1980. The increase in the numbers of notifiable offences recorded between 1980 and the 12 months ending 30 September 1985 was 23 per cent. for violence against the person, 41 per cent. for burglary, 28 per cent. for theft and handling stolen goods, 28 per cent. for fraud and forgery and 46 per cent. for criminal damage. The numbers of such offences are published annually in the Command Paper "Criminal Statistics, England and Wales" and in quarterly Home Office statistical bulletins.

68. Mr. Dixon asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will state, for the most recent period of 12 months for which figures are available, the percentage increase in crimes of violence against the person compared with the 12 months ended in March 1979.

Mr. Mellor: I would refer the hon. Member to the reply given to a question from the hon. Member for Workington (Mr. Campbell-Savours) on 23 January, at column 433.

Licensing Laws

24. Mr. Greg Knight asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will bring forward legislation in this Session to amend the licensing laws affecting England and Wales.

Mr. Mellor: I would refer my hon. Friend to the reply given to a question from my hon. and learned Friend the Member for Mid-Bedfordshire (Mr. Lyell) on 4 February, at column 102.

42. Mr. Hirst asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he proposes to seek to make any change in the permitted hours of opening of licensed premises, in the light of the recent report on opening hours in Scotland; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mellor: I would refer my hon. Friend to the reply given to a question from my hon. and learned Friend the Member for Mid-Bedfordshire (Mr. Lyell) on 4 February, at column 102.

Holloway Prison

26. Mr. Patchett asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what progress has been made in building a new psychiatric unit to replace C.1. unit at Holloway prison.

Mr. Mellor: I would refer the hon. Member to the reply given to a question by my hon. Friend the Member for Cheltenham (Mr. Irving) on 24 January, at column 324.

65. Mr. Weetch asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what progress has been made in carrying out improvements to CI unit at Holloway prison.

Mr. Mellor: Work began on 17 February on a series of modifications to 10 cells on C1 unit, including replacement of sanitary fittings and plumbing arrangements, recessing of light fittings and radiators, replacement of flooring, improvements to observation within the cells, and redecoration in suitable colours. Improvements are also being made to facilities and accommodation for staff on the unit. This phase of the work, which is expected to be completed by the end of August, will be followed by the provision of an association area and a day room to improve facilities for out of cell activities, which is likely to take a further three months to complete.

Metropolitan Police

27. Mr. Norman Atkinson asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will now announce his intended budget for the total cost of the Metropolitan police for 1986-87.

Mr. Giles Shaw: I would refer the hon. Member to the reply given to a question from my hon. Friend the Member for Westminster, North (Mr. Wheeler) on Tuesday 18 February, at column 125.

Mr. Simon Hughes asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will give the present number and percentage of metropolitan police officers currently employed in the drug squad in (a) London and (b) the Metropolitan police area.

Mr. Giles Shaw: On 31 January 1986 the strength of the Metropolitan police central drugs squad was 57—some 0·2 per cent. of the total force strength of 26,870. The squad is responsible for major drugs investigations throughout the 40 boroughs and districts which comprise the Metropolitan police district. Other drugs offences are dealt with by officers at divisional level either as part of normal duties or in small units set up from time to time to respond to particular localised problems; I would refer the hon. Member to the reply given to a question from the hon. Member for Newham, North West (Mr. Banks) on 13 January, at column 459.

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will provide a breakdown by district of the civil cases initiated by members of the public against alleged wrongful acts of police officers in the Metropolitan police for 1985.

Mr. Giles Shaw: A breakdown by police district of the 175 such cases initiated during 1985 could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what are the amounts paid in out-of-court settlements of claims arising from alleged wrongful acts of Metropolitan police officers in 1985; what were the amounts paid under awards made by courts in similar cases in 1985; and what was the number of cases initiated in 1985 and the number concluded.

Mr. Giles Shaw: The total amount paid in 1985 by the Metropolitan police in settlement of claims arising from allegations of misconduct by police officers (whether or not formal proceedings were instituted) was £193,588. The total amount paid by the force under awards made by the courts in similar cases during 1985 was £13,949. The number of civil actions initiated against the force in 1985 was 175, and the number disposed of was 68.

Firearms

28. Mr. Boyes asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what has been the increase since 1978 in the number of crimes involving the use of firearms.

Mr. Mellor: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given to a question from the hon. Member for Southend, East (Mr. Taylor) on 23 January, at column 257.

Crimes (Clearing-up Rate)

29. Mr. Chris Smith asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the average number of crimes cleared up in a year by a Metropolitan police officer.

Mr. Giles Shaw: The number of crimes cleared up by the Metropolitan police during 1984 was 122,841. The strength of the force was 26,766 on 31 December 1984. The ratio of offences cleared up to police strength was 4·58, but this figure has very little meaning because crime detection represents only a part of total police effort and because many officers may be involved n clearing up a single offence.

Racial Attacks

30. Ms. Clare Short asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he has any proposals to increase the information available to his Department on the incidence of racial attacks.

Mr. Giles Shaw: The guidance which the Association of Chief Police Officers issued in October on the handling of racial attacks drew attention to the importance of obtaining reliable local information about the incidence of racial attacks, in order that police forces should be responsive to such incidents in each area. There are no present plans to collate these records nationally, but the Department regularly seeks information about the nature and extent of racial attacks, and measures being taken to combat them.

Heroin

31. Mr. Allan Roberts asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will meet the members of the Merseyside police authority to discuss heroin sales on Merseyside.

Mr. Mellor: We have received no such request for a meeting, but we should be willing to consider any representations from the police authority about this problem.

57. Mr. Merchant asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will give the latest figures on heroin addiction in the north-east; and what was the comparable figure in 1983.

Mr. Mellor: The available information relates to addicts notified to the Home Office as addicted to heroin and is given for police force areas in the north-east in the following table. Corresponding figures for 1985 will not be available before the late summer.

Drug addicts notified to the Home Office as addicted to heroin (alone or in combination with other drugs)

Number of persons

Police force area	New addicts		Former addicts
	1983	1984	1983	1984
Cleveland	6	2	—	1
Durham	5	5	—	3
Northumbria	9	36	2	6
Total	20	43	2	10

67. Mr. Patrick Thompson asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will give figures for the known cases of cocaine and heroin addiction for the last six months of 1985.

Mr. Mellor: The latest available information on addicts notified to the Home Office relates to 1984. The numbers reported as addicted to heroin and cocaine are given in the following table; corresponding figures for 1985 will not be available before the late summer.

Drug addicts notified to the Home Office in 1984 as addicted to heroin or cocaine

United Kingdom Number of persons

	New addicts	Former addicts
Heroine alone or with other drugs but not with cocaine	4,547	1,499
Cocaine alone or with other drugs but not with heroin	92	9
Heroin and cocaine together, with or without other drugs	379	186

Sentences (Right of Appeal)

33. Mr. Spencer asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he intends to take steps to seek to give the prosecution a right of appeal against sentences.

Mr. Mellor: We have been considering whether there is an acceptable means of meeting public concern about over-lenient sentences. A number of options will be discussed in a White Paper on criminal justice matters which we intend to publish before long.

Sunday Trading

35. Mr. Nellist asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what are the latest numbers of representations, for and against, he has received on the Shops Bill [Lords].

Mr. Waddington: Since the publication of the Shops Bill I have received 58 representations in favour, and 25,282 representations opposed to the Government's proposals.

Mr. Wheeler asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he will make a statement on the nature of representations received to date on the Shops Bill [Lords].

Mr. Hurd: I have received representations against the Bill from 0·05 per cent. of the electorate. Although opinion polls always need to be treated with care, it is worth noting that they have consistently shown that about two thirds of the electorate support the Bill.

Prison Discipline

36. Miss Fookes asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will introduce a new prison disciplinary action of the kind recommended by the Prior committee on the prison disciplinary system.

60. Mr. Haynes asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will introduce a new prison disciplinary tribunal to carry out the adjudicating functions now carried out by prison boards of visitors.

Mr. Mellor: I refer the hon. Members to the reply given to a question from the hon. Member for Caithness and Sutherland (Mr. Maclennan) on Thursday 13 February at column 516.

Visiting Forces Act

37. Mr. Ashdown asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will estimate the number of people in Britain who are currently able, in appropriate circumstances, to claim primary jurisdiction under the Visiting Forces Act.

Mr. Mellor: No information is currently available on the number of service authorities in the United Kingdom able to exercise powers under section 2 of the Visiting Forces Act 1952.

Victim Support Schemes

38. Mr. Barron asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make additional funds available to the victim support scheme.

Mr. Mellor: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given to a question from the hon. Member for Beaconsfield (Mr. Smith) on 14 January, at column 545.

44. Mr. Chapman asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what response he has had to his statement on 15 January about financial support for individual victims' support schemes.

Mr. Mellor: We have received only one or two representations referring specifically to the statement made on 14 January, at column 545. Since the beginning of December we, however, have had some 85 letters about the general question of funding for victims support schemes.

Peacock Inquiry

39. Mr. Holt asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if his Department has given its full evidence to the Peacock inquiry.

Mr. Giles Shaw: The Home Office submitted written evidence, largely of a factual nature, to the committee on financing the BBC in July 1985, and has since responded to a number of specific requests for further information. In November four officials gave oral evidence at the committee's request. There are no present plans to offer further evidence though, if the committee requests further information, the Department will of course seek to help.

Grievous Bodily Harm

46. Mr. Campbell-Savours asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he has any plans to seek to amend legislation relating to the offence of grievous bodily harm.

Mr. Mellor: My right hon. Friend has no such plans at present.

Penal Establishments (Standards)

47. Mr. Freeson asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will introduce a code of minimum standards for penal establishments.

Mr. Mellor: My right hon. Friend has no plans to do so.

Group Squatting

50. Mr. Hannam asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what action he proposes to take to strengthen the law against organised group squatting in commercial and residential properties.

Mr. Mellor: We have no plans to amend the criminal law relating to trespass on premises, but my right hon. Friend would be prepared to consider giving support to a measure making it an offence, without reasonable excuse, to enter residential premises as a trespasser.

Prison Building

52. Sir John Farr asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the progress of the new prison building programme.

Mr. Mellor: The current building programme includes 16 new prisons, of which three have now been completed, five are under construction, and the remaining eight are at various stages of planning and design. Together these new establishments will provide some 7,800 new places by the early 1990s. As a result of the public expenditure decisions announced in January, design work is now also planned to start on two further establishments. In addition, we are undertaking an extensive programme of modernisation and redevelopment of the existing prison estate, with major capital work in progress or planned at about 100 establishments including almost all of the Victorian local prisons. This part of the programme includes a number of place producing schemes which will provide overall a further 5,400 new places by the same date, making a total of 13,200 in all.

Family Courts

53. Mr. McCrindle asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the implications for juvenile crime policy of the proposals for a family court system.

Mr. Mellor: The Family Court review which my right hon. and learned Friend, the Lord Chancellor, and the Home Secretary have set up will be examining the extent to which the jurisdiction of the juvenile court might be included in that of any future family court. The Government will await the outcome of the review before reaching any conclusions on the implications for the criminal jurisdication of the juvenile court.

Black Business Initiatives

55. Mr. Tom Cox asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what action is being taken by his Department in helping black business initiatives.

Mr. Waddington: On 26 September 1985 my right hon. Friend announced an initiative to promote black business enterprise. New business advice centres to provide the full range of local enterprise agency services are being established in inner city areas where there is a significant Afro-Caribbean population. These agencies will be open on equal terms to all sections of the community. The agencies are funded and managed jointly by the Home Office, the local authority, the private sector and local community organisations involved in business advice. The first three agencies are being set up in Birmingham, North London and Lewisham. Staff are being appointed and it is expected that the agencies will be fully operational within the next few months.

In addition, the following local authority posts designed to help the development of ethnic minority businesses are supported by grant from the Home Office paid under section 11 of the Local Government Act 1966:

Local Authority	Title and number of business development posts funded
Berkshire	1 Business Adviser and clerical support
Blackburn	1 Economic Development Officer
Bradford	1 Projects Officer
Brent	1 Principal Business Adviser
	1 Business Adviser
	1 Finance Systems Adviser and clerical support
Coventry	1 Ethnic Minority Planning Officer
Derbyshire	2 Officers in Derby Small Business Centre
Hackney	1 Business Development Officer
	1 Business Promotion Officer
Hammersmith	1 Business Adviser
Islington	1 Ethnic Minority Employment Development Officer
Kensington and Chelsea	1 Manager
	1 Finance Officer
	1 Technical Services Officer
	1 Research Officer
	1 Secretarial Assistant
	1 Small Business Adviser
Lewisham	1 Business Development Officer
Sheffield	2 Business Development Workers
	1 Training Development Worker
	1 Research Worker
Southwark	2 Black Enterprise Advisers
Tower Hamlets	1 Business Adviser
	1 Community Liaison Planner
	1 Administrative Assistant
West Midlands	1 Initiatives Officer
	4 Business Advisers
	1 Property/Legal Officer and clerical support

Immigration

58. Mr. Corbyn asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what recent representations he has received on the requirement of visas for arrivals from Sri Lanka.

Mr. Waddington: None other than those from the hon. Member.

Police Community Forums

61. Mr. Lawler asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many police community forums are now in existence and meeting regularly.

Mr. Giles Shaw: As I said in reply to a question from my hon. Friend on 23 January, a columns 253-54, Her Majesty's inspectors of constabulary keep us informed of progress in establishing committees in different areas. They do this through the year in the reports of their inspection visits to forces and we do not therefore have information on the present position across the country as a whole.

Offenders (After-care Hostels)

64. Mr. Park asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he will lift the current moratorium on his Department's grant-aid for the development of additional after-care hostels for offenders.

Mr. Mellor: While the recently established study of the after-care grant and approved hostels schemes is in progress, it would be premature to take decisions on the long-term funding of accommodation in the community for offenders and ex-offenders, including any programme for the development of additional after-care hostels.

Torture

70. Mr. Simon Hughes asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what steps Her Majesty's Government are taking with regard to United Nations resolution 32/64 of 8 December 1977 calling on all member states to make a unilateral declaration against torture and embody it in their own legislation.

Mr. Mellor: The United Kingdom has signed, and intends to ratify, the United Nations convention on torture which givs effect to the principles underlying the United Nations declaration that gave rise to the resolution.

Television and Radio (Political Balance)

71. Mr. Nicholas Brown asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what means he uses to monitor the political balance of the BBC and of independent television and radio; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Giles Shaw: It is the responsibility of the broadcasting authorities to ensure that due impartiality is observed in their radio and television programmes as respects matters of political or industrial controversy or relating to current public policy. The Government do not monitor television and radio programmes, but where appropriate it does reflect public concern about programme matters as evidenced by press and Parliamentay exchange and correspondence received from hon. Members and from the public.

British Broadcasting Corporation

72. Mr. Wallace asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he last met the chairman of the governors of the BBC; and what was discussed.

Mr. Giles Shaw: My right hon. Friend met the chairman of the BBC, together with the chairman of the Independent Broadcasting Authority and their respective directors general, on 17 December 1985. he discussed with them public anxieties about depictions of violence and sex on television.

Coal Industry Dispute

74. Mr. Ray Powell asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many charges were made against miners during the period of the miners' strike, march 1984 to march 1985; what was the nature of the charges; how many were subsequently withdrawn or dismissed; and how many convictions have been proven.

Mr. Giles Shaw: A total of 10,372 criminal charges were brought in connection with the NUM dispute between 13 March 1984 and 5 March 1985 for the following offences. Details of defendants' occupations and the outcome of charges are not recorded centrally; but in a letter which I sent to my hon. Friend the Member for Northampton, North (Mr. Marlow) on 21 November 1985 I gave information obtained from police forces about the outcome of charges brought for offences of riot and/or unlawful assembly. A copy of the letter is in the Library.

European Convention on Human Rights

Mr. Bruce asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what international representations he has received advocating the inclusion of the European convention on human rights into British law.

Mr. Mellor: None that I have been able to trace.

Worm Digging (Alnwick)

Mr. Beith asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what representations he has received about the proposed Alnwick district council bye-law relating to worm digging, which was submitted to him by the council in July 1985; when he expects to announce his decision on the rule; and whether he will make a statement.

Mr. Mellor: Two local associations of sea anglers have represented that the byelaws will deprive members of an important source of bait, and that the byelaws are repugnant to the public right of fishing. From the evidence produced by the district council, we are satisfied that these byelaws are justified. While the validity of any byelaws is ultimately for determination by the courts, in our opinion the byelaws do not infringe the public right of fishing. Accordingly, we propose to confirm them on 21 February.

Drug Abuse

Mr. Simon Hughes asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what representations he has received in the past 12 months from the Metropolitan police concerning resources to tackle the problem of drug abuse.

Mr. Giles Shaw: Last October the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis made an application for an increase of 262 in the police establishment and 17 in the civil staff ceiling for this purpose. On 21 October my right hon. Friend announced his agreement in principle to an increase of 50 in the police establishment from 1 April. He is considering the balance of the application as part of the urgent review of the specific manpower needs of the force.

Mr. Simon Hughes asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what estimate he has of the percentage of drug addicts who are registered.

Mr. Mellor: Since drug misuse is usually a covert activity, it is not possible to make a reliable estimate of the total number of drug addicts and consequently of the proportion of drug addicts who have been notified to the Chief Medical Officer at the Home Office. Some research carried out in two urban areas in England in 1981 suggested that the number of notified addicts was only about one fifth of the number of opioid addicts in the local population at that time. However, it is likely that the proportion of drug addicts notified varies greatly according to the locality and over time.

Lordna Lucas

Mr. John Fraser asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether any disciplinary proceedings have been instituted following the award of £26,000 damages against the Metropolitan police in respect of findings of assault, forced imprisonment and malicious prosecution against Lordna Lucas; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Giles Shaw: I understand that the Metropolitan police are considering the implications of the award of damages to Mrs. Lucas.

News International Plant, Wapping

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many complaints have been made against officers on duty at the News International plant at Wapping.

Mr. Giles Shaw: Three up to and including 18 February.

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many Society of Graphical and Allied Trades and National Graphical Association members have been arrested at the News International plant at Wapping; what charges have been brought against those arrested; how many have been convicted; and in how many cases charges have not been brought or have been dropped.

Mr. Giles Shaw: I understand from the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis that information on the trade union membership of those arrested or charged is not recorded.

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if officers from forces outside the Metropolitan police district have been placed on standby for mutual aid duties in connection with the current trade dispute at the News International plant at Wapping.

Mr. Giles Shaw: No.

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will call for a report from the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis as to what powers officers of the Metropolitan police have used to establish road blocks in approach roads in the Tower Hamlets police district and near to the News International plant in Wapping.

Mr. Giles Shaw: I understand from the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis that roads in the vicinity of the News International plant have been closed on two occasions in accordance with directions which he has issued under section 52 of the Metropolitan Police Act 1839.

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many arrests have been made by the Metropolitan police in connection with the current trade dispute at the News International plant at Wapping.

Mr. Giles Shaw: 194 up to and including 18 February.

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) if he will call for a report from the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis as to how many officers from the metropolitan police have been deployed in each day at the News International plant in Wapping; what are the ranks of each officer; which police district the officers have been drawn from; and what is the average daily cost of the present police operation;

(2) if he will call for a report from the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis as to what district support have been deployed by the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis in the present police operation at the News International plant in Wapping; and how many units have been deployed, on which occasions, and from which police districts the units were drawn.

Mr. Giles Shaw: The numbers and ranks of officers up to the rank of chief superintendent who were deployed at the News International plant at Wapping on each day during the period 25 January to 16 February are as follows. A deputy assistant commissioner, assisted by a commander, is in overall charge of the police operation.

The district support units and other officers deployed at various times at the News International plant have been drawn from districts throughout the Metropolitan police district.

The other information sought either is not readily available or could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis has made available to officers on duty at the News International plant in Wapping any of the following riot equipment: plastic bullets, riot shields, North Atlantic Treaty Organisation-style riot helmets, shin guards, overalls and long truncheons; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Giles Shaw: The usual protective equipment has been available. Plastic baton rounds have not been made available. Long truncheons are carried only by mounted officers, as standard issue.

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will call for a report from the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis as to what powers were used by officers of the Metropolitan police to stop two coachloads of Society of Graphical and Allied Trades and Nation Graphical Association members traveling to Southampton; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Giles Shaw: I would refer the hon. Member to the reply given to a question from the hon. Member for Newham, North East (Mr. Leighton) 18 February, at column 125. No officers from the Metropolitan police were involved in this incident.

Dr. Skuse (Retirement)

Miss Maynard asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what were the precise reasons for Dr. Skuse retiring; and on what terms he retired.

Mr. Hurd: Dr. Skuse retired voluntarily, and it is not the practice to divulge details of the reasons for such retirements. Dr. Skuse retired on the terms which are payable to mobile civil servants who retire in the public interest; these are set out in paragraphs 10.3-10.8 of the "Rules of the Principal Civil Service Pension Scheme 1974".

Askham Grange Prison

Ms. Harman asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how much it costs to keep a woman and her baby in Her Majesty's prison, Askham Grange, for a week.

Mr. Mellor: In the financial year 1984-85 the average weekly cost of keeping a person in custody in Her Majesty's prison, Askham Grange was £283. Information on the cost of keeping a woman and her baby in Her Majesty's prison, Askham Grange, for a week is not available.

Ms. Harman asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will move Lucy Kerr from Askham Grange prison to a prison nearer her home in Peckham.

Mr. Mellor: Any application Ms. Kerr makes for transfer to the south-east will be carefully considered.

New Commonwealth and Pakistan (Visitors)

Mr. Proctor asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many visitors from the New Commonwealth and Pakistan were admitted into the United Kingdom in the first six months of 1985 as a result of the representations of hon. Members; what has since become of them; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waddington: Separate statistics are not maintained of persons given leave to enter following representations from hon. and right hon. Members.

Police Recruitment

Mr. Leigh asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the numbers of police officers recruited in the last 12 months.

Mr. Hurd: In the last seven years the total manpower in the police service, police officers and civilians, in England and Wales has increased by about 16,000 to 159,896 on 31 December 1985. Over 11,000 of this increase were police officers and there were 120,702 police officers on 31 December 1985. Over 5,500 officers were recruited in 1985, and there was a net gain of 129, compared with December 1984.

Direct Broadcasting by Satellite

Mr. Wheeler asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what action he proposes to take on the report of the review of the Independent Broadcasting Authority into the further development of plans for direct broadcasting by satellite.

Mr. Hurd: On 31 July 1985 my noble Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State announced in another place that we had asked the Independent Broadcasting Authority to carry out a review of the prospects for launching a viable DBS project under sections 37 to 41 of the Cable and Broadcasting Act 1984.

The chairman of the IBA has now reported to me the outcome of that review. On the basis of the various submissions made to it, the authority has concluded that, in spite of financial and other uncertainties which inevitably exist in a high-risk enterprise of this kind, there is sufficient potential commercial interest in developing a DBS service in this country to justify bringing into force the relevant provisions of the Cable and Broadcasting Act.

The Government welcome this conclusion. The Government's role is not to provide a public subsidy, but to apply the regulatory framework already set up by Parliament which gives the opportunity for potential participants to proceed with a service.

Accordingly, in the light of the IBA's advice that there is commercial interest, I have now decided to bring into force sections 37 to 41 of the Cable and Broadcasting Act 1984. I am inviting the IBA to advertise for programme contractors for three DBS channels under the arrangements agreed by the world administrative radio conference in 1977. As to the source of satellite provision, it will be open to potential contractors to consider proposals from suppliers either in this country or overseas. I envisage that, in assessing the applications for a DBS contract, the IBA will take account of the overall economic implications for the United Kingdom.

SOCIAL SERVICES

Drugs (Safety)

Mr. Pavitt asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what action is taken by his Department to ensure the safety and quality of all drugs imported from overseas for use in the National Health Service.

Mr. Hayhoe: The Department operates, on behalf of the licensing authority, a licensing system for medicinal products in accordance with the Medicines Act 1968 and European legislation.

A medicinal product may be imported for sale in the United Kingdom only if a product licence or product licence (parallel importing) has been issued. Before issuing such licences, the licensing authority must be satisfied as to the safety, efficacy and quality of the product. The Department publishes guidelines on the information required by the licensing authority in support of applications for product licences. Once a product licence has been issued, all batches of medicinal products imported for sale must comply with it.

The premises, manufacturing processes and quality assurance procedures of overseas manufacturers are subject to inspection by DHSS medicines inspectors or by the regulatory authority of the country of origin. There are also arrangements for the sampling and testing of imported medicines by the medicines testing laboratory.

The Department has arranged for the establishment by health authorities of arrangements for notifying defects of medicinal products and operates a central defect report centre. The Department also operates the Committee on Safety of Medicines' arrangements for monitoring adverse reactions to medicinal products (literature monitoring and the yellow card system). These warning arrangements apply to imported products as well as to those originating in the United Kingdom.

Hospital Closures

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will list the hospitals which have been closed down in each health authority during the last seven years and those which are scheduled for closure in each health authority during the next year.

Mr. Hayhoe: For hospitals approved for complete closure between May 1979 and 31 March 1985 I refer the hon. Member to the reply given to the hon. Member for Oldham, West (Mr. Meacher) by my predecessor on 20 May 1985 at columns 317-29.

The total number of hospitals approved for complete closure between 1 April and 30 June 1985, the latest period for which information is available, is seven.

Details of the individual hospitals are as follows:

Hospitals approved for complete closure 1 April 1985-30 June 1985

Region	District	Hospital	Date approved
Yorkshire	Leeds Eastern	Marguerite Hepton	May 1985
Yorkshire	Leeds Western	Grassington	May 1985
Yorkshire	York	Naburn	May 1985
North West Thames	South Bedfordshire	Priory	May 1985
South West Thames	Richmond, Twickenham and Roehampton	Westmoor House	June 1985
Wessex	Isle of Wight	Longford	April 1985
West Midlands	South Warwickshire	Monroe Devis Maternity Home	June 1985

I am sorry I cannot give the hon. Member the other information she seeks as it is not collected centrally.

Rates (Low-paid)

Mr. Adley asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he has any plans to increase the amount of assistance available from his Department's budget to help those on low incomes with the payment of rates; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Newton: The White Paper (Cmnd. 9691) sets out the Government's proposals for social security benefits including assistance with rates through housing benefit, which will, however, need to be developed in the light of discussions on the Green Paper on local government finance.

EC (Medical Assistance)

Mr. Irving asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) what arrangements have been made with regard to the provision of medical assistance in Spain and Portugal for citizens of the other member states of the European Community; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what progress has been made with regard to the integration of health services in the member States of the European Community; and if he will make a statement on Community plans to provide free and uniform medical assistance for citizens throughout the member states.

Mr. Whitney: Under the European Community reciprocal health care arrangements, nationals of a member state can obtain immediately necessary medical care, or in certain closely defined circumstances, other medical care, when visiting, or retiring to, another member state on the same terms as the insured nationals of that member state. These arrangements now extend to Spain and Portugal. Information about entitlement to free, or reduced cost, medical treatment abroad is set out in leaflet SA30, available from local offices of the Department.

There are wide variations in the funding and organisation of the state health care schemes of member states, nearly all of which involve some charges to the user. I am not aware of any plans to integrate these schemes or to provide treatment on a free and uniform basis throughout the Community.

Hospital Beds (Cheltenham)

Mr. Irving asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what is the total number of hospital beds available under the National Health Service within the Cheltenham health district; and what was the position in: (a) 1979 and (b) 1974.

Mr. Whitney: The information is given in the table.

*Average daily number of available beds in National Health Service hospitals in Cheltenham and District District Health Authority

Year	Number
1974	828
1979	965
1984	939

Abortion Clinics

Ms. Richardson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will list the names and addresses of all places currently approved in England and Wales under the terms of the Abortion Act, indicating in which regional health authority each is situated; how many approved beds there are at each, which are approved for day-care; and which are approved to perform abortions after 20 weeks of gestation.

Mr. Hayhoe: The information is as follows. Information about places approved in Wales is for my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales.

Drug Addicts (Rehabilitation)

Mr. Simon Hughes asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will list the rehabilitation facilities currently available for drug addicts in each London borough.

Mr. Whitney: Most rehabilitation facilities in London serve areas greater than that of individual boroughs. We are aware of the following residential rehabilitation facilities in London:

Alwin House 40 Colville Terrace W11
Bowden House London Road, Harrow on the Hill
The Charter Clinic PO Box 119, Fellows Road NW3
The Charter Clinic 1-5 Radnor Walk SW3
City Roads 356-358 City Road EC1
Crescent House 10 St. Stephens Crescent W2
Deliverance International 83 Aldersbrook Road E12
Elizabeth House 94 Redcliffe Gardens SW10
Oak Lodge 136 West Hill SW15
Parole Release Scheme 30 Sisters Avenue SW11
Phoenix House 1 Eliot Bank SE23
The Priory Priory Lane, Roehampton SW15
Project 85 85 Trinity Road, Tooting SW17
Pye Barn Trust 16 The Chase SW4
ROMA 67 Talgarth Road W4
Two Three Five Project 235 Balham High Road SW17

We understand that there are about 45 non-residential facilities in London run by non-statutory bodies which offer a range of services including in some cases a rehabilitation service.

Irish Citizens (Health Service Training)

Mr. Nicholas Winterton asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many Republic of Ireland residents have trained in medicine, nursing and midwifery in England and Wales in the past five years for which figures are available; and what has been the estimated cost to public funds.

Mr. Hayhoe: Precise figures for medicine are not available, but it is estimated that fewer than 10 students whose normal domicile is in the Republic of Ireland are studying at medical schools in England and Wales at any one time. No information is held centrally on the number of residents of the Republic of Ireland undertaking training in nursing and midwifery in England and Wales.

The estimated unit cost to public funds of medical undergraduate training, excluding the possible costs to Local Education Authorities which will depend on individual circumstances, is £120,000 at current prices; the estimated cost of training a registered general nurse is £11,000; and the additional cost of the midwifery course is £8,000.

COMA (Dental Health)

Mr. Coombs asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will reconvene the chief medical officers' committee on the medical aspects of food policy (COMA) to examine the relationship between sugar and dental health.

Mr. Hayhoe: I have no such plans at present.

Medical Laboratory Scientific Officers

Mr. Wigley asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many representations he has received during the past three months concerning the pay and conditions of medical laboratory scientific officers; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Whitney: We have received 12 letters during the past three months concerning the pay and conditions of medical laboratory scientific officers. These are matters for the professional and technical staffs B Whitley council which, like other negotiating bodies, must have regard for what health authorities can afford within the resources available to them.

Mr. Wigley asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what representations he has received concerning representation for medical laboratory scientific officers in his pay review body dealing with professions allied to medicine.

Mr. Whitney: Representations to this effect have been received from the Institute of Medical Laboratory Sciences, the professional body for medical laboratory scientific officers, and from time to time in letters which we have received. We have stated in reply that we are not prepared to extend further the scope of the pay review bodies. No such approach has been made by the trade unions representing this group of staff on the Whitley council.

Special Hardship Allowance

Mr. Wigley asked the Secretary of State for Social Servies how many persons currently receive special hardship allowance; and what are the corresponding figures for each of the past five years.

Mr. Newton: At 30 September 1983 (the latest date for which figures are available), 144,770 people were in receipt of special hardship allowance. The figures for the preceding five years are as follows:

	Number
1982	144,110
1981	146,030
1980	146,850
1979	148,020
1978	148,810

Hospices

Mr. Pavitt asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will publish in the Official Report a list of the hospices within the area covered by the four Thames regional health authorities and the number of patients each can accommodate.

Mr. Whitney: I regret that this information is not collected centrally. The hospice information service at St. Christopher's hospice, 51-59 Lawrie Park Road, Sydenham SE26 6DZ, maintains a list of the hospices of which it is aware.

Specialist Claims Control

Mr. Gordon Brown asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if specialist claims control officers are empowered to inquire into benefit payments to persons on supplementary pension, or persons on supplementary benefit who are disabled.

Mr. Major: Specialist claims control teams are empowered to investigate allegations of fraud in respect of all social security benefits.

Mr. Gordon Brown asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will publish his latest assessment of the amount of fraud detected by specialist claims control, showing the basis on which this figure is calculated.

Mr. Major: The estimated benefit savings achieved by specialist claims control teams in 1984-85 was £6·9 million. The basis for this calculation is set out in the statement and copy report of a Departmental study placed in the Library on 12 June of last year.

Disabled People (Consultation Papers)

Mr. Wareing asked the Secretary of State for Social Services why copies of his consultation papers on the Disabled Persons (Services, Consultation and Representation) Bill were not sent to the Disablement Income Group, the National League for the Blind, and the Liverpool Association for the Disabled; and if he will now do so.

Mr. Hayhoe: I shall let the hon. Member have a reply as soon as possible.

Cold-related Diseases (Deaths)

Mr. Gordon Brown asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what estimate he has of the number of people who died from cold-related diseases in England in each year since 1979.

Mr. Whitney: The table shows the numbers of deaths with a mention of hypothermia on the death certificate, regardless of whether it did or did not appear as the underlying cause of death, for England from 1979 to 1985.

Deaths with mention of hypothermia, all ages, persons
Area of usual residence: England 1979-85

Many causes of death are cold-related in that the number of deaths from them increases in winter; hypothermia is the only cause that can be directly identified as a cold-related disease from mortality statistics.

Dental Charges

Mr. Weetch asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what proportion of treatment costs in the general dental services was accounted for by the provision of dentures in the years 1956, 1964, 1974 and 1984.

Mr. Hayhoe: The proportion of the cost of the general dental service in England and Wales accounted for by the provision of dentures in the years requested is as follows:

	Per Cent
1956	29
1964	24
1974	18
1984	12

Mr. Weetch asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what proportion of the revenue from dental charges was accounted for by dentures in the years 1956, 1964, 1974 and 1984.

Mr. Hayhoe: I shall let the hon. Member have a reply as soon as possible.

Mr. Weetch asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what is his best estimate of the costs of allowing full exemption from dental charges for each of the following groups: (a) retirement pensioners, (b) recipients of invalidity pensions and (c) recipients of student grants.

Mr. Hayhoe: I regret that the information required to make reliable estimates for the specified groups is not available.

Dental Estimates

Mr. Weetch asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what were the numbers of estimates scheduled by the Dental Estimates Board in November and December 1985, and the figures for the corresponding months in 1981 to 1984, inclusive.

Mr. Hayhoe: The following table shows the number of estimates scheduled by the Dental Estimates Board for payment to dentists in England in the months requested. Operational difficulties at the board reduced the number of estimates scheduled in December 1985.

Year	November	December
1981	2,601,908	2,578,343
1982	2,594,894	2,617,435
1983	2,666,510	2,624,387
1984	2,660,369	2,753,665
1985	2,739,626	2,486,865

Benefits (Knowsley)

Mr. Sean Hughes asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many persons aged 16, 17 and 18 years, respectively, are presently claiming (a) supplementary and (b) other unemployment benefit in the borough of Knowsley.

Mr. Major: The table shows the number of people aged 16, 17 and 18 respectively claiming unemployment benefit in the borough of Knowsley at 9 January 1986—the latest figures available.

Number claiming unemployment benefit

Age	Number
16	246
17	898
18	1,150

I regret that similar information is not available for persons claiming supplementary benefit.

C Awards

Dame Jill Knight asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will give guidance to those members of regional awards committees who act as chairmen of local committees responsible for nomination of doctors for C awards on the manner in which local committees are nominated and administered.

Mr. Hayhoe: No. Members of the independent regional awards committees are responsible for determining their own methods of working, including consultations with professional colleagues.

Dental Treatment

Mr. Wood asked the Secretary of State for Social Services whether he has received the report of the committee of inquiry into unnecessary dental treatment; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Barney Hayhoe: I welcome the report of the committee of inquiry into unnecessary dental treatment in the general dental service chaired by Mr. S. G. Schanschieff JP which is published today by Her Majesty's Stationery Office. Copies are being placed in the Library.

The committee was established by the Government in December 1984. Its main finding on the extent of unnecessary treatment is that while none of the evidence is in itself conclusive it points to there being a small but significant and unacceptable amount of deliberate unnecessary treatment in the general dental service and a larger amount attributable to an out-of-date treatment philosophy. They are also particularly concerned that a significant amount of unnecessary orthodontic treatment may be undertaken.

They do not, however, believe the problem to be so widespread that patients in general should lose confidence in their dentists. They consider that the vast majority of dental practitioners in the general dental service provide a thoroughly professional service on which the general public can continue to rely.

Their 52 recommendations are aimed at improved monitoring of dental practice; stronger powers for the Dental Estimates Board and Family Practitioner Committees to deal with suspected overtreatment cases; clearer and more public criteria for giving or refusing approval for treatment where this is required in advance; the development of more realistic criteria for approving orthodontic treatment; more explicit warnings about overtreatment from the General Dental Council; more guidance to the profession generally on treatment standards; and guidance to patients on their own role and rights of choice as consumers.

The Government endorse the committee's general approach. There will now be consultation on the report with the dental profession and other interests affected. Subject to that, and to a full costing of the proposals, the Government intend to take action this year on the majority of the recommendations.

Advisory Board of Research Councils

Mr. Carter-Jones asked the Secretary of State for Social Services who represents him on the Advisory Board of Research Councils; if his Department receives professional advice from outside in making representations to the advisory board; if his Department makes any proposals or suggestions regarding areas where research would be appropriate; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Whitney: The Department is represented by the chief scientist on the Advisory Board for the Research Councils which reports to the Secretary of State for Education and Science.

A wide range of professional advice both from within and outside the Department is available to the Chief Scientist across the field of his responsibilities, including his membership of ABRC. The ABRC broadly considers and explores with the research councils the balance of their research programme in advising the Secretary of State for Education and Science on the allocation of the science budget and the Department also makes suggestions about possible fields of research direct with the appropriate councils.

Westminster Local Office

Mr. Loyden asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he is satisfied with the present arrangements for claimants at the Regency street, Victoria, office of his Department.

Mr. Major: There has been some welcome improvement in the arrangements for social security claimants at the Westminster integrated local office in the past year. The arrangements for provision of benefit in the Central London area are currently under review, with the intention of making further improvements in the service to claimants.

Mr. Loyden asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what complaints he has had from hon. and right hon. Members about the Regency street, Victoria, office of his Department.

Mr. Major: In the past year we have received seven letters of complaint from right hon. and hon. Members about Westminster local office. Two have been about the quality of service provided by the local office and five have concerned individual cases.

Heating Additions

Mr. Wilson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services, how many claimants in Scotland, in each of the years (a) 1983, (b) 1984 and (c) 1985 were awarded (i) extra heating additions at (x) the lower rate and (y) the higher rate, (ii) central heating additions at (x) the lower rate and (y) the higher rate, (iii) age-related heating addition, (iv) disabled person's heating addition, (v) estate rate heating addition and (vi) any other heating addition.

Mr. Newton [pursuant to his reply, 3 February 1986, c. 85]: The information requested for 1983, the latest available year, is as follows:

Heating additions—Scotland

Thousands

	Number of recipients
Basic rate heating addition	64
Higher rate heating addition	48
Basic rate central heating addition	54
Higher rate central heating addition	26
Age related heating addition	44
Disabled person's heating addition	11
Estate rate heating addition	1
Others	2

Source: Annual Statistical Enquiry 1983.

Mr. Wilson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services which housing estates in Scotland are currently designated as hard to heat for the purpose of supplementary benefit claimants receiving estate rate heating additions; what are the current criteria for designation; and how many households in Scotland are currently in receipt of estate rate heating additions.

Mr. Newton [pursuant to his reply, 10 February 1986, c. 373]: There are currently 174 certificates designating heating systems in Scotland as being disproportionately expensive to run under paragraph 6 of schedule 4 to the Supplementary Benefit (Requirements) Regulations 1983. Each certificate may cover the heating system or systems on one, part of, or more than one estate. I shall write to the hon. Member giving details of the estates concerned.

Estate rate heating additions are payable to supplementary benefit householders whose home is part of an estate with a heating system of which my right hon. Friend has in his discretion recognised the running costs to be disproportionately high. The factors taken into account in deciding whether or not to designate particular heating systems are set out in paragraphs 4293-4396 of the 'S' Manual of staff guidance, a copy of which is in the Library.

For information on the number of households in receipt of estate rate heating additions in Scotland, I refer the hon. Member to my other reply to him today.

Departmental Staff

Mr. Meacher asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what has been the number of staff serving in social security offices each year since 1979; what has been the average work load each year in number of cases dealt with by each of them; how many staff each year undertook home visits; how many home visits they made; and how many welfare visits each member of the visiting staff made on average each year.

Mr. Major [pursuant to his reply, 14 February 1986, c. 595-6]: The only information available is as follows:

Year	Local office complement	*Average work load		Visits (including ineffective)
		Supp. B	STB†
1979-80	61,086	101	N/A	4,145,205
1980-81	62,115	103	N/A	4,352,026
1981-82	62,198	113	N/A	4,437,920
1982-83	62,758	127	N/A	4,168,382
1983-84	57,038	132	321	4,275,290
1984-85	59,032	129	320	3,658,564

Abbreviations: Supp. B — Supplementary Benefit; STB — Short Term Benefits; N/A—Not Available.

Notes:

* Number of cases in action divided by number of staff allocated to the work described.

† Short term benefits include sickness benefit, invalidity benefit, non-contributory invalidity pension and severe disablement allowance.

No records are kept on the number of staff undertaking home visits, and no separate records are kept on welfare visits, although all home visits have a welfare aspect.

TRANSPORT

Roads (Programme)

Mr. Irving asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will estimate the current and capital expenditure on roads in the county of Gloucester for which his Department is responsible in each year since 1979; and if he will make a statement on future projected expenditure in this regard.

Mr. Ridley: Details of current and capital expenditure on the trunk road network in Gloucestershire since 1979, for which the Department is responsible is as follows:

Year	Current £	Capital £
1979-80	1,000,000	1,000,000
1980-81	1,500,000	1,000,000
1981-82	1,500,000	5,250,000
1982-83	4,000,000	3,800,000
*1983-84	1,000,000	4,500,000
1984-85	1,500,000	5,500,000
1985-86	1,000,000	3,750,000

* Up to and including 1982-83, all maintenance was deemed to be current expenditure. From 1983-84, all major maintenance and structural normal maintenance has been classified as capital expenditure.

During this period two national improvement schemes were completed, costing approximately £15 million (Gloucester northern bypass £12 million, Northleach bypass £3 million).

For the future, I expect current and capital expenditure to remain at or about the present level for the remainder of the decade.

The national trunk road programme also contains schemes to the value of some £20 million and expenditure on trunk roads in the county will increase proportionately as these schemes come to fruition over the next five years.

Mr. Thurnham asked the Secretary of State for Transport what additional sources of funds are available for road improvement measures in the Bolton district council area in addition to transport supplementary grant; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: A local highway authority may fund such measures from rate or precept income, from receipts from all sources, or from borrowing. Controls are exercised by the Secretary of State over capital expenditure and over borrowing. The assumed costs of financing capital expenditure (net of TSG) are taken into account in the calculation of an authority's block grant. Since Bolton is in an assisted area, road schemes which contribute to industrial development may be eligible for grant under section 13 of the Industrial Development Act 1982. Finance for suitable road schemes may also be available from the urban programme or the European regional development fund.

Mr. Thurnham asked the Secretary of State for Transport what has been the effect on the scope and pace of the road programme of the change of emphasis within transport supplementary grant towards capital costs; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The first year of the new system of transport supplementary grant is still in progress. Councils' transport policies and programmes for 1986-87, submitted last year, show that they planned to start 100 major road schemes in 1985-86 compared with 68 in 1984-85. I expect the change of emphasis to help councils to achieve the levels of capital expenditure in the Government's public expenditure plans and to emphasise in their programmes schemes which ease congestion on through routes and which relieve communities of the nuisance of heavy traffic.

Local Government Reform

Mr. Thurnham asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will outline the proposed procedure for pursuing major highway schemes in the metropolitan council areas following abolition; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: On 1 April the metropolitan district councils will become the highway authorities for all roads in their areas except for those for which my right hon. Friend is highway authority. It will be for them to pursue major schemes on their roads within the resources available to them. They have already either set out their proposals for 1986-87 in transport policies and programmes, or endorsed the TPP submitted by the appropriate metropolitan county council. On the basis of these TPPs my right hon. Friend announced in December councils' entitlement to transport supplementary grant for 1986-87 and made capital allocations. A similar procedure will apply for 1987-88.

Mr. Thurnham asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he proposes to give any guidance to district councils about the use of private consultants on highway matters after the abolition of the metropolitan councils; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The use of consultants is an option district councils may wish to consider as an alternative to appointing extra staff. I do not consider it necessary to issue guidance. If any council wants advice on a specific matter, the Department is ready to help.

Roads (Circulars)

Mr. Thurnham asked the Secretary of State for Transport when he proposes to issue a new circular as a follow-up to circular 1/85 on road safety and road improvement programmes; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: A circular will be issued in April giving guidance to highway authorities on the submission of transport policies and programmes for 1987-88.

Mr. Thurnham asked the Secretary of State for Transport what advice has been given to district councils about the measures set out in circular 1/85 on road safety and road improvement programmes; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Circular 1/85 was addressed to district councils among others. It contains guidance on the preparation of transport policies and programmes for 1986-87 and explains the operation of transport supplementary grant. Further advice is available though informal contacts between officials and officers of highway authorities and the appropriate local authority Associations. The Department's regional offices will be pleased to advise councils on any particular questions they may wish to raise.

Transport Supplementary Grant

Mr. Thurnham asked the Secretary of State for Transport what representations he has received about alterations to the transport supplementary grant system; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: When transport supplementary grant was under review in 1984 my right hon. Friend received various representations which he took into consideration when he decided to make changes to the system for 1985-86. Since then he has received no new representations of substance.

A30 (New Route)

Sir Peter Mills asked the Secretary of State for Transport when he will announce the route of the new road between Sourton Cross and Launceston on the A30.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The preferred route following public consultation was announced in July 1982. The recent parliamentary decision about the adjacent Okehampton bypass has enabled work to resume on preparation of this scheme with a view to publication of proposals in 1987.

Sir Peter Mills asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he has decided whether the new road between Sourton Cross and Launceston will be dual carriageway.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Our intention is that the road will be a dual carriageway.

Sir Peter Mills asked the Secretary of State for Transport when the new road between Sourton Cross and Launceston will be completed.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: We expect work to start in the period April 1989 onwards with completion about two years later.

Chemicals (Conveyance)

Mr. Gareth Wardell asked the Secretary of State for Transport (1) if benzothiazuron has been (a) approved as a dangerous substance that is permitted for conveyance by road and (b) classified for the purpose of assigning a hazard warning sign on transporting vehicles;

(2) if benzyl alcohol has been (a) approved as a dangerous substance that is permitted for conveyance by road and (b) classified for the purpose of assigning a hazard warning sign on transporting vehicles.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: These substances are not regarded as dangerous in transport and vehicles carrying them are not required to display hazard warning panels.

Benzothiazuron is a solid herbicide. Benzyl alcohol is a chemical solvent liquid used in the paint industry.

These substances are regarded as "harmful" for the purpose of supply and use under the Classification, Packaging and Labelling Regulations 1984 and packages must be marked with a number of appropriate risk and safety phrases. Both substances fall below the toxicity level for transport purposes which is less stringent than that for supply and use.

Hazard warning panels are only required for carriage by road in tank vehicles or large tank containers, but these substances do not fall within the classification criteria for the Dangerous Substances (Conveyance by Road in Road Tankers and Tank Containers) Regulations 1981.

Mr. Gareth Wardell asked the Secretary of State for Transport if resorcinol diglycidyl ether has been (a) approved as a dangerous substance that is permitted for conveyance by road and (b) classified for the purpose of assigning a hazard warning sign on transporting vehicles.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: This substance is regarded as toxic in transport and packages must be appropriately marked, but vehicles carrying it are not requried to display hazard warning panels.

This is an industrial chemical used in the manufacture of expoxy resins and rubber and adhesive products.

It is regarded as "toxic" for the purposes of supply and use under the Classification, Packaging and Labelling Regulations 1984 and packages must be marked with a number of appropriate risk and safety phrases.

This product is recognised internationally as "toxic" in transport but no additional labelling is required.

Hazard warning panels are required only for carriage by road in tank vehicles or large tank containers. This product has a melting point of 32-33C and is therefore right on the borderline between a solid and a liquid. It could be carried as a liquid in a tank, but it would be difficult to keep such a large quantity heated and such circumstances are thought to be unlikely.

National Bus Company

Mr. Robert Hughes asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list in the Official Report the numbers of buses, repair and maintenance works, and depots, within each of the divisions of the National Bus Company, that have so far been designated for separate sale.

Mr. Ridley: The Government's policy is that the National Bus Company's 65 or so local subsidiaries should be sold individually as going concerns. As part of that process NBC will make available the necessary information for would-be purchasers to those concerned.

M25 (Accident Statistics)

Mr. Macfarlane asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will take steps to determine the location of fatalities and serious accidents on the M25; and what access his officials have to police records concerning deaths on the M25.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: There were 36 fatal and serious accidents on the M25 in 1984, of which 10 were in Kent, 19 in Surrey, two in Hertfordshire, and five in Essex.

Detailed locations are recorded on the Department's computer database, though errors in the Ordnance Survey grid-references sometimes occur. The only true record is in the original police reports. The Department's agent authorities, the county councils, are employed to investigate accidents on motorways and trunk roads and can ascertain the locations in discussion with the police. Neither they nor the Department have apparently had access to police records.

I do not regard the present arrangements as satisfactory, and will be looking to make improvements.

Highland Express Airline Ltd.

Mr. Robert Hughes asked the Secretary of State for Transport when a decision is expected on the application of the Highland Express Airline Ltd. to fly international trans-Atlantic flights from Prestwick; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ridley: Highland Express Airways Ltd.'s application to the Civil Aviation Authority for a scheduled service licence to carry passengers, cargo and mail on the Prestwick-New York (Newark) and Prestwick-Toronto sectors was granted on 6 February with effect from the date on which Highland Express completes financial arrangements which are acceptable to the authority. The authority will review its decision should these arrangements not be completed within the timescale envisaged. Appeals against the authority's decision must be made within 21 days of 11 February 1986.

Rochester Way Relief Road

Mr. Moate asked the Secretary of State for Transport when he expects completion of the Rochester way relief road stretch of the A2.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: I understand the planned completion is 1988.

Local Government Reform

Mr. Thurnham asked the Secretary of State for Transport what initiatives for road improvement schemes by district councils are being encouraged by his Department following the abolition of the Greater Manchester council; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The Department gave each metropolitan district the opportunity to submit its own transport policies and programmes for the next financial year and will shortly be inviting them to make a similar submission for 1987-88 following the abolition of the metropolitan districts.

Maritime Services

Mr. Wallace asked the Secretary of State for Transport whether he is satisfied with the present arrangements for running Trinity House and the Northern Lighthouse Board.

Mr. Ridley: I shall answer this question shortly.

DEFENCE

Crown Proceedings Act 1947

76. Mr. Ashley asked the Secretary of State for Defence what representations he has received about section 10 of the Crown Proceedings Act 1947.

Mr. Lee: The right hon. Gentleman will already be aware of representations that have been made in this House. In answer to an earlier question on 26 July 1985, at columns 876-77, I said that in carrying out our review of section 10, account had also been taken of views that had been expressed by former members of the armed forces, the families of current and former members, members of the public and Members of Parliament. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Defence has arranged to receive further representation from the right hon. Gentleman and other Members this afternoon.

Ascension Island

Mr. Tom Clarke asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list by country and class the number of visiting warships to the British base on Ascension Island in the last five years.

Mr. Stanley: Full records of visits by warships to Ascension Island are not generally retained. However, in the time available, the following information can be provided about visits by warships other than those of the Royal Navy:

Ascension Island

	1981	1982	1983	1984	1985
United States
Submarines	—	—	—	—	—
Brazil
Corvettes	—	—	1	2	2

Mr. Tom Clarke asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he will outline the facilities the British base in the Ascension Island provides for visiting warships.

Mr. Stanley [pursuant to his reply, 14 February 1986, c. 559]: A limited range of facilities can be provided, where appropriate, to warships visiting Ascension Island, including a mooring; fuel; the loading of small quantities of stores; and some recreational and medical facilities.

Ammunition (Overseas Suppliers)

Mrs. Dunwoody asked the Secretary of State for Defence whether the tender procedure for the purchase of 7·62 mm and 9 mm bullets will be open to overseas suppliers.

Mr. Lee: I would expect that some of our future purchases of small arms ammunition will continue to be from overseas suppliers, subject as always to considerations of national interest and economic procurement.

Mrs. Dunwoody asked the Secretary of State for Defence whether he will list the quantity, value, and name of overseas suppliers for 7·62 mm and 9 mm bullets purchased in the years 1981-82, 1982-83, 1983-84 and 1984-85 by the United Kingdom.

Mr. Lee: MOD purchases from overseas suppliers were as follows:

Year and Supplier		Type	Quantity (000)
1981-82	Dynamit Nobel	9 mm Blank	150
1982-83	Dynamit Nobel	9 mm Blank	350
1983-84	Dynamit Nobel	9 mm Ball	10,500
1984-85	Dynamit Nobel	9 mm Blank	250
	Raufoss	7·62 mm Tracer	1,800
	Dynamit Nobel	9 mm Ball	5,000
	Metallwerk Elisenhutte	7·62 mm Blank	5,100
	Raufoss	7·62 Ball	10,000
	Raufoss	7·62 Tracer	3,000

The value of these contracts is commercially confidential.

Brigade of Guards and Household Cavalry

Mr. Dubs asked the Secretary of State for Defence how many applications to join the Brigade of Guards or the Household Cavalry have been received since 1979; how many of these were from ethnic minorities; and how many of the latter were recruited.

Mr. Lee: The information requested is not held.

United States Aircraft

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he has anything to add to his answer to the hon. Member for Denton and Reddish on 15 November, Official Report, column 309, about United States B-52 aircraft operating in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Stanley: The United States authorities have confirmed that the position remains as stated in my reply to the hon. Member on 15 November.

Lance Missiles

Mr. Michie asked the Secretary of State for Defence what discussions have taken place with representatives of Saceur concerning the replacement of the Lance missiles assigned initally to the British Army of the Rhine.

Mr. Stanley: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave the hon. Member for Sheffield, Central (Mr. Caborn) on 11 February, at column 441.

Syrian Jet (Grounding)

Mr. Dalyell asked the Secretary of State for Defence whether any assistance was given by RAF traffic controllers or plotting staff to the Israeli authorities in connection with grounding of a Syrian executive jet on 4 February.

Mr. Stanley: No.

Light Planes and Gliders

Mr. Gould asked the Secretary of State for Defence what representations he has received on the prohibition by the United States Air Force of the use by light planes and gliders of the air space between Oxford and Banbury.

Mr. Lee: The United States Air Force has not prohibited the use of airspace between Oxford and Banbury, nor does it possess the authority to do so. The National Air Traffic Services, which is responsible for the safe and expeditious use of United Kingdom airspace, has, in close consultation with all interested airspace users, recommended the trial of a mandatory radio area around RAF Upper Heyford. Access to this airspace would be available to any private aircraft which first made radio contact with RAF Upper Hayford. Separate arrangements have been agreed for locally based aircraft not equipped with radio.

Representations on the trial have been received from a number of people and organisations all eminating from one source, the British Gliding Association.

Nuclear Tests

Sir Anthony Buck asked the Secretary of State for Defence what was the outcome of recent discussions between the Minister of State for Defence Procurement and Senator Evans, Australian Minister for Resources and Energy relating to the report of the Australian Royal Commission on nuclear tests.

Mr. Norman Lamont: The first round of my discussions with Senator Evans was held in an amicable and constructive atmosphere. I am pleased to announce that, as a result of these discussions, the United Kingdom Government have agreed to provide United Kingdom experts to participate in the technical assessment group which the Australian Government have decided to form. I have also agreed that there should be a United Kingdom representative on the consultative group which the Australian Government plan to establish. The letter of invitation from Senator Evans and my reply, together with the group's terms of reference, follow. I understand that Senator Evans made a similar announcement in the Australian Senate on Wednesday 19 February.

Text of letter to Mr. Lamont from Senator Evans

Dear Mr. Lamont

As we agreed at our meeting in London on 22 January, the Australian Government is establishing a technical assessment group to advise on clean-up options for the former atomic test sites, particularly Maralinga. I invite representatives of the United Kingdom Government to participate in the group. Participation would be on a "without prejudice" basis to the question of ultimate liability for clean-up costs.

We agree that the technical assessment group would undertake field studies and laboratory research and report in detail on options and costs for the radioactive and toxic decontamination of the sites. As a result of these scientific evaluations, "practicable" solutions—in cost/benefit terms—can be established in order to achieve varying possible degrees of access to and habitation of the contaminated sites.

Regarding the final terms of reference for the group we agreed that suggestions from the United Kingdom would be communicated to Australia for consideration through your high commission in Canberra. I am anxious to settle the terms of reference as soon as possible so that the group can produce its interim report in May.

The composition of the group will be Mr. D. R. Davy, Chief of the Environmental Science Division of the Australian Atomic Energy Commission (Convenor) and Dr. K. H. Lokan, Director of the Australian Radiation Laboratory, a United States plutonium decontamination expert, Mr. B. W. Church, Director of the Health Physics Division, Nevada Operations Office, Department of Energy and two United Kingdom representatives. As discussed, while continuity is desirable it is not essential, and ad hoc co-option of United Kingdom representatives is a possibility. I envisage the first meeting being held in February-March.

I propose also to establish the consultative group we agreed on, as soon as possible and am pleased that the United Kingdom Government has agreed to be represented on this body. The other representatives will be from the Australian, South Australian and Western Australian Governments and Aboriginal interests. It will discuss and monitor progress on the rehabilitation of the test sites and maintain communication on all the various matters raised in the royal commission report.

I thank you for your co-operation in this sensitive and important matter and look forward to receiving the names of your representatives on the technical assessment group and the consultative group in the near future.

Text of letter from Mr. Norman Lamont MP to Senator Evans

Dear Senator Evans,

I am pleased that we were able to reach agreement at our meeting in London on 22nd January and that your arrangements for establishing the Technical Assessment Group are moving ahead swiftly. Thank you for your letter and the formal invitation.

I am pleased to accept the invitation to send representatives, on the understanding that it is in accordance with the assurance which the United Kingdom reiterated in 1978 to provide technical advice if requested on any further on-site operations to reduce surface contamination. I also acknowledge your agreement that the United Kingdom's representation on the Technical Assessment Group will be on a "without prejudice" basis to the question of ultimate liability for clean-up costs.

I am content with the Terms of Reference of the Technical Assessment Group which were handed to the British High Commission on 4th February 1986. However, I would wish to emphasise, as we agreed in London, that the function of the Group is to identify and assess the costs of a range of options, not to recommend which should be selected. Also, I am advised that the range of options relating to the burial pits at Maralinga shall not exclude improving their present condition and the possibility of local disposal of radioactive or toxic debris.

The names of the two experts for the Technical Assessment Group are:

Dr. Hylton Smith,
Head of Biology Department,
National Radiological Protection Board;

Mr. David Deverell (Rtd),
Formerly Head of Chemical Technology Division,
Atomic Weapons Research Establishment,
Aldermaston.

We will do our best to provide continuity of representation, but I am grateful for your recognition that other United Kingdom experts may be co-opted on an ad hoc basis.

As regards the Consultative Group, I confirm acceptance in principle of the invitation to be represented. The United Kingdom representative will be a member of the British High Commission in Canberra.

With your agreement, I would intend to publish this exchange of letters in Hansard; you may well wish to do likewise.

TECHNICAL ASSESSMENT GROUP

Terms of Reference

1. Advise the Minister for Resources and Energy on options for the rehabilitation of the sites used for the British nuclear testing programmes in Australia. In particular the Group shall:

(a) Advise the Minister on requirements, including resources, timescales and costs, for field studies, laboratory research and pilot operations to be undertaken to enable options for radioactive and toxic decontamination of former British atomic test sites in Australia to be developed.

(b) Evaluate, on the basis of a pilot study to be conducted by April 1986, the methodology, cost, scope, timescale and efficacy of scavenging of areas containing plutonium contaminated fragments (an emu parade) and to consider at the same time whether other debris at any of the test sites might be the subject of similar action.

(c) The Group to report to the Minister for Resources and Energy on (a) and (b) above by the end of May 1986.

(d) On the basis of the above field studies, laboratory research and pilot operations, and an assessment of hazards to operators, develop criteria, strategies and costs of options for decontamination of the test sites.

2. In considering options for the clean-up of the sites, possible access should cover the range from:

(a) fully unrestricted habitation by Aboriginals including the case of high dependence on local plants and animals for food: to

(b) casual access by Aboriginals assuming retained or, if necessary, extended fence.

3. The Technical Assessment Group will reconvene as necessary to assess progress of the field studies and research programme and report to the Minister as soon as possible on criteria, timescales and costs of decontamination options. The Group may report progressively once it has reached a final assessment of particular sites and in any case not later than six months after the completion of relevant field studies and research.

NATO

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he will state the posts, ranks and responsibilities of his officials who represent the United Kingdom on the North Atlantic Treaty organisation planning board for European inland surface transport; how often this committee meets; and where it meets.

Mr. Stanley [pursuant to his reply, 13 February 1986, c. 547]: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given by my hon. Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Transport to him on 13 February, at column 553. My department's representatives are both colonels, one from the Ministry of Defence in London and the other from BAOR.

Hong Kong

Mr. Tom Clarke asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list by country and class, the number of visiting warships to the British base in Hong Kong in the last five years.

Mr. Stanley [pursuant to his reply, 14 February 1986, c. 559]: Full records of visits by warships to Hong Kong are not generally retained. However, in the time available, the following information can be provided about visits by warships other than those of the Royal Navy:

Mr. Tom Clarke asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he will provide information about all facilities the British base in Hong Kong provides for visiting warships.

Mr. Stanley [pursuant to his reply, 14 February 1986, c. 559]: A wide range of facilities are provided, as appropriate, to warships visiting Hong Kong, including berths alongside at HMS Tamar; moorings; shore support facilities; engineering facilities; the arrangement of commercial docking and tugs; the provision of fuel, stores and water; and certain recreational and medical facilities.

Defence Arms Control Unit

Mr. Dalyell asked the Secretary of State for Defence what is the funding of the Ministry of Defence defence arms control unit.

Mr. Stanley [pursuant to his reply, 12 February 1986, c. 471]: The defence arms control unit is entirely funded by the defence budget. The costs of this unit for the current financial year are estimated at £440,000.

United States Base (Cyprus)

Mr. Tom Clarke asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he will provide details of the United States forces contingent at the Akrotiri base in Cyprus, in particular (a) the number of personnel, (b) the number and type of aircraft they support, (c) the role of the contingent and (d) the agreement under which the United States contingent is stationed there; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Stanley [pursuant to his reply, 14 February 1986, c. 558-59]: There is a small USAF detachment and a single U2R reconnaissance aircraft based at RAF Akrotiri. Since 1974, the detachment has carried out reconnaissance flights in support of middle east peacekeeping arrangements. They are conducted with the knowledge and agreement of all the Governments directly involved.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Food Standards

Mr. Coombs asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he has any plans to introduce proposals for the control of flavours and flavouring agents in food; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Fenner: Discussions are under way in Brussels on a proposal for a council directive that would establish the framework for future controls within the Community over all types of flavourings used in food.

Mr. Coombs asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he has any plans to implement any of the recommendations of the Food Standards Committee's second report on food labelling; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Fenner: The recommendations of the Food Standards Committee's second report on food labelling were taken fully into account in drawing up the proposals for the Food Labelling Regulations 1980 and the Food Labelling Regulations 1984 which superseded them.

Mr. Coombs asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he has any plans to implement any of the recommendations of the Food Standards Committee report on meat products, published in 1980; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Fenner: The Meat Products and Spreadable Fish Products Regulations 1984 which come fully into force on 1 July 1986 take into account the recommendations of the 1980 Food Standards Committee report on meat products.

Mr. Coombs asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he has any plans to implement any of the recommendations of the Food Standards Committee's report on water in food; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Fenner: The recommendations in the Food Standards Committee report on water in food relating to labelling and meat products were fully taken into account during preparation of the Food Labelling Regulations 1980 (now superseded by 1984 regulations) and the Meat Products and Spreadable Fish Products Regulations 1984. The recommendations relating to fish products are among the issues currently being examined by the Food Advisory Committee in its review of coated fish products.

Fish Products

Mr. Coombs asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he has any plans to introduce compositional standards for fish products, other than fish cakes; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Fenner: The Food Advisory Committee is currently reviewing the need for controls on the composition and labelling of coated fish products. I shall await the committee's report before considering whether any further action is necessary.

European Community (Food Sales)

Mr. Teddy Taylor asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how much butter, meat, wine and other consumer foods the European Community sold to the Soviet Union, and the rest of eastern Europe, respectively, during the last annual period for which figures are available; what were the comparable figures for each of the previous seven years, respectively; and what price the food and wine was sold at in the most recent annual period for which figures are available, expressed in ecu per tonne on the same basis as the answer given to the hon. Member for Cardiff, West (Mr. Terlezki) on 2 February 1984, Official Report, column 319.

Mr. Jopling: I would refer my hon. Friend to the reply given to him on 21 October 1985, at column 1. Revised figures for 1984, and provisional data for the period January-October 1985, are shown in the table:

Cereals

Mr. Redmond asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) what tonnage of cereals is stored at the European Economic Community intervention store at Tickhill; at what price per tonne; at what yearly cost; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what tonnage of cereals was stored at the European Economic Community intervention store at Thorne for each year since 1978; at what price per tonne; at what yearly cost; and if he will make a statement;

(3) what tonnage of cereals was stored at the European Economic Community intervention store at Kirk Sandall for each year since 1978; at what price per tonne; at what yearly cost; and if he will make a statement.

(4) what tonnage of cereals was stored at each European Economic Community intervention store at Doncaster for each year since 1978; at what price per tonne; at what yearly cost; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gummer: The following is the information for the years in which stocks have been held.

Storage costs at individual commercial stores are not given on grounds of commercial confidentiality, but the average annual cost is £10·22 per tonne.

Export Rebates

Mr. Teddy Taylor asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is the total sum which has now been provided in the European Economic Community budget for 1986 for the payment of export rebates and other sums to enable food and wine to be exported to nations outside the EEC; and what was the actual amount spent on these activities in each of the past six years, respectively.

Mr. Jopling: 7,568 mecu have been provided in the Community budget for 1986 for refunds on food and wine exported to third countries. Community expenditure on these refunds in the past six years was:

	mecu

ENVIRONMENT

Local Government Reform

Mr. Ian Lloyd asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what arrangements the Government have made for the future management of the seaside and country homes presently owned by the Greater London council.

Sir George Young: We have decided to adopt an initiative prompted initially by the London Boroughs Association, supported by the Greater London council and the Association of London Authorities, that arrangements should be made for the GLC's seaside and country homes to be owned and managed by a housing association. They will not therefore transfer, as previously proposed, to district councils. Vacancies arising in these properties therefore would continue to be reserved exclusively for London's elderly.

We understand that two housing associations that specialise in the care of the elderly have expressed an interest in taking over these homes. But in case these arrangements are not finalised by 31 March 1986, we have asked the London Residuary Body to become temporary landlords until the transfer is completed.

Anyone occupying these properties on 1 April 1986 will continue to enjoy security of tenure to their homes and controlled rents. The financial basis of transfer will enable the housing association broadly to maintain GLC levels of rents and management and maintenance expenditure.

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will direct the London Residuary Body on how it should identify that debt associated with the repayment of principal on former Greater London council mortgages; and if he will make a statement.

Sir George Young: No.

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) if capital receipts from Greater London council mortgages will be distributed as cash to the London boroughs by the London Residuary Body after the Greater London council is abolished;

(2) whether, after the Greater London council is abolished, extra borrowing approval will be distributed to the London boroughs in association with the distribution by the London Residuary Body of housing capital receipts from Greater London council mortgages.

Sir George Young: I refer the hon. Member to the answer my right hon. Friend gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Harlow (Mr. Hayes) on 11 February at columns 396 and 397.

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if, in the treatment of capital receipts from Greater London council mortgages, he will make it his policy to seek to ensure that there is no net loss of housing investment resources to local authorities in London as a result of the abolition of the Greater London council.

Sir George Young: This is already my right hon. Friend's policy.

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if there will be any net loss of borrowing power to local authorities in London as a result of the abolition of the Greater London council.

Sir George Young: The amount of borrowing which local authorities are permitted to undertake is linked to the amount of their capital allocations and of their expected revenues. It will therefore vary from year to year and no direct comparison can be made.

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what direction he proposes to give to the London Residuary Body about the timing of its notification to each London borough as to the amount it can expect to receive in housing capital receipts under section 77 of the Local Government Act 1985 in respect of the financial year 1986-87.

Sir George Young: An order under section 77 of the Local Government Act 1985 will be laid before the House in due course.

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what liabilities the London borough of Hillingdon will inherit as a result of the abolition of the Greater London council in relation to transferred Greater London council housing in its area, as opposed to housing associations in its area; what proportion the liabilities on transferred housing stock in Hillingdon represent of the total outstanding repair bill on transferred Greater London council housing in London; and what proportion Hillingdon will receive of the Housing capital receipts to be distributed to the London boroughs by the London Residuary Body as a result of the abolition of the Greater London council.

Sir George Young: According to the GLC, £146,000; the proportion of the liabilities as estimated by the GLC is 0·01 per cent. Hillingdon will receive 1·4 per cent. of the capital receipts and they will be able to use this to fund housing associations formerly funded by the GLC, or f. other housing needs in the borough.

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if, pursuant to the reply of 31 January, Official Report, column 652-3, the gross provision for housing capital expenditure by local authorities in England for 1986-87 and his estimate of the aggregate spending power available to local authorities in 1986-87 includes provision or spending power relating to receipts accumulated and unspent by the Greater London council or to the non-prescribed proportion of receipts which have accrued to the Greater London council or which will accrue to the London Residuary Body; and if the method of construction of his estimate of such spending power depends in part on information previously provided by individual local authorities on their capital receipts.

Sir George Young: The gross provision for housing capital expenditure by local authorities represents the level of expenditure planned nationally, and is not related to the accumulated capital receipts of individual local authorities.

Assumptions about the spending power available at the national level from accumulated receipts have been based partly on information provided by individual authorities and partly on national estimates. Detailed information is now being sought from all local authorities about their accumulated receipts. Because such information has not hitherto been available, it has not been possible for any Department to make reliable estimates of the spending power available to individual local authorities from that source.

Mr. Wareing asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on the implications for Government policies for which he is responsible of the proposals in the document, "A Note on the Employment Implications of the Abolition of the County Council", published by the Merseyside Churches Unemployment Committee, a copy of which has been sent to him.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: The Merseyside Churches Unemployment Committee report calls for action to retain the economic and employment initiatives funded by Merseyside county council after its abolition. Government have provided the means and mechanism to enable the successor authorities (the district councils) to take over such projects, but it is for them to decide either jointly or singly their own priorities, though it is a matter of regret that the district councils on Merseyside have so far failed to come to any co-ordinated view.

The promotion of economic and employment initiatives is an important local authority function. Many initiatives have been supported by my Department through the partnership and urban programmes in recent years. There is no reason why this should not continue.

Nuclear Dumping Sites

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) if he will list his responsibilities in relation to the list of possible nuclear dump sites submitted to him by NIREX on 8 January; whether he intends to submit that list as it stood on 8 January to Parliament or to make changes to it; and whether he will initiate a process of consultation and reconsideration so that relevant factors such as development problems, population, transport and the views of local communities are taken into account before geological exploration begins;

(2) further to his reply to the hon. Member for Great Grimsby on Tuesday 11 February, Official Report, column 403, if he will set out the process of consideration to be given to the list of proposed nuclear dumps sites and state in what ways this process has changed from his previously announced plans.

(3) at what stage in the process of planning nuclear dumps the effect on local industries and local development needs will be taken into account;

(4) at what stage in the process of planning nuclear dumps considerations of planning blight will be taken into account;

(5) at what stage in the process of planning nuclear dumps population factors will be taken into consideration;

(6) at what stage in the process of planning nuclear dumps transport considerations will be taken into account;

(7) whether, in his consideration of possible sites for nuclear dumps, he will consider sites not already owned by Government Departments or NIREX partners; and at what stage in the planning process such sites are to be evaluated against owned sites;

(8) further to his reply to the hon. Member for Great Grimsby, on 11 February, Official Report, column 403, whether he intends to make any changes, additions or deletions to the list of possible sites for nuclear dumps submitted to him by the chairman of NIREX on 8 January;

(9) further to his reply to the hon. Member for Great Grimsby on 11 February, Official Report, column 403, whether he will now consider additions to and deletions from the list of possible sites for nuclear dumps submitted to him by NIREX on 8 January; what factors he will take into account in such consideration; what opportunities will be given to local authorities in the process; and if he will make a statement;

(10) further to his answer to the hon. Member for Great Grimsby on 11 February, Official Report, column 403, whether he will now consider suggested lists for possible nuclear sites from other private and public organisations besides NIREX; why NIREX is considered competent to take account of planning, population, transport, water supply and development needs of the ones concerned; how its relationship with other partners is evaluated when consideration is given to sites owned by those partners; and if he will make a statement;

(11) further to his reply of 11 February, Official Report, column 403, to the hon. Member for Great Grimsby, whether having considered the NIREX lists he will now initiate an official inquiry to draw up a list of possible sites for geological exploration, taking into account the relevant factors, including land development needs and public opinion.

Mr. Waldegrave: NIREX, before it put forward its proposals on 8 January, considered a wide range of sites in public and private ownership and took into account questions of safety, planning and technical feasibility.

My right hon. Friend, who is responsible, together with my right hon. Friends the Secretary of State for Scotland and for Wales, for policy on the management of civil radioactive waste, has been looking at these proposals to ensure that they were the most appropriate way of carrying forward declared national policy.

My right hon. Friend expects to make an announcement about possible sites for investigation next week. This will be accompanied by the publication of a draft of the special development order to be put to Parliament for approval, to give NIREX the planning permission it needs to investigate geologically the sites proposed. It will be open to local authorities and anyone else with an interest to comment upon what is proposed.

Detailed geological information will be an important input to any subsequent decision by NIREX to make a planning application in respect to a particular site. In doing so, it will have to prepare a detailed environmental assessment of the impact of the facility on the areas concerned, including the effect on local development. This will be considered at the public inquiry the Government has already said will be held into any proposals from NIREX for development.

Nuclear Dumping Sites

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he will allow geological exploration of possible sites for nuclear dumps in counties whose structure plans prohibit disposal or transportation of nuclear waste; if he will list his powers to overrule such prohibition; on what basis he will consider doing so; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waldegrave: Permission to undertake geological exploration would be sought from Parliament through a special development order. My right hon. Friend's powers to approve, reject or modify structure plans, or proposals for their alteration or replacement, in whole or in part, are contained in sections 9 and 10 of the Town and Country Planning Act 1971, as amended by the Town and Country Planning (Amendment) Act 1972 and the Local Government, Planning and Land Act 1980. There are no policies in approved structure plans which prohibit the disposal or transport of nuclear waste.

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) further to his reply to the hon. Member for Great Grimsby on 11 February Official Report, column 403, whether he has received any representations on the list of possible sites for nuclear dumps from hon. Members representing constituencies in Oxfordshire;

(2) further to his reply to the hon. Member for Great Grimsby on 11 February, Official Report, column 403, whether he will specify what representations he has received and from whom on the NIREX list of possible nuclear sites submitted to him on 8 January.

Mr. Waldegrave: The proposals put forward by NIREX are of course confidential. In recent months my right hon. Friend received a number of representations, from hon. Members and others, on the possible location of sites selected by NIREX. Representations have been made by hon. Members for constituencies in Oxfordshire.

Asbestos

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what grants are available to local authorities which find themselves with (a) council housing and (b) other council property, containing dangerous amounts of asbestos.

Sir George Young: Funds are not made available specifically for the removal of asbestos from local authority buildings, but rate support grant is paid in support of authorities' revenue expenditure generally, including expenditure on asbestos. When council housing is involved, expenditure that has been considered by Department under the project control system would be eligible for Exchequer subsidy.

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what Government financial help is available to local authorities faced with the problem of asbestos in post-war prefabricated buildings; what advice he is giving to local authorities faced with this problem; whether removal or recovering are recommended; and if he will make a statement.

Sir George Young: Financial assistance is not available specifically for work on asbestos in local authority buildings, but such work is one of the factors which can be taken into account in consideration of local authority finance generally. A guidance note on asbestos materials in buildings was published by the Department of the Environment in August 1983 and copies were sent to all local authorities in England and Wales. It is at present being updated and will be republished later this year.

The Department advises that asbestos material which is damaged or releasing dust should be removed, but asbestos materials in good condition can be left in place and sealed or enclosed.

Merseyside County Council

Mr. Wareing asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will visit Liverpool to discuss with interested parties the consequences of the abolition of the Merseyside county council; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: I refer the hon. Member to my reply of 14 February to the hon. Member for Liverpool, Riverside (Mr. Parry) at column 590. There are no plans at present for any further ministerial visits to Liverpool to discuss abolition matters.

Berkeley Power Station

Mr. Marland asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he remains satisfied with monitoring of emissions from Berkeley power station and that they remain safe.

Mr. Waldegrave: Yes. I am satisfied that existing monitoring programmes cover all aspects of radioactive emissions from the station and their impact on the environment. The results of the monitoring show that there is no danger whatsoever to the general public as a result of radioactive emissions from the station.

Dog Licences

Mr. David Atkinson asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he has any plans to introduce legislation to permit local authorities to introduce their own dog licences; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Rumbold: Future arrangements for dog licensing remain under constant consideration following consultation on possible changes to the present system. We shall announce our conclusions as soon as possible.

News International (Planning Permission)

Mr. Nellist asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if, pursuant to his answer of 17 February, Official Report, column 35, he will place in the Library the information available to the London Docklands Development Corporation on the terms of the planning permission granted to News International prior to the existence of the London Docklands Development Corporation.

Sir George Young: The information is being obtained from the London borough of Tower Hamlets. As soon as it is available I shall arrange for it to be placed in the Library.

National Heritage Memorial Fund

Mr. Hargreaves asked the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he proposes to increase resources to the National Heritage Memorial Fund; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Baker: The Government accept that a number of important demands will be made on the reserves of the National Heritage Memorial Fund in 1985-86 and 1986-87 to prevent the export of works of art or the loss of land and buildings which form part of the national heritage. I propose to increase the resources available to the fund by £10·5 million in the current financial year. This sum has been financed from receipts and adjustments within my Department's programmes and there will be no overall increase in public expenditure. Added to the grant of £3 million which my right hon. Friend the Minister for the Arts and I plan to give the NHMF on 1 April 1986, these extra resources will ensure that the fund can continue its important work.

Abbey Park Estate

Mr. Galley asked the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he has reached a decision on Calderdale council's submission to his urban housing renewal unit in respect of the Abbey park estate; and if he will make a statement.

Sir George Young: I am pleased to announce today my right hon. Friend's favourable response to proposals for the Abbey park estate which Calderdale council has prepared in conjunction with my Department's urban housing renewal unit. The council has developed a comprehensive range of measures to tackle the problems of this run-down estate of some 700 dwellings. I am confident that the proposals will offer a new future to the residents of the estate and significantly enhance the quality of life on it.

The measures proposed include:

i. the setting up of responsive, locally based management arrangements on the estate as part of the Department's priority estates project. A fully staffed and accessible office has now been opened on the estate and it will provide a comprehensive housing service to the residents.

ii. a renovation programme to modernise and repair approximately 450 rented houses and flats on the estate. For this purpose I have agreed in principle to an additional capital allocation of up to £689,000 in 1986-7 to the council's housing investment programme.

iii. A community refurbishment scheme under which some 120 locally unemployed people will work on the improvement of the environment of the estate and the approaches to the houses and flats. This scheme will be funded by the Government's community programme, subject to the agreement of the Manpower Services Commission's area board, and my Department's urban programme. Resources of the order of £1·65 million will be involved, including up to £742,000 of urban programme funding, which I am pleased to approve in principle.

iv. Proposals are in hand to dispose of some 250 empty dwellings on the estate to the private sector for refurbishment and onward sale to private purchasers including council tenants, waiting list applicants and others. Tenders are currently being assessed. The involvement of the private sector will provide a valuable opportunity for the diversification of tenure on the estate.

I welcome the fact the Calderdale council has involved tenants closely in the development of this valuable package of measures and I am sure that it will continue to do so as the proposals are implemented. The Abbey park initiative is an exciting and pioneering partnership between Calderdale council, private enterprise and central Government. It has involved close collaboration between members and officials of the council, my Department's Yorkshire and Humberside regional office and the staff and consultants of the urban housing renewal unit. I hope that we shall see many more such schemes.

SCOTLAND

Foundry Closures (Falkirk)

Mr. Canavan asked the Secretary of State for Scotland whether he will list the number of foundry closures in Falkirk district since May 1979 and the companies involved, and the number of job losses in Falkirk district in the foundry industry; and what discussions his Department has had on these matters over the same period.

Mr. Allan Stewart: Comprehensive estimates of the number of closures and the number of job losses in the foundry industry in Falkirk district are not available. Officials of the Industry Department for Scotland are continuously discussing opportunities and problems facing companies both in the hon. Member's constituency and elsewhere in Scotland.

Community Charges

Mr. Dewar asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will estimate the community charge that would have to be paid by each adult aged over 18 years in each district council area in the year 1985-86, assuming that the same revenue was to be raised as was produced by the district rate, regional rate and water rate paid by the domestic ratepayer in each of these areas in that year, and that gross rates are paid by all householders and taking rebates under the housing benefit scheme into account, and assuming that domestic householders (a) will or (b) will not continue to benefit from protection equivalent to the domestic element of 8p in the pound.

Mr. Rifkind: The approximate hypothetical community charge per adult which it would have been necessary to levy in Scotland in 1985-86 to raise the same amount as total rates, including water rates, from domestic properties is set out in the table. This assumes that gross rates are paid by all householders. Figures taking rebates under the housing benefit scheme into account are not available centrally. The figures allow for domestic rate relief of 8p. It is not possible to produce figures assuming no domestic rate relief without making assumptions about how the unused domestic element would be distributed through the grant system. It is the Government's intention that the balance between domestic and non domestic sectors should not be altered by the introduction of the new system.

Mr. Dewar asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what he estimates would be the current cost of compiling a register for community charges purposes in Scotland as a whole and in each regional and island authority.

Mr. Rifkind: No precise estimate of the likely cost of compiling the proposed registers has been made. Extra costs are likely to arise from preparing, checking and maintaining the register and from the enforcement procedures, but these may be offset to some extent by savings resulting from the reduction in workload for assessors, and in appeals, on domestic valuation matters. I shall shortly be consulting the Convention of Scottish Local Authorities and other interested parties on operational issues arising from the proposed introduction of a community charge system. This consultation will cover, among other subjects, the financial implications of the proposed changes.

Mr. Dewar asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what estimate he has of the number of electors in Scotland who have moved from their registration address by the end of the year during which the electoral register is valid; and if he will undertake a study of such movements using a variety of different electoral areas to assess the feasibility of maintaining an accurate annual community charges register.

Mr. Rifkind: Precise figures in the form requested are not available. I believe, however, that from the qualifying date when the register is compiled (10 October) until the register expires 16 months later (15 February) between 10 and 15 per cent. of electors in Scotland as a whole may move from their registration address.

I shall shortly be consulting local authorities and other interested parties on the operational issues involved in maintaining the register.

Mr. Dewar asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he can further define, and give examples of, the categories of properties in Scotland where the owner is likely to be liable for the payment of a collective community charge, as described in paragraph G33 of the Green Paper "Paying for Local Government" Cmnd. 9714.

Mr. Rifkind: I intend that these arrangements should apply to a number of types of communal establishments, including hostels and lodging houses. I shall shortly be consulting the Convention of Scottish Local Authorities and other interested organisations on operational issues in connection with the proposed introduction of a community charge system; this consultation will cover the ways in which communal establishments generally will be treated under the new system.

Mr. Dewar asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what study he has made of the impact of the introduction of a community charge in Scotland on the civil courts; and what change in the number of debt actions to recover arrears he anticipates when the community charge is fully operational.

Mr. Rifkind: I intend that, as with rates arrears, summary warrant procedure should be used to recover arrears of community charge payment. The impact of the new system on the civil courts is therefore likely to be small. I shall shortly be consulting interested bodies on the detailed operational issues, including questions of the enforcement of payment, arising from the introduction of the proposed community charge system.

Household Statistics

Mr. Dewar asked the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) if he will set out the estimated increases in housing benefit cost and case load in Scotland resulting from the new local government finance system in the form set out in figure J9 on page 127 of the Green Paper "Paying for Local Government", Cmnd. 9714;

(2) what was, at the latest convenient date, the Scottish average net household income as a percentage of the average figure for Great Britain;

(3) if he will set out the relationship of gross and net rates to net household income in Scotland in 1984-85 prices, in similar form to figure F1 on page 105 of the Green Paper "Paying for Local Government", Cmnd. 9714;

(4) if he will set out the relationship between rateable value and income in Scotland, in 1984-85 prices, in similar form to figure F2 on page 105 of the Green Paper "Paying for Local Government", Cmnd. 9714;

(5) if he will set out the percentage of households in each income range with rateable values in specified ranges in Scotland, in 1984-85 prices, in similar form to figure F3 on page 106 of the Green Paper "Paying for Local Government", Cmnd. 9714;

(6) if he will set out the relationship of gross and net community charge to net household income in Scotland, in 1984-85 prices, in similar form to figure F4 on page 106 of the Green Paper "Paying for Local Government", Cmnd. 9714;

(7) if he will set out the relationship of rates and community charge, both gross and net, to net household income in each band of equivalent net income in Scotland, in 1984-85 prices, in similar form to figure F5 on page 106 of the Green Paper "Paying for Local Government", Cmnd. 9714;

(8) if he will set out the pattern of households in Scotland gaining and losing with full replacement of domestic rates by the community charge by type of household in similar form to figure J7 on page 125 of the Green Paper "Paying for Local Government", Cmnd. 9714;

(9) if he will set out the distribution of tax units in Scotland gaining and losing with full replacement of domestic rates by the community charge by type of tax unit in similar form to figure J.8 on page 126 of the Green Paper "Paying for Local Government" Cmnd. 9714.

Mr. Rifkind: According to the family expenditure survey, the average weekly household income (net of income tax and national insurance contributions) in Scotland in 1984 was 93 per cent. of the average for Great Britain.

The size of the Scottish sample for the survey, which is carried out each year, is about 600 households. Such a sample provides a reasonable measure of the average income of all households in Scotland. Even when data are analysed over a four-year period as explained in paragraph F3 of annex F of the Green Paper, the sample does not provide a statistically adequate source for tables relating to Scotland only and containing all the detail in figures F1, F2, F3, F4, F5, J7, J8 and J9 in the Green Paper "Paying for Local Government" (Cmnd. 9714). Apart from the income difference referred to above, comparisons between Scotland and England are complicated by the different range of services paid for by rates and by the different dates of valuation, but I have concluded that the Great Britain figures should be used as the best guide to the patterns in Scotland. I am confident that the Government's conclusion that a community charge should replace domestic rates is amply justified.

Mr. Dewar asked the Secretary of State for Scotland how many households there are in Scotland with only one adult over the age of 18 years; how many of these are single parent families with children; and how many are single people over pensionable age.

Mr. Rifkind: Readily available information, which comes from the 1981 census of population, is not precisely in the form requested.

On 5 April 1981 there were 433,228 households in Scotland containing one person over 16 years of age, with or without others under 16. Of these households, 263,568 consisted of one person of pensionable age (with no children), and 40,455 contained one person over 16 and some under 16. The proportion of these 40,455 households in which the person over 16 was the parent of at least one of those under 16 is estimated (from a 10 per cent. sample) as 99 per cent.

Second Homes

Mr. Dewar asked the Secretary of State for Scotland how many second homes he estimates there are in Scotland at the latest convenient date; and how many of these are owned by people whose principal domicile is in Scotland.

Mr. Rifkind: It is estimated that there were some 17,300 second homes in Scotland in 1981. Of these, 11,300 (65 per cent.) had owners usually resident in Scotland.

Mr. Dewar asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he intends that an individual who owns a house in England, in which he normally lives, should have any house owned by him in Scotland treated as a second home, for the purposes of the payment of community charge to the local authority in whose area that house is situated.

Mr. Rifkind: The Green Paper "Paying for Local Government" (Cmnd. 9714) proposes that under the new system second homes, whatever their ownership, should attract a standard charge and suggested that this should be equivalent to two individual community charges. I will shortly be consulting interested bodies on the detailed operational issues, including the question of the definition and treatment of second homes, arising from the introduction of the proposed community charge system.

Students (Community Charge)

Mr. Dewar asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will give an estimate of the number of students in Scotland presently living away from home who would be liable to pay a community charge if the scheme outlined in the Green Paper "Paying for Local Government" (Cmnd. 9714) was in operation.

Mr. Rifkind: Precise information in the form requested is not available. In 1984-85 it is estimated that some 52,000 students in further and higher education in Scotland (not including students domiciled in Scotland who were not in receipt of an award from the Scottish Education Department) were living outside the parental home. Some of these, however, would be under the age of 18 and would not be liable for the community charge: the form of liability for community charge payment of others living in communal accommodation will shortly be the subject of consultation with interested bodies, along with other operational aspects of the proposed new system.

Electoral Register

Mr. Dewar asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the cost in the latest convenient year of compiling the electoral register in each registration district in Scotland.

Mr. Rifkind On the basis of budget information for 1985-86 provided by local authorities, current expenditure by each regional and islands authority on the registration of electors is as follows. Budget returns from two authorities do not distinguish between expenditure on registration of electors and expenditure on lands valuation, both being services provided by the regional or islands assessor.

Local authority current expenditure on Registration of Electors

Authorities	Budget estimates 1985-86
	£000
Borders	81
Central	142
Dumfries and Galloway	127
Fife	133
Grampian	169
Highland	180
Lothian	509
Strathclyde	640
Tayside	*1,021
Orkney	55
Shetland	41
Western Isles	*87

* Includes Lands Valuation.

Local Income Tax

Mr. Dewar asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will give the range of local income tax rates that would apply in Scotland, assuming that average rate bills are converted into average local income tax rates.

Mr. Rifkind: Applying the same method used to produce the local income tax rates for England which are illustrated in paragraph 3.26 of "Paying for Local Government" (Cmnd 9714), present Scottish average domestic rate bills would convert into local income tax rates ranging from approximately 2½p to 6½p. The following assumptions about central Government grants to local authorities are used in this calculation:

(a) there is resource equalisation making the yield per adult of a 1p-in-the-pound local income tax the same in all areas;

(b) the present grant total is augmented by the present cost of rate rebates.

While very approximate illustrative figures such as the above can be derived, these totally ignore the practical difficulties associated with the assumptions, notably in calculating the tax base of each district for the purposes of equalisation.

Highlands and Islands Development Board

Mr. Kennedy asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if, pursuant to the reply of 12 February to the hon. Member for Ross, Cromarty and Skye, he will detail in the Official Report those cases where there has been reduced need for payments of grant-in-aid to the Highlands and Islands Development Board as a result of the board (a) not spending its budgeted amounts approved by Parliament and (b) obtaining receipts which were not used for higher than budgeted spending; and if he will state the total sums involved in each case.

Mr. John MacKay: There have been three occasions since 1980 that the provision for the HIDB's grant-in-aid has not been fully utilised. These were:

	£ 000s
	Budget	Outturn	Shortfall
1980-81	20,650	20,021	629
1981-82	23,597	22,942	655
1984-85	34,627	34,619	8

In the first two years, the shortfalls were due to the board's spending being less than the original budget. In 1984-85, receipts additional to the original estimate were obtained by the board and its budget was increased correspondingly. The very small shortfall was against the increased budget.

Forestry Commission

Mr. Kirkwood asked the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) if he has any plans to privatise the Forestry Commission; and if he will make a statement;

(2) if he will make a statement on any review presently being considered to amend Her Majesty's Goverment's policy of land disposals by the Forestry Commission.

Mr. John MacKay: I refer the hon. Member to the statement made by my right hon. Friend the Member for Ayr (Mr. Younger) on 8 November 1984 setting out the Government's policy on disposals by the Forestry Commission. As in all other areas of Government activity policy is kept under regular review.

Mr. Kirkwood asked the Secretary of State for Scotland whether he has had a report from the Forestry Commission recommending disposal of the Commission's assets to private investors.

Mr. John MacKay: My right hon. and learned Friend has received no such recommendation from the Forestry Commission.

Scottish Development Agency

Mr. Gordon Brown asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what money budgeted for, or originally allocated to, the Scottish Development Agency budget is now being employed to fund regional selective assistance or regional development grant payments.

Mr. Allan Stewart: No money specifically allocated to the Scottish Development Agency has been employed in this way. As my right hon. Friend the then Secretary of State explained in answer to my hon. Friend the Member for Cunninghame, North (Mr. Corrie) on 11 November at column 68, the formerly announced increase of £6,845,000 in the cash limit for vote XV,3 (Regional and general industrial support Scotland), as a whole, was cancelled as a contribution towards the increase in provision for vote XV,5 (Regional Assistance, Scotland).

Legal Aid

Mr. Dewar asked the Secretary of State for Scotland how many applications for (a) criminal legal aid and (b) civil legal aid have been made in Scotland in each of the last five years for which records are available; and what percentage of applications in each category were granted in each year.

Mr. Rifkind: Details for the year to 31 March 1985 are not yet available. The information for the five preceding years is as follows:

(a) Criminal legal aid

	Total applications received	Percentage granted
1979-80	43,077	86
1980-81	50,706	88
1981-82	58,392	90
1982-83	61,374	90
1983-84	68,402	90

(b) Civil legal aid

	Total applications received	Full certificates issued
1979-80	29,012	16,782
1980-81	32,843	17,621
1981-82	35,292	22,190
1982-83	31,006	19,475
1983-84	31,126	18,353

In the case of civil legal aid the figures are not given as a percentage since the applications include applications for emergency certificates, some applications are pending at the end of year, and not all approvals result in the issue of a certificate.

Mr. Dewar asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what has been the total cost of legal aid in (a) criminal and (b) civil cases in each of the last five years for which records are available; and what was the average cost per individual case in each category.

Mr. Rifkind: Details for the last year to 31 March 1985 are not yet available. The information for the five preceding years is as follows:

	Total cost £000	Average cost per case £
(a) Criminal legal aid
1979-80	5,741	123
1980-81	8,549	166
1981-82	11,650	194
1982-83	16,834	241
1983-84	18,015	264
(b) Civil legal aid
1979-80	3,954	298
1980-81	6,487	384
1981-82	8,788	471
1982-83	12,035	589
1983-84	13,445	615

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Hengistbury Head, Bournemouth (Coast Protection)

Mr. David Atkinson asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how much grant aid under the Coast Protection Act 1949 has been agreed for the coast protection works at Hengistbury head, Bournemouth.

Mrs. Fenner: The works at Hengistbury head are very complex and are being carried out in a number of district phases. Work has begun on stage one but my officials are awaiting certain financial information from Bournemouth borough council before the grant for this phase can be calculated. The costs and other details of the remaining stages have not yet been fully ascertained and I am therefore unable to determine grant on these phases at the moment.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Prison Building

Mr. Moate asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the progress of the prison building and improvement programmes at Eastchurch on the Isle of Sheppey, Kent, indicating the likely total costs, the completion dates, and the planned increases in staffing levels.

Mr. Mellor: We are currently carrying out major capital work at the existing Standford hill prison at Eastchurch, and constructing a new prison, to be known as Swaleside, on an adjoining site.

At Standford hill, the main contract for two new living blocks to replace the existing category D accommodation is due to be completed at the end of this month, at an estimated final cost of about £4·85 million. The former category C accommodation at the establishment was closed last year as a result of fire damage, and we are currently undertaking a feasibility study in connection with its reprovision.

Construction of the new Swaleside prison began in January 1985, and is due to be completed towards the end of 1987. The latest estimated cost is £22·8 million.

There will be no increase in staffing levels at Standford hill following the commissioning of the new accommodation. At Swaleside approxiamtely 230 discipline grade staff and about 80 other (including governor grades and administration staff) will be employed.

Mr. Moate asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will publish a table describing the prison building programme of the Government since 1979 as compared with the years 1974 to 1979.

Mr. Mellor: The following table gives details of capital expenditure on new prisons and on modernisation and redevelopment of the existing prison estate, and of new inmate places provided both in new and existing prison establishments. Work at existing establishments, which (together with other schemes carried out by direct labour) is undertaken by the Home Office directorate of works, embraces not only the provision of new places but a wide range of other capital projects to provide new or improved facilities and services.

Firearms

Sir John Farr asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to the answer of 24 January, Official Report, column 324, of the firearms, annually reported as stolen since 1979, in each year to 1983, how many were (a) air weapons, (b) pistols or revolvers and (c) antique weapons.

Mr. Giles Shaw: The available information is given in the following table. Information on antique weapons stolen is not separately available and these weapons will have been classified according to the types shown.

Burglaries and thefts, recorded by the police in which firearms were reported to have been stolen, by type of weapon.
England and Wales Number of offences

1984	1,202	164	678	103	392	2,539

* Includes revolvers.
† Includes starting guns, imitation guns.

Sir John Farr asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many of the firearms reported stolen in each category were recovered by the police in each year from 1979 to 1983.

Mr. Giles Shaw: This information is not recorded by chief officers of police.

Community Radio

Dr. McDonald asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will specify in the Official Report the full details of the monitoring of community radio during the two years' experimental period; and if he will make it his policy to arrange for daily tapes from each community radio station to be subject to detailed analysis.

Mr. Giles Shaw: As announced by my right hon. and learned Friend the then Home Secretary on 25 July 1985 at columns 670-671, arrangements are being made for the community radio experiment to be monitored by way of independent research studies of such matters as the nature of services provided by selected stations, audience reaction and the impact on existing broadcasting services. It is our intention to publish the results of this research. The transmissions of all the stations in the experiment will in addition be liable to be monitored by the Home Office at any time, but it is not envisaged that there will be any need for a detailed analysis of the full output of each station.

Police (Compensation)

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what compensation is paid to police officers injured in the course of duty; and what pensions are paid to those who are unable to continue work as a result of such injuries.

Mr. Giles Shaw: A police officer is entitled to full pay while absent from duty because of injury. If the injury was caused by criminal action, compensation may be claimed under the criminal injuries compensation scheme. An officer who has to retire prematurely as the result of injury on duty is entitled under the Police Pension Regulations 1973 to an ill health pension, an injury pension and an injury gratuity. The ill health pension is calculated by reference to his average pensionable pay at the time of his retirement and his years of service, the maximum pension so payable being two-thirds of pay. The injury pension provides a guaranteed minimum income, the level depending on the degree of disablement, up to a maximum of 85 per cent. of pensionable pay. Three quarters of the ill health pension is taken into account. The injury gratuity is a lump sum of up to six months' pay.

If the officer's injuries render him totally disabled he is also entitled in anticipation of the Police (Injury Benefit) Regulations which are about to be made to a lump sum of five times average pensionable pay subject to abatement in respect of any damages or other compensation received.

Immigration Service

Mr. Gareth Wardell asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what were the staffing levels of the United Kingdom immigration service for each year since 1978.

Mr. Waddington: The number of staff in post in the immigration service on 1 January in each of the years since 1978 was:

	Number
1978	1,555
1979	1,587
1980	1,606
1981	1,668
1982	1,630
1983	1,695
1984	1,711
1985	1,777
1986	1,788

Visitors (Visas)

Mr. Tony Lloyd asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether there exists any category of potential visitors who are automatically refused a visitor's visa.

Mr. Waddington: I refer the hon. Member to paragraphs 17-20 and 76 to 85 of the immigration rules (HC 169 as amended).

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

Universities (Accounts)

Mr. Wigley asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will introduce legislation to ensure that the full accounts of universities are available for public scrutiny.

Mr. Chris Patten: University statutes generally require university accounts to be published or otherwise made available for inspection, and I understand that it is already general practice for them to be published.

Schools (Drug Awareness)

Mr. Greenway asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science which local education authorities have appointed a teacher to be responsible for drug awareness in their work; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Dunn: In a considerable number of local education authorities, schools, colleges or the authorities themselves have assigned functions in this area to teaching staff. As from 1 April this year, this work will receive considerable reinforcement from the appointment of advisers or other specialist staff funded by the Department through the education support grant.

School Statistics

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will list in the Official Report the number of pupils in each local education authority and in England educated in pre-1914, post-1914 and pre-1939, post-1939 and pre-1960, and post-1960 school buildings.

Mr. Dunn: This information is not collected by the Department.

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will list in the Official Report, for each local education authority and for England, the number of classes and of pupils in classes in each local education authority with under 30, 31 to 35, 36 to 40, and over 40 pupils per class for primary and secondary schools for each of the last two years for which figures are available.

Mr. Dunn: I shall write to the hon. Member.

GCSE Examinations

Dr. Glyn asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what action he has taken to ensure that sufficient preparations have been made for the new GCSE examinations with regard to teachers' courses; how many mode 1 syllabuses have been approved; and how he proposes to make them available by the autumn term.

Mr. Chris Patten: The Secondary Examinations Council, the GCSE examining groups and the local education authorities have all combined to provide a programme of preparation for the new examination courses which is unprecedented both in its scale and in its scope. The Department is making a substantial financial contribution. Mode 1 syllabuses in those subjects for which there are subject national criteria fall to be approved by the examining groups and the Secondary Examinations Council. Mode 1 syllabuses in other subjects fall to be approved by the examining groups in the first instance. The Secondary Examinations Council announced on 18 February that 76 syllabuses had been approved. All syllabuses must be approved by May 1986 at the latest. Both the examining groups and the Secondary Examinations Council are on course for that target. The distribution of approved syllabuses to schools is a matter for the examining groups.

CERN

Mr. John Mark Taylor asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science when he expects to announce a decision on the future level of British participation in CERN.

Mr. Walden [pursuant to his reply, 4 February 1986, c. 114]: On 20 February at the invitation of the Council of CERN I attended an extraordinary session at which it was unanimously agreed, following the proposal made by the United Kingdom, and on the basis of a resolution put forward by the President of the Council, Professor Kummer, to conduct a comprehensive independent review of the organisation. The resolution and accompanying explanatory note are as follows:

"CERN REVIEW

THE CERN COUNCIL

Recognising

the growing importance, for all European states regardless of their size, of political, economic, scientific and technological collaboration;

the necessity of fundamental scientific reserch of high quality both for the advancement of knowledge, and for future economic and social prosperity;

the success of the scientific collaboration in CERN which has given Europe a leading position in the world in the field of particle physics;

the growth of scientific opportunity in this and other fields, and the consequence for priorities both nationally and internationally;

the need for governments to review from time to time the distribution of financial and human resources over the existing scientific activities so as to ensure responsiveness to new scientific and technological developments;

the duty, with limited publicly-provided resources, of seeking improved cost-effectiveness and better value for money.

Having regard to the desirability of maintaining also in the longer term the high quality and international character of CERN science and technology, and a programme in which LEP experiments as well as other ones, including smaller experiments, can find a place; possibilities within the existing CERN Convention for engaging and enlarging other sources of funds and resources;

the possibilities for improved worldwide co-ordination of investment plans for accelerators and of their use;

the possibilities for improving efficiency within CERN and the need to match staffing cost-effectively to programme requirements;

the importance of realising LEP phase 1 and taking into consideration the completion of LEP to its full design energy.

Decides to appoint an ad hoc consultative group of external personalities to conduct an in depth comprehensive review of CERN with the following task:

to advise the Council how human and material resources, employment conditions, structure, operations and future use and development of facilities might be developed to operate with maximum cost effectiveness and value for money at alternative levels of funding by present Member States, and to assess their consequences for the CERN programmes and for the services to Member States*; to assess the possibilities for engaging and enlarging other sources of funds and resources; to report within one year findings and recommendations to the CERN Council and hence to the governments of the Member States.

Asks the Director-General of CERN and his staff, and other organs and committees of CERN, to provide such information and other collaboration as the Review Group may request.

*The Delegation of the United Kingdom requests the consideration of alternative levels of funding by present Member States ranging from constant contributions at 1986 levels to contributions reduced by 25 per cent expressed throughout in 1986 real terms, over the next 5-7 years. [The President undertook to ensure that the review group examined this option.]

Cern Review: Explanatory note

1. The Group should be composed of five to seven persons and might include scientists engineers and industrialists. Members should be chosen for their breadth of experience. One member would be named as Chairman. Chairman and other members should be ready to devote the appropriate time for this task. Chairman and members would be appointed by the President of Council on behalf of the CERN Council, taking into account proposals made by the Governments of Member States, and after consultation with Committee of Council.

2. The group would have its own full-time secretariat attached to the Chairman of the Group.

3. It would be for the group to decide on its procedures. The group would be free to examine any possibilities it chose. The Group should take account of the Scientific Policy Committee and of the progress of other relevant reviews such as CERN's own internal review programme including that of Professor Rubbia's group.

4. It would be open to the Group to commission further professional help (e.g. management consultant services) with the approval of the President of CERN Council.

5. The cost of the review will be evaluated and the manner in which it will be financed will be decided on the basis of a proposal made by the Chairman of the group in collaboration with the President of Council and of the Director-General of CERN."

Schools (Capital Allocations)

Mr. Steen asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science (1) what is the capital allocation for 1986-87 for wholly supported schools in the public sector in Devon;

(2) what is the capital allocation for voluntary aided schools in Devon for 1986-87, expressed (a) in total and (b) as a percentage of the total money made available in Devon by way of capital allocation for education;

(3) what is the capital allocation for 1986-87 for wholly supported schools in the public sector in Cornwall;

(4) what is the capital allocation for voluntary aided schools in Cornwall for 1986-87, expressed (a) in total and (b) as a percentage of the total money made available in Cornwall by way of capital allocation for education;

(5) what is the capital allocation for 1986-87 for wholly supported schools in the public sector in Somerset;

(6) what is the capital allocation for voluntary aided schools in Somerset for 1986-87, expressed (a) in total and (b) as a percentage of the total money made available in Somerset by way of capital allocation for education;

(7) what is the capital allocation for 1986-87 for wholly supported schools in the public sector in Avon;

(8) what is the capital allocation for voluntary aided schools in Avon for 1986-87, expressed (a) in total and (b) as a percentage of the total money made available in Avon by way of capital allocation for education;

(9) what is the capital allocation for 1986-87 for wholly supported schools in the public sector in Dorset;

(10) what is the capital allocation for voluntary aided schools in Dorset for 1986-87, expressed (a) in total and (b) as a percentage of the total money made available in Dorset by way of capital allocation for education;

(11) what is the capital allocation for 1986-87 for wholly supported schools in the public sector in Wiltshire;

(12) what is the captial allocation for voluntary aided schools in Wiltshire for 1986-87, expressed (a) in total and (b) as a percentage of the total money made available in Wiltshire by way of capital allocation for education;

(13) what is the capital allocation for 1986-87 for wholly supported schools in the public sector in Lancashire;

(14) what is the capital allocation for voluntary aided schools in Lancashire for 1986-87, expressed (a) in total and (b) as a percentage of the total money made available in Lancashire by way of capital allocation for education;

(15) what is the capital allocation for 1986-87 for wholly supported schools in the public sector in Lincolnshire;

(16) what is the capital allocation for voluntary aided schools in Lincolnshire for 1986-87, expressed (a) in total and (b) as a percentage of the total money made available in Lincolnshire by way of capital allocation for education.

Mr. Dunn [pursuant to his reply, 19 February 1986, c. 182]: The information requested is set out in the following table:

Education capital expenditure allocations 1986-87

£000's

Local education authority	*Allocation of prescribed expenditure	Notional schools element†	Allocations‡ for expenditure by governors of aided and SA schools	Aided allocation as a percentage of all capital allocations‖
				per cent
Avon	4,070	2,986	193	4·5
Cornwall	3,592	3,401	252	6·6
Devon	8,418	7,453	132	1·5
Dorset	3,377	2,352	216	6·0
Lancashire	12,538	9,851	1,302	9·4
Lincolnshire	3,908	3,523	3	0·1
Somerset	2,014	1,792	22	1·1
Wiltshire	1,983	1,981	29	1·4

* Allocations of prescribed expenditure are made under Section 72 of the Local Government Planning and land Act 1980 and are unhypothecated sums to cover all LEA capital expenditure.

† LEAs are notified of the notional elements for schools and further education capital expenditure underlying the allocations as an indication of how they were calculated. LEAs are free to apply their allocations as they wish.

‡ This expenditure is not prescribed expenditure and is assisted by grant from the Department. The allocations shown are those announced on 18 December 1985 and are subject to variation in the course of the 1986-87 financial year.

‖ There is considerable variation between these eight LEAs in the proportion of schools which are aided.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Turkey

Mr. Jim Spicer asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry (1) if he will make a statement about progress on Turkish fabric manufacturers' recent commercial initiatives aimed at redressing the balance of textiles trades between Turkey and EEC countries; and what plans he has for developing these initiatives;

(2) what financial and other support he is giving to British manufacturers wishing to further commercial relations in Turkey.

Mr. Alan Clark: I shall reply to my hon. Friend as soon as possible.

Insurance Contracts

Mr. Bright asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what progress he has made in his review of the position on non-disclosure and breach of warranty in relation to insurance contracts.

Mr. Channon: The insurers have informed me that they are willing to strengthen the non-life and long-term statements of insurance practice on certain aspects proposed by the Department. These concern the limitation of the duty of disclosure, warranties, disputes procedures and, in the case of the long-term statements the payment of interest on life insurance claims. The statements apply to insurances taken out by private consumers. Copies of the texts of the revised statements have been placed in the Library.

These changes are in the right direction. I am well aware of the arguments, advanced amongst others by the representatives of consumers, in favour of legislation on non-disclosure and breach of warranty. But I consider that on balance the case for legislation is out-weighed by the advantages of self-regulation so long as this is effective. I look to all insurers, whether or not they belong to the Association of British Insurers which has promulgated the statements, to observe both their spirit and their letter.

In the light of the insurers' undertakings I do no consider there is any need for the moment to proceed with earlier proposals for a change in the law. My Department will however keep the situation under review in order to ensure that self-regulation is working adequately and will reconsider the question of legislation if problems continue to arise.

Consumer Protection

Mr. Murphy asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will introduce legislation extending to England and Wales provisions having similar effect in those applying to Scotland through section 49(3) of the Sale of Goods Act 1979; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Howard: Section 49(3) of this Act simply preserves an existing right applying in Scotland. There is no similar right under general law in England and Wales and the Government have no plans to legislate to create one. It is of course always open to the seller in England and Wales to stipulate for the payment of interest in a contract with the buyer and I understand that, in commercial contracts, this is common practice.

Airbus

Mr. Carter-Jones asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what information he has as to the proportion of the production of the British Aerospace industry represented by the Airbus A320; what information he has as to the proportional contribution of the industry to the manufacture of the Airbus A320; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Butcher [pursuant to his reply, 20 February 1986, c. 268-9]: As the A320 is still in the development stage and has yet to go into series production, it is too soon to be able to estimate what proportion of the production of the British aerospace industry it will represent.

On figures currently available the United Kingdom content of the total Airbus A320, including airframe, engines and equipment will be in the order of 16 per cent. for the CFM engined version and of 26 per cent. for the V2500 engined version.

Mr. Carter-Jones asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what information he has as to how many Airbus A320s have been firmly ordered, and by which airlines; how many options exist for this aircraft, and from which airlines; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Butcher [pursuant to his reply, 20 February 1986, c. 268-9]: According to the latest information available to me the order position for the Airbus A320 is as follows:

	Firm orders	Options
Contracts signed
Air France	25	25
Air Inter	10	14
British Caledonian	7	3
Cyprus Airways	4	4
Inex Adria	5	3
Pan American	16	34
Ansett Airlines	8	9
Lufthansa	15	25
GATX Air	10	—
	100	117
Memorandum of Understanding
Indian Airlines	19	12
Trans Australian	9	—
	28	12

The number of A320 orders and options achieved two years ahead of the aircraft's entry into service is very encouraging.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Tax Investigations

Mr. Hickmet asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer how Inland Revenue or Customs and Excise inspectors carry out in-depth investigations into the tax affairs of companies, businesses or schedule D taxpayers.

Mr. Moore [pursuant to his reply, 10 February 1986, c. 330-31]: An inspector will carry out an in-depth investigation into the accounts of a company or business only where he is not satisfied that the taxpayer has fully declared his profits. An inquiry into the business records and the underlying information from which they are constructed will normally involve correspondence and possibly interviews with the taxpayer, and with his agent if he has one. The inspector may use the statutory powers available to him in order to obtain further information, where this is considered necessary.

A VAT trader will be subjected to an in-depth investigation by Customs and Excise only where there is reason to suspect that deliberate tax evasion has taken place. Customs and Excise normally carry out control visits to all VAT registered traders using selective checking procedures.

Mr. Hickmet asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many companies went into liquidation, businesses ceased trading and schedule D taxpayers were declared bankrupt following in-depth Inland Revenue or Customs and Excise investigations, stating what proportion that was of those companies, and so on assessed for further tax in each of the years since 1979.

Mr. Moore [pursuant to his reply, 10 February 1986, c. 330-31]: The Inland Revenue does not keep such records. This question could be answered in respect of VAT registered traders only at the cost of disproportionate time and effort.

Mr. Hickmet asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many in-depth investigations into companies, businesses and schedule D taxpayers the Inland Revenue and Customs and Excise have carried out where they have gone back up to 10 years for each of the years since 1979 to date; and how many such investigations revealed that further tax was payable, giving the total figures involved in each year.

Mr. Moore [pursuant to his reply, 10 February 1986, c. 330-31]: The table sets out, in respect of Inland Revenue investigations, figures for both over-10 years and under-10 years. Until 1982 records were kept to a year ending on 31 October, whereas from April 1983 they have been kept on a fiscal year basis. Consequently part of the October 1982 figures—for the period from 6 April to 31 October—are also included in the 1982-83 figures.

The yield for cases over and under 10 years is not available.

Year ended 31 October	1979	1980	1981	1982	1982-83	1983-84	1984-85

I regret that no statistics are available in relation to VAT.

Mr. Hickmet asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many companies, businesses and schedule D taxpayers following an in depth investigation by the Customs and Excise or Inland Revenue were given the choice to pay a lesser sum over a period of time or contest the full sum before the Commissioners, giving the sums involved.

Mr. Moore [pursuant to his reply, 10 February 1986, c. 330-31]: A taxpayer may negotiate an agreed settlement with the inspector, or have his appeal determined by the commissioners. There is no choice of the type referred to the question of payment over a period of time normally arises only when, figures having been agreed, the taxpayer is unable to raise the funds to meet the liability and asks for an instalment arrangement.

There is no provision in VAT legislation for this facility to be offered to VAT registered businesses.

Mr. Hickmet asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer why, in in-depth investigations by the Inland Revenue and Customs and Excise, the onus is placed on the taxpayer to show that further tax is not payable.

Mr. Moore [pursuant to his reply, 10 February 1986, c. 330-31]: In relation to the Inland Revenue, it is provided by statute, in relation to taxes on income and profits generally and not only in connection with an in-depth investigation, that if an inspector is disatisfied with a return he may make an assessment based on his best judgment. The taxpayer may appeal against that assessment and, in the absence of agreement between the taxpayer and the inspector, the appeal will be heard by the special or general commissioners. The law further provides that the assessment shall stand, unless at an appeal hearing it appears to the majority of the commissioners present, by examination of the appellant or other lawful evidence, that the taxpayer is being overcharged.

Assessments for VAT are raised only where Customs and Excise are satified to thier best judgment that there is evidence that an underdeclaration of tax has occurred.

Mr. Hickmet asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what administrative directions set out how the Inland Revenue and Customs and Excise exercise their powers to carry out in-depth investigations into the tax affairs of companies, businesses and individuals paying tax under schedule D, after audited accounts have been submitted; and if he will state up to how far back such investigations normally go.

Mr. Moore [pursuant to his reply, 10 February 1986, c. 330-31]: The directions given to inspectors of taxes are set out in head office instructions, and further information is given in training courses and guidance notes.

The following table provides details of the number of years covered by Inland Revenue investigations during 1984-85:

Number of years included in settlement

	1	2	3-4	5-6	7-8	9-10	>10
Income Tax	9,610	7,288	15,763	8,913	3,801	1,130	933	47,438
Corporation Tax	1,312	653	997	650	254	121	145	4,132
Total	10,922	7,941	16,760	9,563	4,055	1,251	1,078	51,570
Percentage of Total	21	15	32	19	8	2	2	100

In-depth investigation by Customs and Excise and the issue of additional assessments are not dependent on the prior submission of audited accounts which form only part of the basis of calculation of VAT liability.

Mr. Hickmet asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what proportion of directors of companies or businesses or schedule D taxpayers who were assessed as liable to pay further tax after an in-depth investigation used professional legal or accountants' assistance in their dealings with the Inland Revenue at the time of agreeing to pay further tax.

Mr. Moore [pursuant to his reply, 10 February 1986, c. 330-31]: I regret that this information is not available.

WALES

Community Service Projects

Mr. Irving asked the Secretary of State for Wales (1) if he will make a statement on his Department's support for community service projects in Wales; and whether he has any plans to extend or develop his Department's work in this area;

(2) if he will estimate how many people have been involved in community service schemes supported by his Department in each of the last five years; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply given by my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister on 20 February at column 266.

Within available resources our Department will continue to provide support through a wide range of measures which enable people to serve the needs of the community.

Labour Statistics

Mr. Barry Jones asked the Secretary of State for Wales what proportion of 1985 school leavers in each Welsh county are currently (a) unemployed, (b) engaged on YTS schemes, (c) in full-time employment and (d) in part-time employment, at the latest date for which figures are available.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: Information about 1985 unemployed school leavers and those in employment is not available because the Department of Employment statistics do not indicate the year in which a young person left school. The number participating in YTS is only available at Manpower Services Commission area office level. The latest available information as at the end of January 1986 is as follows:

	Numbers
Gwent	2,879
West Glamorgan and Dyfed	3,799
Mid and South Glamorgan	5,366
Gwynedd, Clwyd and Powys	3,957

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT

Paraquat

Mr. Meadowcroft asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has received about hazards arising from the supply of paraquat to developing countries; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Raison: I have received no such representations. We have no objection in principle to the supply of such herbicides and pesticides as paraquat under the aid programme, but we would need to be satisfied that its use would have no harmful effects on those who handled it and on the environment generally.

ENVIRONMENT

Nature Conservancy Council (Exhibition)

Sir Hector Monro asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he has considered an application for an exhibition by the Nature Conservancy Council to be displayed in the Upper Waiting Hall.

Mr. Waldegrave: Yes, and I look forward to attending the opening of the NCC's exhibition on 10 March.

Airey Houses (Devon)

Dr. Cunningham asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if West Devon borough council has sought any additional housing investment programme allocation from his Department in respect of Airey houses at South Zeal and Chagford.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: No.

Empty Properties (Wirral)

Mr. Frank Field asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make it his policy to refuse any request for those Wirral councillors who own properties within the borough for a dispensation so that they can vote on a motion to levy rates on empty properties.

Mrs. Rumbold: No application for dispensation under section 97 of the Local Government Act 1972 has been received on this matter. Any such application would be considered on its merits.

Home Improvement Grants

Mr. Wigley asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will introduce legislation to exempt applicants for home improvement grants in respect of households which contained a disabled person from being debarred from grant because of the upper limit of rateable value.

Sir George Young: Rateable value limits are already disapplied for intermediate grants and improvement grants where the application is for a dwelling occupied by a disabled person and the works are needed to meet a requirement arising from that person's particular disability. My right hon. Friend sees no reason to extend this concession to cover works which do not relate to disability.

Truscon RD27 Houses, Liverpool

Mr. Wareing asked the Secretary of State for the Environment when he expects to receive the report of the building research station on Truscon RD27 houses in Storrington avenue, Liverpool.

Sir George Young: I have received this report and am considering its findings. I shall write to the hon. Member shortly.

Departmental Offices, Coatbridge

Mr. Tom Clarke asked the Secretary of State for the Environment when he expects construction work to commence on the new Department of Health and Social Security and Department of Employment offices in Coatbridge, at the request of the Property Services Agency.

Sir George Young: I am reviewing the Property Services Agency's future new works programme in the light of the funds available. No decision has so far been taken which affects the Coatbridge scheme and I will write to the hon. Member as soon as I can.

1992 Olympic Games

Sir Reginald Eyre asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what provision is to be made for the financial security of the 1992 Olympics in the event of Birmingham receiving the nomination to host the games.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: The Birmingham Olympic Council, of which the right hon. Member for Birmingham, Small Heath (Mr. Howell) is president, has declared its intention that the Games should be entirely privately financed. I welcome this approach. Nevertheless, the Government recognise that if preparations for the Games were well advanced and they were subsequently to be cancelled as a result of circumstances entirely beyond Birmingham's control, the city might be left with a large financial liability. The Government therefore propose to seek legislation providing for an indemnity to the city council in such circumstances. The indemnity would only apply to net losses in excess of £100 million incurred as a direct consequence of its preparations to stage the Games. The Government will expect the organising committee and the city of Birmingham to use their best endeavours to minimise the risk of loss and the potential call on public funds.

If Birmingham receives the nomination to host the 1992 Olympics I shall seek an early opportunity to introduce the relevant legislation for the indemnity.

I have written today to the leader of Birmingham city council to this effect and I have placed a copy of my letter in the Library.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Correspondence (Bar Chairman)

Mr. Michael Brown asked the Attorney-General if he will place in the Library a copy of his letter to the chairman of the Bar, dated 6 January, a copy of the Lord Chancellor's letter of 7 February and the Bar's reply in each case.

The Attorney-General: I did not write to the chairman of the Bar on the 6 January. However, I did write to him on the 6 February. I am arranging for a copy of that letter to be placed in the Library of the House, together with the other letters referred to by my hon. Friend. All these letters have been published.

Legal Aid

Mr. Michael Brown asked the Attorney-General if, pursuant to the reply of 17 February to the hon. Member for Montgomery (Sir John Stradling Thomas) Official Report, column 1, at any time he or his officials agreed with the Bar that negotiations on remuneration of criminal legal aid fees should be concluded by the end of January 1986.

The Attorney-General: The Bar has obtained leave to institute proceedings for judicial review. These matters are likely to be material to that case. That being so it would be improper for me to comment.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Education Expenditure

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will list in the Official Report the level of education spending by his Department for each of the last five years expressed as a proportion of the gross domestic product.

Dr. Mawhinney: The table expresses actual expendure on education in Northern Ireland in financial years as a percentage of the Northern Ireland gross domestic product (at factor cost) for the nearest appropriate calender year:

	Per cent.
1980-81	10·5
1981-82	10·5
1982-83	10·3
1983-84	10·0
1984-85	9·8

Mr. Pawsey asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what is the current level of per capita spending on education in Northern Ireland; and how that compares with the rest of the United Kingdom.

Dr. Mawhinney: Estimated figures for 1985-86 are as follows:

Northern Ireland—£861; Rest of United Kingdom—£845. (Note: Per capita relates to the total population under 25 years old.)

Secondary Education

Mr. Pawsey asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what facilities exist in the Province for promoting technical education in secondary schools.

Dr. Mawhinney: Most secondary schools in Northern Ireland provide a wide and developing range of facilities to promote technical education. These include specialist facilities for craft design and technology and specialist accommodation and equipment for science and micro-computing. In addition the education and library boards provide a range of support services in connection with technical education.

Mr. Pawsey asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on the extent to which selection forms part of the secondary education system in the Province.

Dr. Mawhinney: While there are a few small areas in Northern Ireland where the transfer from primary to secondary education is based on non-selection the vast majority of pupils in Northern Ireland transfer to either secondary intermediate or grammar schools on the basis of selection.

Mr. Pawsey asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what percentage of children is in each type of secondary school in the Province.

Dr. Mawhinney: The latest available information is as follows:

	January 1985 Percentage
Secondary intermediate schools	65·2
Grammar schools	34·8

Pupil-Teacher Ratios

Mr. Pawsey asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what is the current pupil-teacher ratio in Northern Ireland; and how that figure compares with the rest of the United Kingdom.

Dr. Mawhinney: The latest available information is for the 1984-85 school year and is as follows:

	Pupil-teacher ratio
Northern Ireland	18·6
England	18·3
Wales	18·5
Scotland	16·5

Note: Ratios relate to maintained schools in England, Scotland and Wales and grant-aided schools in Northern Ireland.

Examination Results

Mr. Pawsey asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will provide such information as is available to him on the pass rates and grades achieved by pupils in public examinations in Northern Ireland in each year since 1960; how these figures compare with the equivalent figures for the rest of the United Kingdom; and to what extent he attributes any variations in the level of performance indicated by the figures for Northern Ireland, on the one hand, and Great Britain on the other, to the differing ranges of A-level options available to pupils in the two parts of the United Kingdom.

Dr. Mawhinney: Information for each year since 1960 could be provided only at disproportionate cost. Information on pass-rates in selected years is as follows.

Northern Ireland has a lower entry rate to public examinations than England and Wales. This makes it difficult to assess the significance of the variations and whether they can be attributed to any specific factor.

Mortality Statistics

Mr. Michael Forsyth asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will list in the Official Report, for the last five years for which records are available, the average age of those who died from (a) malignant neoplasm of trachea, bronchus and lung, (b) bronchitis and emhpysema and (c) ischaemic heart disease, giving the figures for all deaths and broken down by sex.

Mr. Needham: The information requested is a follows:

RUC (Expenditure)

Sir John Biggs-Davison asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will itemise the additional expenditure on the Royal Ulster Constabulary required by recent political developments in Northern Ireland.

Mr. Scott: Additional expenditure on the Royal Ulster Constabulary generated by recent political developments in Northern Ireland is estimated at £1 million and includes the costs of the policing of the January by-elections and the provision of security arrangements for the intergovernmental conference.

SCOTLAND

Community Services Projects

Mr. Irving asked the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) if he will make a statement on his Department's support for community service projects in Scotland; and whether he has any plans to extend or develop his Department's work in this area;

(2) if he will estimate how many people have been involved in community service schemes supported by his Department in each of the last five years; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John MacKay: On present support I refer to the reply given by my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister on Thursday 20 February at column 266. I intend to maintain financial support within available resources for a range of schemes which help both unemployed people and others to become involved in serving the needs of the community.

Mortality Statistics

Mr. Michael Forsyth asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list in the Official Report the deaths in Scotland in each of the last five years for which records are available attributed to (a) malignant neoplasm of trachea, bronchus and lung, (b) bronchitis and emphysema and (c) ischaemic heart disease, giving the figures for all deaths and broken down by sex.

Mr. John MacKay: The figures are as follows:

Deaths from selected causes, by sex, Scotland, 1980 to 1984

Toll Bridges

Mr. Dewar asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will give the accumulated deficits at the latest available date on the Forth, Tay and Erskine bridges, respectively, together with the current annual interest paid on each and the anticipated net toll income for each bridge after deduction of collection and operating costs.

Mr. Rifkind: The latest available figures for the three bridges are set out in the following table.

	Accumulated deficit £	Current annual interest paid £	Total loan - repayments £
Forth road bridge (at 31 March 1985)	21,483,826	1,374,544	*505,187
Tay road bridge (at 31 March 1985)
Owed to Secretary of State	2,789,665	209,743	†22,257
Owed to joint board's constituent authorities	3,357,335	216,600	†34,400
Erskine bridge (at 31 March 1984)	36,960,279	4,870,223	‡—

* Equals income after deduction of operating costs, capital expenditure costs (eg resurfacing), deficit in the revenue account brought forward from 1983-84, and interest payment.

† Equals income paid to Secretary of State and constituent authorities after deduction of operating costs, capital expenditure costs (nil), payment into the reserve fund (£367,000) and interest payments.

‡ Income from the Erskine bridge, after deduction of operating costs and capital expenditure costs amounted to £588,287. After payments of interest, payment of amortisation and payment into the sinking fund, this became a loss of £6,459,901 which has been included in the accumulated deficit figure.

Teachers (Dispute)

Mr. Dalyell asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will define the nature of the compromise he told representatives of the Scottish Churches he was prepared to make on the Scottish teacher's dispute; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Allan Stewart: I refer the hon. Member to the reply which I gave on 13 February to the hon. Members for Falkirk, West (Mr. Canavan) and for Gordon, (Mr. Bruce).

SDA (Coatbridge Development)

Mr. Tom Clarke asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what has been the cost to the Scottish Development Agency of making mineral and other preparations for the new Department of Health and Social Security and Department of Employment offices at Coatbridge.

Mr. Allan Stewart: The total amount so far expended by the Scottish Development Agency in preparing the Coatbridge south circular road site for use is £244,000. Of this total £122,000 is directly attributable to the area of the site intended for use by the Department of Health and Social Security and the Department of Employment.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Falkland Islands

Mr. Stewart asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is the latest total since April 1982 of (a) defence expenditure in the Falklands and (b) development expenditure in the Falklands.

Mr. Eggar: Total expenditure in these areas in the Falklands from April 1982 up to the end of financial year 1985-86 is estimated as follows

(a) Defence expenditure: £2,603 million. This includes the cost of recovering the Islands following the Argentine invasion, of residual campaign costs since, and of the airport and associated works at Mount Pleasant.

(b) Development expenditure: £31·8 million . This covers rehabilitation grant and development aid expenditure, and part of the cost of the new hospital.

Diplomats (Parking Fines)

Mr. Wheeler asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether he will publish up-to-date figures held by his Department as to unpaid parking fines incurred by diplomatic missions.

Mr. Eggar: The improvement to which I referred in my answer of 15 November to my hon. Friend has continued. The figures below for the final quarter 1985 indicate that the annual rate of fixed penalty notices cancelled on grounds of diplomatic immunity was by then running at only 34 per cent. of that for 1984. We welcome the co-operation of the diplomatic corps in bringing about this significant fall and are determined to see a further improvement.

Turkey—EEC (Relations)

Mr. Jim Spicer asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on present relations between Turkey and the EEC.

Mr. Renton: Relations between Turkey and the European Community are improving in recognition of Turkey's progress in restoring democracy. The welcome visit to London this week by the Turkish Prime Minister was an indication of this. At the Foreign Affairs Council on 17 February there was general agreement that work should go ahead on a number of outstanding issues, including the unblocking of EC aid money already committed to Turkey, with the aim of holding a Ministerial meeting of the EC-Turkey Association Council as soon as possible.

DEFENCE

Trident

Mrs. Clwyd asked the Secretary of State for Defence (1) what proportion of the estimated level of spending on the Trident programme is currently projected to take place in 1985-86, 1986-87 and 1987-88, respectively;

(2) what proportion of total spending on the Trident project is currently projected to have been incurred up to and including (a) the financial year 1989-90 and (b) the financial year 1994-95, respectively;

(3) what proportion of total spending on the Trident project has been incurred up to, and including, the financial year 1984-85.

Mr. Norman Lamont: I have nothing to add to the answer given by my predecessor, the right hon. Member for Bosworth (Sir A. Butler) to the hon. Member for Yeovil (Mr. Ashdown) on 21 June 1985 at column 247. It is not the practice to give cost profiles for projects on a year by year basis.

Mrs. Clwyd asked the Secretary of State for Defence how much was spent on the Trident programme in each financial year up to 1984-85.

Mr. Norman Lamont: I refer to the answer which my predecessor, the right hon. Member for Bosworth (Sir A. Butler) gave to the hon. Member for Yeovil (Mr. Ashdown) on 21 June 1985 at column 247. As indicated in that answer, there is a minor adjustment to the figures in the table for financial year 1984-85, which should read £163 million.

Comprehensive Test Ban Treaty

Mr. D. E. Thomas asked the Secretary of State for Defence why, pursuant to the reply to the hon. Member for Yeovil (Mr. Ashdown) of 6 December, Official Report, column 387, he considers it not to be in the public interest to reveal details of the manpower effort engaged on research into verification of a comprehensive test ban treaty.

Mr. Norman Lamont: It would not be in the national security interest to reveal full details of research into verification of a CTB, including the manpower effort involved, for the reasons set out by my predecessor, the right hon. Member for Bosworth (Sir A. Butler) in answer to a question on 4 April 1985 at column 703. However, I am able to inform the hon. Member that 29 staff are engaged currently on unclassified seismological research at the establishments at Blacknest and Eskdalemuir, including permanent civil servants and contract and visiting academic staff.

Blacknest Seismological Centre

Mr. D. E. Thomas asked the Secretary of State for Defence what proportion of the work done at the Blacknest Seismological Centre in Berkshire has been published in unrestricted form in scientific journals.

Mr. Norman Lamont: There is no restriction on the publication of the work of Blacknest, which is extensively published in scientific journals. The majority appears in the Geophysical Journal of the Royal Astronomical Society, in other learned journals, and in reports available from HMSO. Some is also published as working papers to the conference on disarmament in Geneva.

RIMPAC Naval Exercise

Mr. Caborn asked the Secretary of State for Defence whether Britain will be joining the North Atlantic Treaty Organisation force in the RIMPAC exercise in the central Pacific; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Stanley: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave to the hon. Member for Carrick, Cumnock and Doon Valley (Mr. Foulkes) on 4 February at column 122.

Mr. Foulkes asked the Secretary of State for Defence which surface vessels will remain deployed in the north Atlantic during the RIMPAC exercise.

Mr. Stanley: It is not our practice to detail the planned operational deployment of HM ships.

Mr. Foulkes asked the Secretary of State for Defence how the RIMPAC exercise relates to the strategic issues of United Kingdom defence policy.

Mr. Stanley: Effective collective defence is one of the cornerstones of our defence policy. The Royal Navy therefore takes as many opportunities as it can to exercise with the navies of allied and friendly powers.

Mr. Foulkes asked the Secretary of State for Defence what effect the deployment of the Royal Navy vessels for the RIMPAC exercise and to defend the Falkland Islands have on the United Kingdom's naval commitment to NATO.

Mr. Stanley: The vessels concerned remain assigned to NATO and could be recalled to the NATO area at any time.

Mr. Foulkes asked the Secretary of State for Defence what queries and representations he has received regarding the RIMPAC naval exercise; and which of these have been referred to the United States authorities.

Mr. Stanley: I am not aware of any representations. Certain hon. Members have tabled parliamentary questions about this exercise and there have been a few press inquiries. When our armed forces are to participate in an exercise sponsored by another country, it is our normal practice to liaise as necessary with that country's authorities when responding to queries about that exercise.

Republic of Ireland

Mr. Nicholas Winterton asked the Secretary of Defence what has been the annual cost over the last five years for which figures are available of providing Royal Air Force search and rescue helicopters and Nimrod tracking aircraft for searches in or over Republic of Ireland territorial waters or involving Republic of Ireland ships or aircraft.

Mr. Stanley: I regret that this information could not be provided except at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Nicholas Winterton asked the Secretary of State for Defence on how many occasions in the last five years the Republic of Ireland has allowed Royal Air Force or Royal Navy vessels or aircraft into its territorial waters or airspace, or to use port or airfield facilities; and if he will list the dates and circumstances of such occasions.

Mr. Stanley: Not all the information requested is available. Since 1982 diplomatic clearance has been sought and granted for 23 landings by RAF aircraft at airfields in the Republic of Ireland. This figure does not include requests made at short notice, for example, for emergency flights or search and rescue missions. Since 1982, clearance has been sought and granted on one occasion for a Royal Navy vessel to visit a port in the Republic of Ireland, when HMS Challenger landed wreckage recovered from the Air India Boeing 747 crash, at Cork in June 1985.

RAF aircraft make frequent flights through the airspace of the Republic of Ireland. In the 12 months to 31 January 1986, clearance was sought and granted for 446 overflights. This figure also does not include requests made at short notice.

Goalkeeper Close-in Weapon Systems

Sir Antony Buck asked the Secretary of State for Defence whether he will make an announcement on the procurement by the United Kingdom of further Goalkeeper close-in weapon systems for fitment to Royal Navy ships.

Mr. Norman Lamont: The Government have recently commenced negotiations with the Dutch company Hollandse Signaal Apparaaten towards the possible purchase of a further nine Goalkeeper close-in weapon systems plus associated equipment. The United Kingdom already has six systems on order.

This additional procurement would form the United Kingdom part of a second Anglo-Netherlands reciprocal purchase package agreement which is currently approaching finalisation. The Netherlands' element of the package comprises purchases from the United Kingdom of satellite communications equipment, submarine towed arrays and military simulation equipment. The agreement will be a most worthwhile extension of the first Anglo-Netherlands reciprocal arrangement concluded in April 1984, covering the United Kingdom's first purchase of Goalkeeper and the Netherlands' purchase of 16 Rolls-Royce Spey engines for their M class frigates.

Computers

Mr. Corbyn asked the Secretary of State for Defence what is the purpose of the database computer ordered from ICL by the Ministry of Defence (Central) in January 1984; where it will be installed; and when installation will be completed.

Mr. Norman Lamont: The computer was acquired for the directorate of central computer services to provide bureau facilities to certain Ministry of Defence headquarters staffs. The machine was installed in central London in February 1984, and accepted for service in March 1984.

Mr. Corbyn asked the Secretary of State for Defence what computers, other than minicomputers and microcomputers, have been ordered by the Ministry of Defence for administrative and general purposes since December 1983 stating the supplier, model and number of each processor ordered and the cost of each processor.

Mr. Norman Lamont: I shall answer shortly.

Strategic Defence Initiative

Mr. Dalyell asked the Secretary of State for Defence what stage negotiations have reached regarding strategic defence initiative contracts with the Science and Engineering Research Council in relation to work on particle beam accelerators at the Rutherford-Appleton laboratory and at Culham.

Mr. Norman Lamont: I am not aware of any proposal for work in the area mentioned to be placed with the Science and Engineering research council.

TRANSPORT

Asbestos

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Secretary of State for Transport what grants are available to local authorities which have tunnels and road constructions containing dangerous amounts of asbestos.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Funds are not made available specifically for the removal of asbestos from local authority tunnels and road constructions. Rate support grant is paid in support of authorities' revenue expenditure generally including expenditure on asbestos.

Air Services

Mr. Carter-Jones asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will indicate what success he had in negotiating changes in the Bermuda 2 Agreement; if he will publish in the Official Report a record of the discussions; and if he will make a statement about the effect of American anti-trust laws on British airlines.

Mr. Michael Spicer: My right hon. Friend visited Washington on 13 and 14 February 1986 to discuss these matters with the United States Secretary for Transportation, Mrs. Elizabeth Dole, and other senior members of the US Administration. These matters will be the subject of continuing negotiations. My right hon. Friend also expressed his views publicly in a speech to the International Aviation Club, of which copies are available in the Library of the House. As regards the effect of United States anti-trust laws on British airlines the Government's position is set out in the answer given by my right hon. and learned Friend the former Secretary of State for Trade and Industry on 11 December.

Channel Tunnel

Mr. Adley asked the Secretary of State for Transport when he next intends to meet the chairman of British Rail to discuss investment in rail projects related to the Channel tunnel, as proposed in the White Paper, Cmnd. 9735; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Mitchell: The Secretary of State and I meet the chairman of British Rail regularly to discuss matters of mutual interest, including the Channel fixed link. It will be for British Rail to come forward with proposals for investment in services related to the Channel fixed link in the usual way.

Mr. Spearing asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he has identified any possible advantages to British exporters occasioned by the completion of the Channel tunnel which will not also be available to British importers.

Mr. David Mitchell: Improvements in communications between the United Kingdom and the Continent necessarily benefit trade in both directions. The fixed link will improve the access of British exporters to the large European market, and offer them increased opportunities to benefit from the economies of scale that are already available to continental manufacturers.

Mr. Spearing asked the Secretary of State for Transport (1) what through Motorail services he expects to be operated by British Rail or the SNCF through the Channel tunnel; and if any agreement related to its operation would prohibit or limit such services;

(2) what consideration he has given to the operation of through daytime passenger trains from centres in the United Kingdom, other than London, to centres on the continent using the proposed Channel tunnel;

(3) what consideration he has given to the operation of through sleeping car services from London and other British cities to destinations on the continent via the proposed Channel tunnel.

Mr. David Mitchell: Undoubtedly the Channel tunnel will provide opportunities for new British Rail services to the Continent, but planning of these services is a matter for British Rail and the continental railway administrations. The terms on which the railway administrations use the Channel Fixed Link is a matter for agreement between them and CTG—France-Manche.

Mr. Spearing asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will tabulate the estimated current costs of the improvements and additions to rail and road links to the Channel tunnel terminal as indicated in Cmnd. No. 9735, and give the expected source of funding for each category concerned.

Mr. David Mitchell: British Rail estimates that it could need to spend up to around £180 million on railway infrastructure associated with rail services through the Channel fixed link. This will be a commercial operation and it will be for it to raise the money for this investment from its own resources or borrowing and not by way of Government grant. The estimated total cost of the national road improvements, to be funded through the roads vote in the usual way, is £135 million, all of which would have been incurred without a link in order to improve road links to the ferry ports. The cost of improving local road links to the ferry ports. The cost of improving local roads is a matter for Kent county council which will be submitting proposals for transport supplementary grant in due course.

Mr. Spearing asked the Secretary of State for Transport what estimate he has of the cost of modifying the Folkestone to London railway for passage of conventional railway trains of continental loading gauge; and what consideration he has given to such a modification.

Mr. David Mitchell: It is for British Rail to propose and make estimates of the costs of, railway investment. It has made no proposals to up-grade the routes from London to the coast to continental gauge.

Mr. Spearing asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will set out in the Official Report the details of the proposed limited improvements to rail facilities between Folkestone and London.

Mr. David Mitchell: BR's initial evaluation included proposals for total expenditure of up to about £35 million on track quality improvements, connections, signalling, clearances and freight loops on the lines between London and the coast.

Mr. Spearing asked the Secretary of State for Transport (1) what is the number, and approximate location, of full rail crossover facilities which he expects to be built within the Channel tunnel;

(2) what is the maximum number of trains of all types that he expects to be permitted to occupy each of the two bores of the Channel tunnel at any one time.

Mr. David Mitchell: As we explained in the Channel fixed link White Paper (Cmnd. 9735, paragraph 52), a safety authority is being established by the British and French Governments to consider safety aspects of the promoters' plans. The two issues which the hon. Member has raised, along with many others, will be covered by those considerations.

Mr. Spearing asked the Secretary of State for Transport what estimate he has of the time taken by (a) motor cars and (b) heavy lorries on a journey from London to Paris using (i) the proposed Channel tunnel ferry facility and (ii) hovercraft and ferry, respectively.

Mr. David Mitchell: The Channel Tunnel Group-France-Manche estimated in its proposal that, for vehicles using shuttle trains, the transit time through the link itself, including loading, unloading, frontier formalities and average waiting time, will be some 70 minutes as opposed to an average of some 135 minutes for vehicles using hovercraft and ferries on the French straits routes. It is not possible to make precise estimates of London-Paris times by road.

Mr. Spearing asked the Secretary of State for Transport what estimate he has of the reduction in cost for (a) freight and (b) passengers of crossing the Channel by tunnel rather than by sea ferry.

Mr. David Mitchell: It will be for the concessionaires to decide on tariff levels for the link, subject to domestic and Community competition law, in the light of the competitive situation prevailing at the time of opening of the link. Channel Tunnel Group-France-Manche envisages that its tariffs will be around 10 per cent. less, in real terms, than today's level of ferry fares, and it has said its policy will be to match the tariffs offered by their major competitors.

Mr. Spearing asked the Secretary of State for Transport what body or person will determine the proportion of available capacity of the proposed Channel tunnel which will be available (a) to ferry trains operated by the Channel Tunnel Group and (b) through trains operated by British and French railways.

Mr. David Mitchell: This is a matter for agreement by the railway administrations and CTG—France-Manche.

Mr. Spearing asked the Secretary of State for Transport what body or person will determine the differences or equivalence between the tariffs and tolls on the Channel tunnel between traffic conveyed by Channel ferry wagons and through rail services, respectively.

Mr. David Mitchell: I refer the hon. Member to paragraph 4 of the White Paper on the Channel fixed link (Cmnd. 9735). Channel Tunnel Group—France-Manche will enjoy full commercial freedom to determine its commercial policy, including the setting of tariffs for users of the link, subject to domestic and Community competition law. For through trains it will be for British Rail to decide on fare levels in the light of contractual arrangements entered into with CTG—FM for the use of the tunnel.

Mr. Spearing asked the Secretary of State for Transport what is the expected proportion of capital to be raised by the Channel Tunnel Group and its partners from British, French, and other sources, respectively; and what equivalent representation he expects on the board of the operating company.

Mr. David Mitchell: Although the invitation to promoters reserved the right of the Governments to be kept informed of the identity of those who acquired an interest in shares in companies holding the concession, the source of the capital is a commercial matter for the concessionaires. The two Governments have yet to decide whether there should be any requirements as regards the composition of the board of the operating company.

Mr. Spearing asked the Secretary of State for Transport if any provision is planned to determine any maximum or minimum proportions of nationality of persons directly employed on the construction of the proposed Channel tunnel or its associate works.

Mr. David Mitchell: No such provision is planned.

Regulatory Bodies

Mr. Robert Hughes asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list all the regulatory bodies in the transport field that his Department is responsible for funding, giving the annual funding at the latest available date, in each case, and the numbers of staff employed.

Mr. Ridley: My Department does not fund any regulatory bodies in the transport field although it pays the salaries of the eight chairmen of traffic commissioners. The current annual cost is about £220,000. The staff of the traffic commissioners are civil servants employed by my Department.

Departmental Staff

Mr. Robert Hughes asked the Secretary of State for Transport, pursuant to his answer of 11 February, Official Report, column 424, about his Department's staff, if he will place in the Library a chart showing the lines of management, running from himself to each of the directorates listed in the previous answer.

Mr. Ridley: Yes. I will do so shortly.

Mr. Robert Hughes asked the Secretary of State for Transport, pursuant to his answer of 11 February, Official Report, column 424, about his Department's staff, if he will list the functions of the 465 central administration staff.

Mr. Ridley: The information is:

Function	Staff in post at 1 January 1986
Information and publicity	33
Civil home defence planning	30·5
Science and research policy	16
Statistics	111·5
Economics	26
Finance	134·5
Support staff for Treasury Solicitors	5
Ministers' and other staff offices	53
Others, including staff on maternity and long term sick leave	55·5
	465

Mr. Robert Hughes asked the Secretary of State for Transport, pursuant to his answer of 11 February, Official Report, column 424, about his Department's staff, if he will list the geographical location of all staff, distinguishing between directorates in each case.

Mr. Ridley: I shall write to the hon. Gentleman as soon as I can.

British Airways Helicopters

Mr. Bruce asked the Secretary of State for Transport (1) if he will make it his policy to ensure that employees of British Airways Helicopters are given an opportunity to buy out the company; and if he will make a statement;

(2) if he will take steps to ensure that the proposed sale of British Airways Helicopters does not proceed before consultations with the work force have taken place;

(3) if he will make a statement about the future of British Airways Helicopters;

(4) what representations he has received about the proposed sale by British Airways of British Airways Helicopters; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Spicer: The board of British Airways has taken the view that it is in its commercial interest to dispose of British Airways Helicopters as that business is not in the mainstream of its activities. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Transport has agreed to this in principle. The British Airways Board is bound to inform him when it has a fully formulated proposal for the sale of the company; but at this stage negotiations are entirely a matter for the board. I understand from British Airways that negotiations are continuing but that no agreement has been reached. I also understand that consultations with the unions are in progress and that outline details of a possible proposal have been explained to employees. The unions therefore have the opportunity to make known any interest employees may have in taking a stake in the company.

A number of hon. Members have inquired about the proposed disposal of British Airways Helicopters, but no other representations have been received.

Shrewsbury Bypass

Mr. Conway asked the Secretary of State for Transport what is the anticipated start date for the Shrewsbury A5 bypass.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The made line order for the A5 Shrewsbury bypass is subject to legal challenge so I am unable to give an anticipated start date.

Maritime Services

Mr. Wallace asked the Secretary of State for Transport whether he is satisfied with the present arrangements for running Trinity House and the Northern Lighthouse Board.

Mr. Ridley [pursuant to his reply, 20 February 1986]: The Twenty-Ninth Report from the Committee of Public Accounts 1981-82 said

"we find it anomalous that the Department has general responsibility for the General Lighthouse Fund but no power to appoint the Lighthouse Authorities and to regulate management of the lighthouse services themselves."

I share that view and so I welcomed the proposal from Trinity House 18 months ago that I should nominate four members of its Lighthouse Board. This has proved a most successful innovation. The constitution of the NLB raises different considerations since it is determined by statute.

SOCIAL SERVICES

NHS Staff (Overtime)

Mr. Fallon asked the Secretary of State for Social Services whether he will estimate the amount and cost of overtime worked by health service employees in the last financial year.

Mr. Hayhoe: Payments to health authority staff in respect of overtime are estimated to have totalled some £127 million in 1984-85. This estimate excludes medical and dental staff, for whom comparable figures are not available. The estimate is derived from health authorities' summarised accounts, and is net of employers' national insurance and superannuation contributions.

I regret that details of overtime measured in terms of hours worked are not held centrally.

Social Security Reform

Mr. Deakins asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what criteria are to be used in determining the social fund budget for each local Department of Health and Social Security office.

Mr. Newton: Decisions about the size of the fund itself and the allocation to local offices will be taken nearer the date of introduction.

Mr. Meacher asked the Secretary of State for Social Services whether he will publish tables comparable to tables P1 to P6 in the technical annex to "Reform of Social Security," Cmnd. 9691, showing pension projections on the assumption that the contracted-out rebate is not boosted by the 2 per cent, incentive addition for the first five years.

Mr. Newton [pursuant to his reply, 17 February 1986 c. 69-70] : The information requested is given in the tables. Tables P1A to P6A correspond to tables P1 to P6 respectively in the Technical Annex to the White Paper.

Hospital Waiting List

Mr. Fry asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will publish the latest statistics showing the number of urgent cases awaiting treatment, subdivided in the various categories, at Kettering general hospital; and how this compares with the average (a) for the Oxford region and (b) nationally.

Mr. Whitney: The information requested is given in the table:

Number of cases on in-patient waiting list for admission to NHS hospitals at 30 September 1985 (provisional)

Specialty	Kettering General Hospital		Oxford Regional Health Authority		England total

Smoking

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many television advertisements he intends to make, and over what period of time they will be spread, within the framework of the £1 million sum which he intends to spend on campaigns to discourage teenagers from smoking; what format is envisaged; what account he has taken of the outcome of the programme of advertisements aimed at discouraging youngsters from drug addiction in deciding the format; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Whitney: The pilot campaign began in the Tyne Tees and TV South regions on 4 December. Two film advertisements are being shown on television and in cinemas over a period of about 12 months. Of the £1 million allocated to the pilot, about £600,000 is being spent on the purchase of television airtime and cinema screen time. In planning and mounting this campaign consideration was given to the Department's advertising campaign against heroin misuse.

Denture Specialists

Mr. Favell asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what proposals he has received for bringing denture specialists into direct contact with the public; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hayhoe: Under current legislation only dentists or doctors may fit dentures. Last year however the Association for Dental Prosthesis asked the Office of Fair Trading to enquire into the arrangements for the supply of dentures to the public. After conducting a survey, the Director of Fair Trading reported that there was little evidence of National Health Service dentists making monopoly profits from providing dentures because my Department controls the prices so closely, and that it was unlikely that dental technicians could provide NHS dentures more cheaply. In these circumstances I have no plans to change the present law.

In Vitro Fertilisation

Mr. Hargreaves asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what is the average cost of in vitro fertilisation treatment per person.

Mr. Hayhoe: I regret that this information is not available centrally.

Nurses (Residential Accommodation)

Mr. Pavitt asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will place in the Library copies of the plans regions have submitted for the disposal of nurses' residential accommodation.

Mr. Hayhoe: I will provide a summary of regions' plans when these have been approved by the Department.

Mr. Pavitt asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he is yet in a position to make a statement on the findings of the Schanshieff committee of inquiry into unnecessary dental treatment.

Mr. Hayhoe: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to my hon. Friend to Member for Stevenage (Mr. Wood) on 20 February.

Benefit Payments

Mr. David Marshall asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many people in Scotland without full contribution records have received reduced national insurance benefit payments for each of the last five years; and what was the average payment for each year.

Mr. Major: The information is not readily available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Food Additives

Dr. Glyn asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what research is being done by his Department on food additives, including flavouring and colouring; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Whitney: The Department is not funding any research on food additives. The approval of food additives is based on the advice to Government provided by independent expert committees who, when considering the safety of any particular additive, take into account all the available scientific data. Should these committees require additional information the prospective manufacturer will be asked to privide it.

In addition, central Government funds through the Ministry of Agiculture, Fisheries and Food, research into the more general aspects of food additive safety. One project that is currently being funded in this way is investigating the incidence of intolerance reactions and the biological mechanisms that may promote such reactions.

Portable Pensions

Mrs. Currie asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what measures he is taking in his plans for portable pensions to ensure that compensation is provided for members of personal pension schemes in the event of negligence, fraud or theft.

Mr. Fowler: I have asked the Occupational Pensions Board for their advice on this question. The terms of the remit are:

"To consider and advise on the requirements to be met by personal pensions and money-purchase occupational pension schemes for providing compensation in the event of fraud, theft or negligence, in the light of the Government's decision that, in principle, everybody with a personal pension should be at least as well protected as someone with an insurance policy covered by the Policyholders Protection Act, and in the light of the desirability that such requirements should be kept as simple and flexible as possible".

Income Support

Mr. Meacher asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if, pursuant to his reply on 17 January, Official Report, column 746, he will publish a similar table showing the rate of income support for a single person, assuming annual increases in the income support rate in line with average earnings and annual increases of earnings of 1½ per cent, in real terms (a) including the premium for a person aged over 80 years and disabled and (b) excluding that premium.

Mr. Newton: [pursuant to his reply, 7 February, c. 287]: The information requested is given in the table. It shows levels of income support for a single pensioner (a) on reaching his or her 80th birthday and (b) on reaching pensionable age, if the illustrative income support rates shown in the technical annex to the White Paper were increased annually by 1½ per cent. in real terms from November 1985. If income support rates continued to rise in line with prices, the single pensioner rates in all cases would be £40·60 at ages up to 79 and £42·85 for those aged 80 and over.

Maternity Units (Closure)

Mr. Kirkwood asked the Secretary of State for social Services if he will list in the Official Report all maternity units for which his approval for closure has been sought, and the dates when he expects to make his decision.

Mr. Whitney [pursuant to his reply, 13 February 1986 c. 523]: I regret that there was an omission of words from my answer. Yorkshire regional health authority proposes the complete closure of the maternity unit at Wharfedale hospital, not the whole hospital as stated in my reply; and transfer of services to Leeds infirmary.

Young People (Drinking Patterns)

Sir Bernard Braine asked the Secretary of State for Social Services when he will publish the findings of the Office of Population Censuses and Surveys study on the drinking patterns of young people, the field work for which was carried out in 1984; and what is the reason for the delay in making the findings known.

Mr. Whitney [pursuant to his reply, 17 February 1986, c. 66]: The main part of the fieldwork for this study was carried out in October and November 1984. The data obtained were analysed during 1985 and a report is in preparation with a view to publication by the end of the year.

Mentally Ill People

Mr. Bermingham asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will provide statistics for each of the local authority social service departments in England and Wales which indicate (a) the percentage of their budget spent on services for mentally ill people, (b) the number of day centre places they provide for mentally ill people, and (c) the number of approved social workers at present designated as such; how many are envisaged; and if he will make a statement on the present position regarding approved social work.

Mr. Whitney [pursuant to his reply, 17 February 1986, column 70]: Budgetary information is not available in the form requested, but an indication of spending by most authorities on some services for mentally ill people is contained in the annual publication "Personal Social Services Statistics" produced by the Chartered Institute of Public Finance and Accountancy. A copy is in the Library.

Information is not held centrally on the numbers of approved social workers appointed by local authorities.

The number to be appointed is for individual authorities to decide. The Department is currently discussing with other interested parties the arrangements for training and appointing approved social workers.

The table sets out the available information for England at 31 March 1985 on day centre places provided by authorities in their own centres for mentally ill people and through voluntary and other organisations. No details are available on the number of mentally ill people using places in local authority day centres catering for a mixed clientele, but on a proportionate basis we estimate about 2,400 further places are used in this way. Data for Wales are a matter for my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales.

WALES

Paediatric Services

Mr. Gareth Wardell asked the Secretary of State for Wales if he will publish in the Official Report for each health authority in Wales the number of (a) paediatric cardiologists and (b) paediatric cardiac surgeons employed.

Mr. Mark Robinson: It is not possible, from the information available centrally, to indentify paediatric cardiologists and paediatric cardiac surgeons within the overall totals for cardiologists and cardiac surgeons, respectively. The latest information relating to the numbers of consultants in these specialties is given in the table:

Perinatal Mortality

Mr. Gareth Wardell asked the Secretary of State for Wales if he will publish in the Official Report the number of representatives from west Wales on the perinatal mortality initiative committee.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: Among the 13 members of the perinatal mortality survey group appointed by my right hon. Friend are two from west Glamorgan; Dr. J. Thomas, specialist in community medicine and Miss J. Sinnott, former director of community nursing services. Members of the survey group have been appointed because of their particular expertise in the fields of maternal and neonatal care and do not represent any geographical area.

Paediatricians and Obstetricians

Mr. Gareth Wardell asked the Secretary of State for Wales if he will publish in the Official Report for each health authority in Wales (a) the number of paediatricians and (b) the number of obstetricians employed.

Mr. Mark Robinson: The latest available information relating to consultants is given in the table below:—

ENERGY

Oil Extraction

Mr. Wigley asked the Secretary of State for Energy what is the estimated value of the total oil that has been extracted from oil wells in the United Kingdom or United Kingdom territorial waters for each year since production commenced.

Mr. Buchanan-Smith: The value of crude oil produced on the United Kingdom continental shelf since 1975, at the average prices then ruling, is shown in the following table. Only very small quantities of oil were produced in the United Kingdom before that date. The figures represent the gross value of sales of oil and take no account of production costs.

Coal Boiler Conversion Scheme

Mr. Dormand asked the Secretary of State for Energy how much grant aid has been given to how many projects under the coal boiler conversion scheme for 1985.

Mr. David Hunt: In 1985, grant aid totalling £6·6 million in respect of 132 projects was offered under the coal firing scheme, and 16 offers of grant were rejected. In 1984, grant aid totalling £18·5 million in respect of 129 projects was offered and 53 offers were rejected.

Miners (Free Coal)

Mr. Phillip Oppenheim asked the Secretary of State for Energy how many representations he has received about the miners who were made redundant in the 1960s and who receive no free coal.

Mr. David Hunt: Under the concessionary coal payments scheme, the Government reimburse to the National Coal Board certain costs involved in the provision of concessionary coal to redundants. Since the introduction of the scheme in 1973, occasional representations have been made to successive Secretaries of State for Energy regarding retrospective application of the scheme to those made redundant in the 1960s. The Government have always made clear their view that this could not be justified.

Mr. Phillip Oppenheim asked the Secretary of State for Energy what is the estimated value of the free coal allowance given to miners aged over 50 years who have been made redundant after 10 years in the industry.

Mr. David Hunt: The average annual value of coal allowance given to miners taking redundancy at age 50 or over at November 1985 prices is about £380 per person.

Nuclear Power

Mr. Wallace asked the Secretary of State for Energy if he will place in the Library the intergovernmental memorandum of understanding signed on 10 January 1984 on behalf of the British, French, Federal German, Belgian and Italian Governments on a collaborative programme for fast breeder research, development and design, together with the text of agreement subsequently entered into by the electricity supply organisation, the national nuclear organisations and fuel cycle companies of the participating countries, in pursuance of the memorandum.

Mr. Goodlad: A copy of the intergovernmental memorandum of understanding was placed in the Library at the time of my right hon. Friend's answer to my hon. Friend the Member for Banbury (Mr. Baldry) on 16 January 1984 at columns 47-48. Release of the texts of agreements subsequently entered into by the various organisations concerned is a matter for those organisations.

Mr. Teddy Taylor asked the Secretary of State for Energy if the European Commission may require action by the United Kingdom in relation to the operation and maintenance of nuclear power installations under the Euratom agreement following the completion of enquiries at the request of the European Assembly; and if he will make a statement on the position following the decision of the Assembly on 20 February to require an inquiry into Sellafield.

Mr. Goodlad: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given by the Prime Minister today to a closely related question. Only if it were shown that measures were needed to prevent infringement of the basic standards of radiological protection and that there were a case of urgency would the Commission have powers under article 38 of the Euratom treaty to require a member state to take measures to comply with the standards and regulations. There is no case for the Commission to take such steps in relation to Sellafield.

Renewable Energy

Mr. Ron Davies asked the Secretary of State for Energy if he will make a statement on the implications for policy on renewable energy sources of the report from the Institute of Terrestrial Ecology assessing native and naturalised species of plants as such sources.

Mr. David Hunt: I have nothing to add to my reply of 24 January 1986 at columns 351-352.

Radiation

Mr. Teddy Taylor asked the Secretary of State for Energy what assessment he has made of the comparison of radiation emerging from nuclear and coal-fired power stations, respectively, into the atmosphere; and what assessment he has made of the danger presented to the general public by each of those sources of radiation.

Mr. Goodlad: I refer to the reply given by my right hon. Friend to my hon. Friend the Member for Honiton (Sir P. Emery) on 20 February 1980.

NCB (Enterprise) Ltd.

Mr. Trotter asked the Secretary of State for Energy (1) if, when he next meets the chairman of the National Coal Board, he will raise with him, in the light of the board's decision to close Bates colliery, the possibility of the board establishing in Blyth a local office of NCB (Enterprise) Ltd.; and if he will make a statement;

(2) which areas of the National Coal Board do not yet have a director appointed full time for NCB (Enterprise) Ltd.; and when these vacancies are to be filled.

Mr. David Hunt: These are matters for the National Coal Board and I am asking the chairman to write to my hon. Friend.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Kagan Textiles Ltd.

40. Mr. Chope asked the Attorney-General what are the terms of the agreement between Kagan Textiles Ltd. and the Treasury regarding payment of the fine imposed in 1980 on Cellofoam (Yorkshire) Ltd.; and if he will make a statement.

The Attorney-General: I shall circulate in the Official Report a fuller account of the circumstances of the agreement. In essence, Kagan Textiles Ltd. undertook to provide Cellofoam (Yorkshire) Ltd. with funds to pay the fine of £375,000 over an eight-year period in return for an undertaking from the Treasury not to pursue a petition to wind up Cellofoam (Yorkshire) Ltd.

Below is the fuller account—

In December 1980 Cellofoam (Yorkshire) Ltd.,, a company controlled by Lord Kagan, was fined £375,000 for various offences. The company had no resources to pay any of the fine. The Treasury Solicitor took the necessary preliminary steps towards petitioning to wind up Cellofoam. This led to an agreement whereby, in return for HM Treasury not petitioning, Kagan Textiles Ltd., which is a substantial trading company, undertook to provide Cellofoam with funds out of its future profits to enable Cellofoam to pay the fine by instalments as follows:—

1. £2,000 within 30 days of 3 October 1985.
2. £5,000 during 1986 and the same during 1987.
3. £25,000 during 1988 and the same during 1989.
4. £100,000 in each year from 1990 to 1992 inclusive.
5. The balance during 1993.

This agreement was the best that could be reached, particularly having regard to the resources and present liabilities of Kagan Textiles Ltd., and gives a reasonable prospect that the fine will eventually be paid. The only alternative would have been to proceed with the winding-up petition of Cellofoam but this would have produced nothing for the public purse and would have caused the Crown additional expense.

The first instalment of £2,000 has been paid.

Legal Aid

41. Mr. John Morris asked the Attorney-General how much it is proposed to save from the recently announced changes in the qualifying limits for legal aid.

The Solicitor-General: Around £7.5 million in a full year.

42. Mr. Nicholas Brown asked the Attorney-General if he will make a statement on the matters raised in the legal aid annual reports published on 23 January.

The Solicitor-General: The 35th annual reports of the Law Society and the Lord Chancellor's Advisory Committee were published on 23 January. The Lord Chancellor will wish to consider carefully the matters raised therein.

PRIME MINISTER

Government Achievements

Mr. Grylls asked the Prime Minister, is she will list the achievements of Her Majesty's Government since May 1983.

The Prime Minister: Since the 1983 election, the inflation rate has remained low at around 5 per cent. Gross domestic product has continued to grow steadily, with the United Kingdom now in its fifth successive year of growth, and GDP at an all-time high. In 1985, output in the United Kingdom is expected to have grown faster than all other EC countries and the United States. Investment reached a record level in 1984 and is expected to have risen by a further 4 per cent. in 1985. The balance of payments current account has continued in surplus since 1983 and has now been in surplus for six successive years. Manufacturing productivity has risen at an annual rate of 6 per cent. — higher than France or Germany — and company profitability is at its highest for two decades. Employment is rising, with around 600,000 more people in work since June 1983.

The Government have continued to maintain sound public finances. Public expenditure has been falling as a percentage of GDP since 1982-83 and is planned to fall further over the next three years. The public sector borrowing requirement in 1985-86 is forecast to account for the smallest proportion of GDP for 14 years.

The Government have pursued a substantial programme of tax reform. Business taxation has been radically restructured: by April 1986, the United Kingdom will have the lowest rate of corporation tax of any industrialised country. For income tax payers, thresholds have been raised in real terms. Further proposals for reform will be set out in the forthcoming Green Paper on personal taxation. Three taxes—the national insurance surcharge, development land tax and the investment income surcharge—have been abolished completely.

The large programme of privatisation has continued. There have been nine successful share sales since June 1983. The privatisation of British Telecom in 1984 was the world's largest ever flotation and led to a massive increase in the number of people holding shares. Several other smaller public enterprises have also been transferred to the private sector. Preparations are continuing for the sale of British Airways, the royal ordnance factories, the National Bus Company and Rolls Royce, Legislation to transfer the British Gas Corporation and the British Airports Authority to the private sector is now before Parliament and a White Paper has been published with proposals for privatisation of the water authorities in England and Wales.

Further measures have been introduced to improve the operation of markets. Incentives have been increased by the tax changes and by the restructuring of national insurance contributions announced in the 1985 Budget. Changes in employment legislation and measures to encourage labour mobility have improved the operation of the labour market. Regulations applying to a wide field of industry and finance have been removed entirely; the small firms sector has been helped by special schemes and greater sums have been spent on training. The Government have also sought to introduce more competition in the professions.

The Government have launched a more cost-effective and job-related regional industrial policy; have backed the Alvey programme for research into advanced information technology; have set up a National Space Centre and have allocated substantial funds for the promotion of new technology.

Productivity per person in agriculture has continued to improve and has helped this sector to provide food to consumers at prices which have risen more slowly than the general price level. The volume of agricultural food and drink exports has shown a further rise of 6 per cent. in the first 18 months after the end of 1983.

Progress in tackling costly surpluses under the common agricultural policy has been made with measures in the European Community designed to control CAP spending and, specifically in the milk and wine sectors, to curb over-production. Agreements have been reached to reduce CAP support prices in real terms. In fisheries we have resolved most of our outstanding problems with Norway. Improvements have been made in the conservation of stocks and the fishing of herring in the North sea has been resumed.

The Government have developed new policies designed to achieve a better integration of environmental and agricultural objectives by encouraging farmers to maintain and enhance the landscape and nature conservation interest in their farms. Improvements in the welfare standards of livestock husbandry have been promoted, notably through the contribution of the Farm Animal Welfare Council. The Government have maintained the United Kingdom's good record of freedom from major animal disease and this remains an important priority. We have recently issued for consultation proposals to implement the COMA report, which will improve further the labelling of food for consumers.

In transport, London Transport has been transferred from the GLC to London Regional Transport, and targets set for better value for money. The revenue subsidy has been reduced by about 40 per cent. already, with no significant real increase in fares or reduction in services. Similarly, British Rail has been given targets for the reduction of subsidy and the improvement of customer service, and major new investments approved.

New initiatives have been announced to control drug misuse, and the Government supported the Video Recording Act to control video nasties. Legislation has been put through for data protection; to provide for the fourth television channel and for the Welsh fourth channel to provide a framework for the development of direct broadcasting by satellite and cable television; to set out a new framework for police powers and for handling complaints against the police, in the Police and Criminal Evidence Act; and to enhance both the powers available to deal with terrorism and the safeguards for the citizen under the Prevention of Terrorism Act, and to control the possession and sale of alcohol in connection with football matches. An independent Crown prosecution service for England and Wales is being established this year. Measures have been taken to ensure that the terms of imprisonment served by violent offenders fully reflect society's abhorrence of their crimes.

In education, the Government have launched a major initiative to raise standards in schools including the publication of broad curricular objectives for the five-to-16 age group, the reform of the 16-plus examination system, and the decision to introduce records of achievement for school leavers of all abilities. The technical and vocational education initiative has been introduced to boost practical elements in the 14-to-18 curriculum. The Council for the Accreditation of Teacher Education has been established to evaluate teacher training courses and a discussion paper on school teacher numbers and deployment in the longer term has been published. In higher education, record numbers of students have been admitted, and the Government endorsed plans which provide for a continuation of the significant shift towards science and engineering and other subjects in the public sector of higher education.

The Government have continued to be active in strengthening safeguards against fraud and in ensuring that the probity of our financial institutions is maintained without undermining their competitiveness. The Insolvency Act 1985 increased the scope for disqualifying directors of companies which have gone into liquidation or receivership, and introduced a new liability of directors for wrongful trading. The Financial Services Bill broadens the general regulatory framework within which people in financil institutions have to operate. The recommendations of the Roskill committee on the investigation, prosecution and trial of fraud cases are now before us, and we are moving towards early legislation based on them.

In the social security field, the Government have maintained the protection of social security benefits against inflation. The retirement pension is at a record real level. Legislation currently before the House builds on the Social Security Act 1985, which gave new pension rights to early leavers from pension schemes. We are providing for a major extension in occupational pensions provision and for the first time we are giving everybody a right to a personal pension of their own. In addition, the Government have completed a fundamental and far-reaching review of other social security provisions.

In the Health Service, we have continued to develop services for patients and waiting lists have fallen. NHS spending has been maintained at record levels, and the drive for better management continues with the appointment of general managers throughout the Health Service.

Over 1 million young people have entered the youth training scheme since it was launched in 1983. We are helping to train 200,000 adults this year and 250,000 next year. The community programme and enterprise allowance scheme have been expanded.

The Trade Union Act has been extending the rights of members of trades unions to influence the affairs of their unions.

In energy, Government policies on taxation and licensing have made 1984 a record year for oil and gas exploration and development in the North sea with 1985 a record year for approval of new developments. The North sea contribution to United Kingdom employment has been further expanded in both years. In 1985, flaring was also at a record low figure. With Government support, the electricity and coal industries enabled the electricity system to withstand a year-long coal strike without power cuts and with only limited damage to the rest of British industry.

In local government, the Rates Act is protecting ratepayers from huge increases in rates in the highest spending councils. Under the Local Government Act 1985, the GLC and the metropolitan county councils will be abolished on 1 April 1986. Proposals for reform of local government finance and taxation, including the abolition of domestic rates, have recently been set out in the Green Paper "Paying for Local Government". A committee has been established to inquire into the conduct of local authority business; and legislation has been introduced to regulate local authority publicity activities. A consultation document on increasing competitive tendering in local government has been published.

On housing, the right to buy their homes has been extended to more council tenants, discount terms have been improved for many, assistance has been provided to the owners of defective houses previously in the public sector, and an urban housing renewl unit has been set up to help local authorities to tackle the problems of their rundown estates. We are consulting on proposals to increase competitive tendering by councils.

In the environment, we have taken the initiative in Europe in bringing to an end the addition of lead to petrol and paint, and we are steadily removing it from those water supplies where it is still a problem. We have taken steps to reduce the pollution of our rivers, estuaries and beaches.

The derelict land programme has been maintained. The land register system has continued to bring about the sale and development of unused publicly owned land. A series of national garden festivals has been announced. The urban development corporations have made further progress in London docklands and Merseyside. Further enterprise zones have been designated.

In defence, the capability of our armed forces has continued to be strengthened. The Government have played their full part in implementing NATO's 1979 decision to modernise intermediate range nuclear weapons. Increased efficiency is being pursued by the continuing transfer of resources from the support areas to the frontline, and by introducing increased competition in defence contracts and promoting collaboration without international partners. A major reorganisation of the headquarters structure of the Ministry of Defence has been introduced.

The Government concluded in 1985 the Anglo-Irish Agreement, which seeks to develop further our unique relationship with the Republic of Ireland; to enhance co-operation, including over security matters, between the two countries; and also to assist in achieving lasting peace and stability within Northern Ireland. Following the approval of the agreement by the British and Irish Parliaments, the Anglo-Irish Intergovernmental Conference was established and is now pursuing its work in fields assigned to it under the agreement.

In foreign policy, the Government have maintained Britain's strong commitment to the NATO Alliance and played a leading role in the revival of the Western European Union. British Ministers and representatives have been active in building up an East-West dialogue with high-level visits in both directions and in promoting the arms control process, notably in the negotiations on chemical weapons, on non-proliferation of nuclear weapons and on conventional disarmament and force reductions in Europe. Within the European Community, the Government achieved a refund for 1983 of £430 million and a VAT abatement for 1984 of £600 million; negotiated a lasting settlement on budgetary imbalances, under which our future net contribution will be about half of what it might otherwise have been; and played a prominent part in the successful conclusion of the third Lomé convention and the enlargement negotiations. The Government have also been instrumental in bringing about an agreement on amendments to the EC treaties which should improve Community decision-taking while safeguarding essential United Kingdom interests. The Sino-British Joint Declaration on the future of Hong Kong was ratified in May last year. Over Gibraltar an agreement was reached with Spain in February 1985, and the border is now open.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton asked the Prime Minister whether she will list the achievements of Her Majesty's Government from 1979 to date.

The Prime Minister: The rate of inflation is almost half the level the Government inherited, with further falls in prospect. The United Kingdom is in its fifth successive year of growth with GDP at an all time high; and output is expected to have grown faster in 1985 than all other EC countries and the United States. Investment reached a record level in 1984 and is expected to have risen by a further 4 per cent. in 1985. The balance of payments current account has been in surplus for six successive years. Manufacturing productivity has risen at an average annual rate of 6 per cent. for the last five years—higher than France or Germany—and company profitability is at its highest for two decades. Employment is rising, with around 700,000 more people in work since March 1983.

The Government have restored sound public finances. Public expenditure has been falling as a percentage of GDP since 1982-83 and is planned to remain broadly stable at the 1984-85 level in real terms over the next three years. The public sector borrowing requirement in 1985-86 is forecast to account for the smallest proportion of GDP for 14 years.

The Government have pursued a substantial programme of tax reform. Business taxation has been radically restructured; by April 1986 the United Kingdom will have the lowest rate of corporation tax of any industrialised country. For income tax payers, the basic rate was reduced to 30 per cent. in 1979 and, since then, thresholds have been raised about 20 per cent. in real terms. Further proposals for reform will be set out in the forthcoming Green Paper on personal taxation. Three taxes — the national insurance surcharge development land tax and the investment income surcharge — have been abolished completely.

Since 1979, the Government have transferred 12 major companies and a number of other enterprises to the private sector. As a result of this policy and tax reliefs designed to encourage employee shareholding the number of individual shareowners in the United Kingdom has doubled. The privatisation programme continues to develop. By the end of this Parliament, 40 per cent. of the state-owned industrial sector we inherited in 1979 should be returned to private enterprise.

The Government have introduced a large number of measures designed to improve the operations of markets. Pay, price and dividend controls have been abolished, together with controls on foreign exchange, bank lending and hire purchase and restrictions on industrial and office development. Incentives have been increased by the tax changes and by restructuring of national insurance contributions announced in the 1985 Budget. Changes in employment legislation and measures to encourage labour mobility have improved the operation of the labour market. Regulations applying to a wide field of industry and finance have been removed entirely; the small firms sector has been helped by special schemes and greater sums have been spent on training. The Government have also sought to introduce more competition in the professions.

Productivity per person in agriculture has improved by more than 40 per cent. since 1979 and has helped this sector to provide food to consumers at prices which have fallen in relation to the level of retail prices generally. In the same period, the volume of agricultural, food and drink exports has risen by 25 per cent., and the United Kingdom now produces 80 per cent. of all the temperate foodstuffs it needs.

The task of tackling costly surpluses under the common agricultural policy has been started with measures in the European Community designed to control CAP spending and, specifically in the wine and milk sectors, to curb overproduction. Agricultural support prices have been reduced in real terms. In fisheries we achieved an advantageous settlement of a revised common fisheries policy, and we have resolved most of our outstanding problems with Norway. Improvements have been made in the conservation of stocks and the fishing of herring in the North sea has been resumed.

In transport, coach services have been opened to competition, and legislation passed to deregulate local bus services. London Transport has been transferred from the GLC to London Regional Transport, and targets set for better value for money. Similarly, British Rail has been given targets for the reduction of subsidy and the improvement of customer service, and major new investments approved. Spending on major roads has increased by 30 per cent. and over 500 miles of motorways and major trunk roads have been completed.

The Government have ensured that adequate resources are devoted to combating crime. Total manpower — police officers and civilians — in the police service in Great Britain has increased by over 17,000 since 1979. Total expenditure on the police service in England and Wales has increased from £1·1 billion in 1978-79 to £2·8 billion in 1985-86 — an increase of one third in real terms. There are nearly 3,000 more prison officers, and spending on prison building has gone up by nearly 400 per cent.

New initiatives have been announced to control drug misuse, and the Government supported the Video Recordings Act to control video nasties. An independent Crown prosecution service for England and Wales is being established this year. Measures have been taken to ensure that the terms of imprisonment served by violent offenders fully reflect society's abhorrence of their crimes.

The Government have been active to strengthen safeguards against fraud and to ensure that the probity of our financial institutions is maintained without undermining their competitiveness. The Companies Acts 1980 and 1981 strengthened powers of investigation and the courts' powers to disqualify directors for misconduct; and made insider dealing a criminal offence. The Lloyd's Act 1982 has enabled substantial progress to be made in establishing a new regulatory system at Lloyd's. The Insolvency Act 1985 increased the scope for disqualifying directors of companies which have gone into liquidation or receivership, and introduced a new liability of directors for wrongful trading. The Financial Services Bill broadens the general regulatory framework within which people in financial institutions have to operate. The recommendations of the Roskill committee to review the investigation, prosecution and trial of fraud cases are now before us, and we are moving towards early legislation based upon them.

In education, the Government have launched a major initiative to raise standards in schools, including the publication of broad curricular objectives for the five-to-16 age group, the reform of the 16-plus examination system, and the decision to introduce records of achievement for school leavers of all abilities. The technical and vocational education initiative has been introduced to boost practical elements in the 14-to-18 curriculum. In higher education, record numbers of students have been admitted and the Government has endorsed plans which provide for a continuation of the significant shift towards science and engineering and other subjects in the public sector of higher education.

In social security, the Government have maintained the protection of social security benefits against inflation. The retirement pension is at a record real level. Legislation is currently before the House building on the 1985 Social Security Act, which gave new pension rights to early leavers from pension schemes. We are providing for a major extension in occupational pension provision and for the first time we are giving everybody a right to a personal pension of their own. In addition, the Government have completed a fundamental and far-reaching review of other social security provisions.

Spending on the Health Service is up by 21 per cent. in real terms. There are many thousands more doctors and nurses. Over 40 major new hospital schemes have been completed. Many more cases are being dealt with, and waiting lists are down by 91,000. The drive for better management continues with the appointment of general managers throughout the Health Service.

Over 1 million young people have entered the youth training scheme since it was launched in 1983. We are helping to train 200,000 adults this year and 250,000 next. The community programme and enterprise allowance scheme have been expanded. Legislation has been passed extending the rights of members of trade unions to influence the affairs of their unions and to restore the balance in industrial relations between managements and unions.

In energy, Government policies on taxation and licensing have made 1984 a record year for oil and gas exploration and development in the North sea, with 1985 a record year for approval of new developments. The North sea contribution to United Kingdom employment has been further expanded in both years. With Government support, the electricity and coal industries enabled the electricity system to withstand a year-long coal strike without power cuts and with only limited damage to the rest of British industry.

In local government, the Rates Act is protecting ratepayers from huge increases in rates in the highest spending councils. Under the Local Government Act 1985, the GLC and the metropolitan county councils will be abolished on 1 April 1986. Proposals for reform of local government finance and taxation, including the abolition of domestic rates, have recently been set out in the Green Paper "Paying for Local Government". A committee has been established to inquire into the conduct of local authority business; and legislation has been introduced to regulate local authority publicity activities. A consultation document on increasing competitive tendering in local government has been published.

In housing, the Government introduced the first statutory charter of rights for public sector tenants, including the right to buy their homes. The number of home owners has increased by 2·25 million in Great Britain and owner-occupation is now 62 per cent.; the proportion of young people owning their own homes is the highest in Europe. Home improvement grants have been made more widely available than ever before. Assistance has been given to the owners of defective houses previously in the public sector and an urban housing renewal unit has been set up to help authorities tackle the problems of their rundown estates. Measures have been introduced to encourage lettings in the private sector.

In the environment, we have taken the initiative in Europe in bringing to an end the addition of lead to petrol and paint, and we are steadily removing it from those water supplies where it is still a problem. We have taken steps to reduce the pollution of our rivers, estuaries and beaches. The Wildlife and Countryside Act 1981 was the first piece of major countryside legislation for more than a decade, and represents a significant step forward in the protection of landscape, flora and fauna.

The derelict land programme has been greatly increased. Urban development corporations have been established in London docklands and on Merseyside to bring about the redevelopment of these areas. Twenty-five enterprise zones have been designated. All these measures are having a marked impact on older urban areas in need of regeneration.

In defence, the capability of our armed forces has continued to be stengthened. The Government has played its full part in implementing NATO's 1979 decision to modernise intermediate range nuclear weapons. Increased efficiency is being pursued by the continuing transfer of resources from the support areas to the frontline, and by introducing increased competition in defence contracts and promoting collaboration with our international partners. Finally, a major reorganisation of the headquarters structure of the Ministry of Defence has been introduced.

The Government concluded in 1985 the Anglo-Irish Agreement which seeks to develop further our unique relationship with the Republic of Ireland; to enhance co-operation, including over security matters, between the two countries; and also to assist in achieving lasting peace and stability within Northern Ireland. Following the approval of the agreement by the British and Irish Parliaments, the Anglo-Irish Intergovernmental Conference was established and is now pursuing its work in fields assigned to it under the agreement.

The Government have also been instrumental in bringing about an agreement on amendments to the EC treaties, which should improve Community decision-taking while safeguarding essential United Kingdom interests. Rhodesia was brought to legal independence as the Republic of Zimbabwe by the holding of the Lancaster house conference in 1979 and the supervision of the elections in 1980. The Government resoluely upheld and continue to defend the right of the Falkland Islanders to live in peace and security under a Government of their own choosing. The Sino-British Joint Declaration on the future of Hong Kong was ratified in May last year. Over Gibraltar, an agreement was reached with Spain in February 1985, and the border is now open.

Management and Efficiency

Mr. Soames asked the Prime Minister what steps Her Majesty's Government have taken since 1979 to improve the management and efficiency of the Government and Civil Service.

The Prime Minister: Since 1979, the Government have maintained their policy to improve the efficiency and effectiveness of administration through the Civil Serviceand other parts of the public sector, with the aim of giving better value for taxpayer's money. We have reduced the size of the Civil Service by over 18 per cent. to 596,000—the lowest since the war. With the help of the efficiency unit set up in 1979, departments have carried out some 290 efficiency scrutinies and reviews from which savings worth over £900 million in total have already been achieved, with recurring savings now running at £295 million per year. Further significant savings are in prospect, for example from implementation of recommendations flowing from reviews of Government purchasing and accommodation.

We have initiated the lasting reform of financial management throughout Departments, so that all managers have clear objectives and responsibilities; and similar reforms of personnel development and training, including exchanges of staff between the Civil Service and outside industry, to improve management skills and performance at all levels, and to provide better arrangements for reporting and appraising staff performance so that their efficiency is monitored more keenly.

Non-departmental public bodies have also been subject to critical review and their numbers reduced by over 500 to below 1,700 in 1985. Another programme of review of the remaining NDPBs to seek progressive improvements in their performance is under way. We have also widened the opportunities for private enterprise to undertake services traditionally provided by the public sector. The Civil Service has responded well to the new demands made of it and the drive for improvement is continuing.

Small Businesses

Mr. Nicholls asked the Prime Minister, if she will list the actions taken by the Government since 1979 which were designed to, or had the effect of, assisting small businesses.

The Prime Minister: Measures introduced since 1979 include the business expansion scheme, which increases the supply of finance for investment in unquoted companies, the loan guarantee scheme and the enterprise allowance scheme, which assists unemployed people to start up their own business. In the improved climate for business there has been an increase generally in the sources of finance for small firms.

Business training is an important element in the Government's support for small firms. Through the training for enterprise programme, the Manpower Services Commission provides a range of courses to assist those starting or wishing to develop businesses. Expenditure on this will increase from approximately £14 million in 1985-86 to £20 million in 1986-87.

Since 1979 there has been a substantial increase in the number of agencies that are able to offer business advice. The Government have greatly expanded its advice and counselling to small firms through the small firms service. It has also encouraged the development of local enterprise agencies, which now number more than 300, and will be stepping up its financial support to agencies in the next financial year.

Forestry Commission (Scotland)

Mr. Adley asked the Prime Minister if she will reallocate ministerial responsibility for all Forestry Commission matters outwith Scotland; and if she will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: I see no reason to change the present allocation of responsibilities.

Lower Paid (Fiscal and Social Policy)

Mr. Bowen Wells asked the Prime Minister if she will make a statement on co-ordination between the relevant Departments of Her Majesty's Government's fiscal and social security policy towards the lower paid.

The Prime Minister: This is a matter of great concern, and we therefore ensure that there is close co-ordination between Departments on fiscal and social security policy towards the lower paid. A number of important measures have recently been introduced or announced. For example:

The new family credit, now before Parliament, will provide substantial extra help to low paid working families with children and will therefore improve the relationship between the income a family would receive in and out of work. It will be paid through the pay packet, in effect as an offset against tax and national insurance payments.

The planned reform of income-related benefits will end the position where the combination of tax, contributions and loss of benefits can leave individuals worse off as their gross income rises.

Successive Budgets have ensured that many of the lowest paid have been taken completely out of tax.

The reformed structure of national insurance contributions, introduced in October 1985, has relieved the burden of contributions on the low paid.

Moving the uprating date of social security benefits to April from next year will enable changes in benefits to be synchronised with changes in tax and contributions.

Together, these changes mark a major advance in co-ordinating and streamlining the systems of tax and social security. The computer systems being developed by Inland Revenue and DHSS are also designed to ensure compatibility. The scope for closer alignment in the longer term will be discussed in the forthcoming Green Paper on personal taxation.

AIDS

Mr. Mason asked the Prime Minister if she will make a statement setting out all the steps being taken by Her Majesty's Government to seek to halt the spread of acquired immune deficiency syndrome, to establish causes and cures, and to educate the public and health professionals about the nature and hazards associated with the spread of the disease.

The Prime Minister: The Government have a substantial programme of action to deal with the urgent problem of acquired immune deficiency syndrome.

1. To provide a general framework, information on a number of cases in the United Kingdom is collected by the Communicable Disease Surveillance Centre; an expert advisory group was established at an early stage to provide expert medical advice; the Public Health (Infectious Diseases) Regulations 1985 were applied to make provision to remove a person to hospital and detain them there in exceptional circumstances; advisory committees have been set up in Scotland and Wales to monitor the spread of infection and advise on measures to reduce the rate of spread; and an interdepartmental ministerial steering group co-ordinates strategy on wider issues arising from the infection.

2. To improve the safety of blood and blood products, since 1983 leaflets have been issued by the national blood transfusion service to all blood donors, warning those in at risk groups not to donate blood. Blood products for haemophiliacs are now heat-treated. £138,000 was provided for the evaluation of kits which could test blood for the presence of antibodies to the virus which leads to AIDS (HTVL III). Since October 1985, when the suitability of the kits was confirmed, all blood donations are screened and those showing such antibodies are rejected. Over £2 million extra money has been provided in Great Britain for the testing of blood samples and the screening of blood donations. Health authorities have been asked to provide facilities for tests to be undertaken outside the blood transfusion services, and for counselling for people found to be infected with the virus.

3. To deal with AIDS on a comprehensive basis, health authorities in England have also been asked to draw up plans and to send these to the Department of Health and Social Security this summer. Extra money has been allocated to north-east, north-west and south-east Thames regional health authorities, which at present treat the majority of United Kingdom AIDS cases: £680,000 in 1985-86 and £2·5 million in 1986-87. More money was also allocated to the haemophilia reference centres to provide specialist counselling services: £90,000 in 1985-86 and £270,000 in 1986-87. The Government provided £150,000 for the provision of counselling training courses for health professionals.

4. General advice and guidance has been issued, some directly from Government — for example to health professionals and to local education authorities in relation to children at school, and some from organisations assisted by Government funds such as the Health Education Council, the Haemophilia Society, the Terrence Higgins Trust and the Scottish AIDS Monitor. The Government will launch in the spring a major campaign to inform the general public about the nature of the disease and how it is spread, and have set aside £2·5 million for this purpose.

5. In research, scientists around the world are searching for a vaccine and a cure. Research in the United Kingdom on AIDS is co-ordinated by the Government funded Medical Research Council. Projects are being funded at a cost of £431,000 in total. The health Departments are contributing up to £300,000 per annum for epidemiological research on AIDS and for a new co-ordinating centre being set up by the MRC; the additional costs of this work will be met from the MRC's grant-in-aid. £125,000 has been provided for research co-ordinated by the chief scientist's office in Scotland.

Westland plc

Mr. Dalyell asked the Prime Minister why, pursuant to the answer of 17 February, Official Report, column 9, on Westlands, she considered the answer given on 14 February, Official Report, column 561, inappropriate.

The Prime Minister: My office wrote to the hon. Gentleman on 14 February.

Mr. Dalyell asked the Prime Minister (1) whether the then Secretary of State for Trade and Industry was aware of the likely contents of the letter from the Solicitor-General to the then Secretary of State for Defence before extracts from the letter were read to him over the telephone on 6 January; and if she will make a statement;

(2) whether the then Secretary of State for Trade and Industry discussed with his private secretary or his chief information officer the possibility of disclosing the contents of the Solicitor-General's letter to the then Secretary of State for Defence, before extracts from the letter were read to him over the telephone on 6 January; and if she will make a statement;

(3) when Sir Robert Armstrong first discussed with (a) her, (b) the then Secretary of State for Trade and Industry, (c) the then Secretary of State for Defence and (d) Mr. Bernard Ingham the letter from the Solicitor-General of 7 January to the then Secretary of State for Defence, protesting at the leak of his letter of 6 January;

(4) when and by what means the chief information officer at the Department of Trade and Industry and the press secretary at No. 10 Downing street first became aware that a letter was to be sent by the Solicitor-General to the then Secretary of State for Defence alleging material inaccuracies;

(5) what action Mr. Bernard Ingham understood her to want taken after receipt of the letter from the Solicitor-General to the then Secretary of State for Defence on 6 January; and what basis he had for this understanding.

The Prime Minister: I have nothing to add to the full account which I gave to the House in my statement on 23 January at columns 449-460 and in the debate on 27 January at columns 651-658.

Information Technology

Mr. Dalyell asked the Prime Minister what civil funds are now available to support new colllaborative projects for research and development in advanced information technology.

The Prime Minister: A range of civil funds is available to support new collaborative projects for research and development in advanced technology.

Financial assistance is available under the Department of Trade and Industry's support for innovation scheme, the Alvey programme and under European Community programmes such as Esprit. The last two of these programmes are now almost fully committed and consideration is being given to what might succeed them.

Total estimated outturn for all forms of United Kingdom civil support for IT collaborative research in 1985-86 is £40 million. In addition, the United Kingdom receives a proportion of the funds disbursed by the European Commission under the Esprit programme of collaborative research.

Turkey

Mr. Parry asked the Prime Minister if she will make a statement on her recent meeting with the Prime Minister of Turkey.

The Prime Minister: I had a most valuable discussion with Mr. Ozal, covering a wide range of issues, which confirmed the friendship that exists between our two countries. On Turkey's relations with the European Community, we agreed that our priority must be to revitalise the association agreement and work towards a much closer economic relationship. We also discussed Cyprus, where Mr. Ozal confirmed Turkey's support for the UN Secretary General's initiative; and the latest developments in the middle east.

I welcome the progress that Mr. Ozal's Government had made towards the restoration of parliamentary democracy and the steps taken on human rights. Mr. Ozal assured me that progress would continue.

I congratulated Mr. Ozal on Turkey's recent economic performance and welcomed our increasing trading and commercial links. I told Mr. Ozal that we had further increased our medium term export credit for Turkey. During the visit, a double taxation agreement and a memorandum of understanding, agreeing to work towards an investment promotion and protection agreement, were signed. These should further encourage investment and trade between our two countries.

Sellafield

Mr. Teddy Taylor asked the Prime Minister if Her Majesty's Government intend to co-operate with the inquiry into Sellafield called for by the European Assembly in terms of the Euratom agreement; and if she will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: The United Kingdom Government have received no request from the Commission following the passage of resolutions by the European Parliament on 20 February relating to Sellafield. United Kingdom authorities have complied with Community requirements to provide information on environmental radiation monitoring. This information confirmed that Sellafield has been operated in accordance with the basis standards for radiological protection laid down by the European Community.

THE ARTS

Tax Incentives

Mr. Proctor asked the Minister for the Arts if he will estimate the extent of the benefit to the Arts from reduced rates of personal and corporate taxation and the reduced rate of capital transfer tax mentioned in his answer on 20 January, Official Report, column 15; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Luce: No meaningful estimate can be made, but it is reasonable to assume that where a reduction in taxation leaves people and corporations with more disposable income the arts will be likely to benefit accordingly.

Libraries (Newspapers)

Mr. Cartwright asked the Minister for the Arts if he will exercise his powers under the Public Libraries and Museums Act 1964 to obtain and publish information on the number of local authorities which have banned News International newspapers from their public libraries; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Luce: The information requested is not available and could not be obtained without disproportionate expense. However, I welcome the opportunity to make it clear that I deplore any attempt to ban particular books or newspapers for which there is a demand from public libraries, whatever the reason for such a ban. If a newspaper has been available in a public library, to meet the demands of users, then I can see no justification for ceasing to make it available in order to make a political or industrial point. I understand that the Library Association, the professional body for librarians, shares my concern at recent developments of this nature, as no doubt do many library users.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Banned Drivers

54. Mr. Holt asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many drivers have been banned from driving in each of the past three years.

Mr. Mellor: The available information relates to the number of driving licence disqualifications and is published in table 10 of Home Office statistical bulletin 28/85 "Offences Relating to Motor Vehicles, England and Wales, 1984". In 1982, 1983 and 1984 there were, respectively, about 145, 150 and 155 thousand disqualifications.

Criminal Attempts Act 1981

Mr. Kennedy asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) if he has any plans to seek to amend section 7, subsection (3), of the Criminal Attempts Act 1981 to assist prosecution of shopkeepers who sell cocaine snorting kits;

(2) whether he has received any recent representations over the operation of section 7, subsection (3), of the Criminal Attempts Act 1981 with reference to the Misuse of Drugs Act 1971.

Mr. Mellor: I refer the hon. Member to what I said on this matter during the debate on the Third Reading of the Drug Trafficking Offences Bill on 18 February, at columns 220-221.

Drug Addiction

Mr. Simon Hughes asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the amount spent (a) by local government, (b) by central Government and (c) by other bodies on combating drug addiction in each London borough for the last year for which figures are available.

Mr. Mellor: Central Government expenditure in 1985-86 includes £750,000 under the DHSS funding initiative on drugs projects serving Greater London, £57,000 under the urban programme on drugs projects in London boroughs, and £183,000 under the after-care accommodation scheme on drugs projects in the inner London probation area. It is not possible to quantify separately the far larger total contribution to combating drug misuse in London made by other central Government expenditure. The other information requested is not available.

Special Constables

Mr. Hargreaves asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what plans he has to institute a formal discipline code for special constables;

(2) further to the answer of 10 February, Official Report, column 315, what protection exists for special constables in respect of internal disciplinary cases.

Mr. Giles Shaw: The need for a discipline code for special constables has been considered from time to time. The conclusion has always been that it is neither sensible nor practicable to apply such a code to voluntary, part-time, unpaid officers and we have no present plans to introduce one. Chief officers of police are, however, recommended to follow discipline procedures for special constables which, so far as it is possible given the significant differences in status and conditions of service, are in line with those which apply to regular officers.

Ulster Defence Association

Mr. Waller asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will call for a report from the chief constable of West Yorkshire on the progress of inquiries into, and charges arising from, the alleged illegal activities of members of extremist organisations and on the possible links between such organisations and the Ulster Defence Association; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Giles Shaw: I will reply as soon as possible.

Air Pistols

Mr. Murphy asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what recent representations he has received advocating an increase in controls on air pistols and similar weapons; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Giles Shaw: We have received representations from about 20 hon. Members and 25 members of the public since January 1985. Most urged that a licensing system should be introduced. On that, I would refer my hon. Friend to the reply given to a question from my hon. Friend the Member for Chipping Barnet (Mr. Chapman) on 23 January, at column 436.

Witchcraft

Mr. Chope asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he has received representations from chief constables about the sufficiency of police powers to counter witchcraft.

Mr. Giles Shaw: We have received no representations from chief constables about witchcraft.

Police Officers (Racial Discrimination)

Sir Eldon Griffiths asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) if he has yet received from all chief officers of police the information about allegations of racial discriminatory behaviour by police officers as requested in the circular 4/86 on this subject; and if he intends to publish them;

(2) what representations he has received from the Police Federation about his circular 4/86;

(3) if, pursuant to his circular 4/86, about allegations of racially discriminatory behaviour by police officers, he will publish in the Official Report a description of how statistics are compiled of cases where a suspicion of such behaviour arises.

Mr. Giles Shaw: The returns sought by Home Office circular 4/86 are intended to supplement the information about the complaints and discipline system which is already collected on an anual basis.

My right hon. Friend decided that, in order to meet expected parliamentary interest in the new offence of racially discriminatory behaviour, it was important to know what use had been made of it in forces. Not all the required returns have yet been received. Detailed statistics on complaints and discipline are published each year, and it is my right hon. Friend's intention to publish figures of the use of the new offence also.

The circular also sought information about the circumstances in which the new offence has been charged, and about the use of other disciplinary offences in regard to misconduct in which a racial element appeared to have been present. The object was to enable the Home Office to monitor the use of the new provision, having regard to the Government's stated belief that no new offence was needed in order to deal with instances of such behaviour when they came to light.

The Police Federation represented to me its anxiety that statistics of suspected racialist behaviour might give a misleading picture, and they complained that they had not been consulted on the preparation of the circular. I indicated in response that the material was being collected to facilitate the discharge of the Home Office's own responsibilities for monitoring the complaints and discipline system, and that it had not been seen as affecting the interests of federation members. But I have expressed my regret that they were not told, out of courtesy, of our plans to issue the circular.

News International, Wapping

Mr. Evans asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many non-European Economic Community nationals are employed, with valid work permits, at the News Group Newspapers Limited additional printing facility at Wapping.

Mr. Waddington: This information is not recorded.

Metropolitan Police

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list, for each year since 1979, the numbers and ranks of Metropolitan police officers disciplined, demoted, suspended, dismissed from the force or required to resign following a successful civil action against the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis for a wrongful act by an officer.

Mr. Giles Shaw: I will reply as soon as possible.

Action on Smoking and Health

Mr. Macfarlane asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if his Department has provided grant-in-aid for Action on Smoking and Health; and whether any donations have been made during the past five years.

Mr. Waddington: The Home Office has never given a grant or made a donation to this organisation.

Parliamentary Questions

Mr. Proctor asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the longest period of time between a Minister in his Department giving a holding answer to a priority written question and the substantive answer over the last 12 months; and what is the longest similar period for such a question given a holding answer but for which a substantive answer has not yet been given; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hurd: Our records show that, over the last 12 months, the vast majority of priority written questions initially given a holding reply received a substantive answer within a month. In the same period, the longest interval between a holding reply and the substantive answer being given to a priority written question was two months and six days, and the longest period for which a substantive reply is still outstanding is seven months.

I regret that it has not yet been possible to give a substantive answer to my hon. Friend's question of 29 November. I understand that my hon. and learned Friend hopes to give a full reply within the next two weeks.

Mr. Peter William Jones

Mr. Roy Hughes asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if, in the light of his recent conviction at Newport Crown court, he will make a statement on the circumstances of the release on licence in 1983 of Peter William Jones and on the assessment made at that time of the likelihood of his committing further violent offences.

Mr. Mellor: Mr. Jones was sentenced to seven years imprisonment for causing grevious bodily harm on 5 March 1980, when he had already been in custody on remand for six months. He became eligible for parole on 6 January 1982 but was refused parole then and at the next parole review. He was released on licence on the recommendation of the Parole Board on 21 November 1983, just over five months before the end of his sentence. He was recalled to prison on 13 December 1983 because he had breached the conditions of his licence. He served the rest of that sentence in prison, being released on 4 May 1984, more than a year before the current offence. The release on licence in 1983 was thus irrelevant to the offence of rape, for which Mr. Jones was sentenced to life imprisonment this month.

The decision on whether or not to release a prisoner on parole in such circumstances depends on an assessment of whether compulsory supervision by the probation service for a few months at the end of a prisoner's sentence is likely to reduce the long-term risk to the public, bearing in mind that at the end of that period the prisoner will be released into the community anyway. In Mr. Jones' case, the view was taken that the risk of re-offending would be reduced if he could overcome his drinking problem and the conditions of his licence included residence in a hostel for the treatment of alcoholics. The power to recall a prisoner who refuses to comply with the conditions of his licence and thereby benefit from supervision is an important safeguard, which was exercised promptly in this case.

Animals (Experiments)

Mr. Leighton asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many animals have been used in experiments in British laboratories since 1975 in which they have been deprived of their sight, either in one eye or both; what species of animals have been used; and where these experiments are performed.

Mr. Mellor: Such experiments are not separately identified in the information collected centrally.

Sunday Trading

Mr. Nellist asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many representations the Government have received since the publication of the report of the Auld committee; and of those how many were (a) for and (b) against the deregulation of Sunday trading.

Mr. Waddington: Since the publication of the report of the Auld committee, the Government have received 310 representations supporting and 37,317 opposing the deregulation of Sunday trading.

Parliamentary Constituencies

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether the Boundary Commissions for England and Wales intend to conduct any interim reviews of parliamentary constituencies; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hurd: The commissions have informed me that they intend to conduct interim reviews of 63 parliamentary constituencies under the powers provided in section 2(3) of the House of Commons (Redistribution of Seats) Act 1949. The counties and constituencies concerned are as follows:

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Riding Hats

Mr. Greenway asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will estimate the number of riding hats imported into the United Kingdom in each of the last 10 years, showing the country of origin; what proposals he has for controlling the standards of such imported hats; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Howard: Information relating to imports of riding hats is not separately identified in the overseas trade statistics.

Under the general safety duty proposed in the White Paper on the Safety of Goods (Cmnd. 9302) supplies of consumer goods (whether home produced or imported) will be required to ensure that their goods are safe in accordance with sound modern standards. It is proposed that the Secretary of State has the power to approve published standards as satisfying the general safety duty. British standard 6473 for riding hats appears to be suitable for this purpose. It is also proposed that trading standards officers should have power to seize or suspend unsafe goods at the point of entry into this country. The Government intend to introduce legislation to give effect to the measure proposed in the White Paper as soon as the parliamentary timetable permits.

Tractors

Mr. Sheerman asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what percentage of British tractor requirements are fulfilled by imports from overseas countries; and what percentage of these are from Czechoslovakia.

Mr. Alan Clark: In 1984, the last complete year for which data is available, imports are estimated to have accounted for 78 per cent. of the United Kingdom market for complete tractors in value terms. Two per cent. of these imports were from Czechoslovakia. In the first three quarters of 1985, the corresponding figures were 66 per cent. and 3·5 per cent. respectively.

Barrow and Birkenhead Shipyards (Privatisation)

Mr. Thurnham asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what priority he attaches to the preservation of the present terms and conditions of employment, including pension rights, of the work force at the Barrow and Birkenhead shipyards, following the proposed privatisation; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Morrison: This is a matter for negotiation between the employers and employees. The sale of a business does not affect existing employment contracts. British Shipbuilders has however made clear that it wishes the purchasers of its warship yards to provide pension rights to company employees broadly similar to those available prior to sale.

Investments (United States)

Mr. Speller asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will list major United Kingdom investments in the United States of America in trade and industry over the past 10 years, together with an estimate of their value.

Mr. Alan Clark: The available information is given in table 3.1 of Business Monitor MA4 (Overseas Transactions) 1983. A list showing major United Kingdom direct investments individually cannot be provided, as this would break the confidentiality rules under which the data are collected. Information for 1984 will become available in the spring.

Wine

Mr. Mason asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry (1) when he last met the local authority body on trading standards on matters in connection with the sales of wine in marked or lined glasses;

(2) what were the results of the two surveys which observed the extent to which the voluntary code of practice was working on the sales of wine by the glass;

(3) if, in view of the non-co-operation of the licensed trade in observing his code of conduct on the sales of wine in marked or lined glasses, he will now introduce legislation for the sale of standard quantities of wine; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Howard: I last met the Local Authorities Co-ordinating Body on Trading Standards to discuss sales of wine by the glass, and other matters, on 17 January.

The main results of the surveys carried out in 1984 and 1985 by local authorities to ascertain levels of compliance with the trade's voluntary code of practice for sales of wine by the glass showed some slight improvement and were as follows:

	1984	Per Cent.	1985	Per Cent.
Premises Visited	4,573		5,144
Full Compliance with Code	470	10·2	656	12·8
Compliance with the key requirements	618	13·5	831	16·9
Staff Awareness of Code	1,635	35·75	2,257	43·9
Use of Agreed Sizes	1,606	35·1	2,233	43·4

In the light of these surveys, the Department is considering whether further action is called for. The introduction of legislation to require wine to be sold by the glass only in a range of prescribed standard sizes is one of the options under consideration.

Company Accounts

Mr. Tim Smith asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make a statement on his policy in relation to the treatment in the accounts of companies of off-balance sheet finance and window dressing.

Mr. Howard: In December, the Institute of Chartered Accountants in England and Wales published a technical release dealing with the accounting issues raised by off-balance-sheet finance and window-dressing, I support the approach taken by the institute, and indeed my Department's support is recorded in the technical release.

Trade Statistics

Mr. Woodall asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will give the manufacturing trade balance of the United Kingdom with the 10 members of the European Economic Community in 1985, stating value of exports, imports and the balance for each country, if possible on a balance of payments basis.

Mr. Alan Clark: Statistics of United Kingdom trade with individual countries are not available on a balance of payments basis. Figures on the overseas trade statistics basis are in the table.

For comparison, both OTS and BOP figures are given for United Kingdom trade with the European Community as a whole.

United Kingdom trade in manufactures 1985

BL (Privatisation)

Mr. Straw asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when he first became aware of the letter from Hill Samuel & Co., dated 14 February, concerning a time limit on offers to purchase Leyland Vehicles Land Rover and Freight Rover.

Mr. Channon: I first became aware of the letter on 19 February.

Mr. Straw asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether there was any prior consultation between Her Majesty's Government on the one hand and British Leyland and Hill Samuel & Co. on the other concerning the setting of a time limit for the receipt of offers to purchase Leyland Vehicles Land Rover and Freight Rover.

Mr. Channon: There was prior consultation about the time frame in which parties should be asked to indicate firm intentions to make offers, but not about the precise date by which these should be requested.

Mr. Dalyell asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when he first saw the letter of 14 February regarding deadlines for the sale of British Leyland.

Mr. Channon: I first saw the text on which this letter is based on 19 February, after I answered the private notice question from the right hon. Member for Monklands, East (Mr. Smith).

Mr. Hoyle asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when discussions on the possible sale of Leyland Vehicles to General Motors commenced; who is carrying out the negotiations on behalf of Leyland Vehicles; who negotiated the assurances regarding employment and import content which he has given to the House; at what stage of the negotiations he expects the relevant trade unions to be consulted; and what role General Motors World Truck is playing in the talks.

Mr. Peter Morrison: The Government made a preliminary approach to General Motors in mid-1984 to establish whether, in principle, they would be interested in exploring with BL the possibility of a joint approach to the problems of the United Kingdom commercial vehicle industry. Following detailed studies carried out by the two companies, it was agreed in the autumn of 1985 that substantive talks should begin directed at the possible acquisition by General Motors of various parts of Land Rover-Leyland.

BL has been responsible for the conduct of the commercial discussions, although the Government have been represented at the talks. The General Motors delegation has been led by representatives of the General Motors Truck and Bus Group. Government officials are, however, primarily responsible for the discussions taking place with General Motors on the question of assurances regarding the future of the relevant Land Rover-Leyland business under General Motors ownership.

I know that both General Motors and BL recognise this is a very uncertain and worrying time for their work forces and are doing their utmost to keep them informed. I am myself also meeting trade union delegations to explain the position.

EC (Internal Market)

Mr. Foulkes asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what he expects to be the effect of completing the European internal market on (a) the structure of British industry, (b) the level of unemployment in the United Kingdom, (c) the level of British exports to the European Economic Community, (d) the level of British imports from the European Economic Community, (e) the United Kingdom's balance of payments and (f) the rate of growth of the British economy.

Mr. Alan Clark: Progress towards completing the internal market will be one of a number of factors influencing the development of the British economy. In general, removing barriers to trade within the Community should further increase our trade with other member states and reduce costs to business. It should therefore help to stimulate increased efficiency in the use of resources and accordingly encourage growth of the economy.

Jade Pot Plant

Mr. McCrindle asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will take steps to ban the pot plant commonly known as Jade in view of its known poisonous properties.

Mr. Howard: No. The National Poisons Centre advises me that house plants are not a significant health hazard and that it is very rare for children swallowing them to suffer serious or lasting harm.

National Accreditation Mark

Mr. Cash asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what consultations, and with whom, took place on the design of the national accreditation mark; and whether the advice of the National Accreditation Council was sought before the mark was adopted.

Mr. Butcher: The design of the national accreditation mark was chosen by the Department of Trade and Industry following consultations with the Lord Chamberlain's Office and on the basis of advice received from the Department's legal advisers. The National Accreditation Council was informed of the choice before the mark was publicised, but its advice was not formally sought.

Paraquat

Mr. Meadowcroft asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will impose new safety conditions under which paraquat is exported to third world countries; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Alan Clark [pursuant to his reply, 20 February, c. 269]: The Food and Agriculture Organisation of the United Nations last year adopted an international code of practice on the distribution and use of pesticides. I regard this as an effective means of drawing the attention of both industry and governments to the measures needed to assure the safety of pesticide users.

Turkey

Mr. Jim Spicer asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what financial and other support he is giving to British manufacturers wishing to further commercial relations in Turkey.

Mr. Alan Clark [pursuant to his reply, 21 February, c. 357]: Official export services, including ECGD cover and other financial assistance schemes, are available to British firms wishing to do business with Turkey. I hope that commercial relations will be strengthened following contacts between British and Turkish businessmen during the Turkish Prime Minister's visit and by the fothcoming visit by the Under-Secretary of State for the Treasury and Foreign Trade.

Mr. Jim Spicer asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make a statement about progress on Turkish fabric manufacturers' recent commercial initiatives aimed at redressing the balance of textiles trades between Turkey and EEC countries; and what plans he has for developing these initiatives.

Mr. Alan Clark [pursuant to his reply, 21 February, c. 357]: I welcome the recent voluntary restraint agreement on textiles between Turkey and the European Community. The level of imports of the products subject to restraint will be monitored carefully. I hope that this agreement can be extended to cover sensitive clothing products in a comprehensive agreement. Discussions on such an extension are continuing.

ENVIRONMENT

Thames Water Authority

Mr. Spearing asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what information he has on steps being taken by the Thames water authority to employ all employees of the Greater London council currently concerned with the Thames barrier, land drainage, and other services which the authority will operate from 1 April next.

Mr. Tracey: This is a matter for the Thames water authority.

Sellafield

Mr. Foulkes asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations he has received from the Irish Government regarding the effect of radioactive discharges; what action he has taken following these; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waldegrave: At the request of the Irish Government, a meeting of officials took place on 14 February. Information about discharges from Sellafield, including the recent incidents, was supplied and consideration was given to improving procedures for notifying the Irish Government of such incidents.

Mr. Foulkes asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what accidents have been reported at the Sellafield plant so far in the current year; what has been the radioactive discharge or leak involved; what effect he estimates this will have on levels of radioactivity in the south west of Scotland; and what action he proposes to take.

Mr. Waldegrave: Three incidents involving radioactivity have been reported to the Secretary of State this year. One involved the discharge of about 500 kg of uranium to the sea; one involved a very small quantity of plutonium vapour entering the atmosphere and the third resulted in no discharge to the environment. Present indications are that levels of radioactivity in the south-west of Scotland have not been affected.

Local Government Reform

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if, pursuant to his reply of 11 February to the hon. Member for Harlow (Mr. Hayes), Official Report, columns 397-8, he will list the assets so far identified for sale in order to create the new charitable trust for London.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: This will be a matter for the London Residuary Body to consider.

Action on Smoking and Health

Mr. Macfarlane asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if his Department or the Sports Council provides grant-in-aid for Action on Smoking and Health; and whether any donations have been made to this organisation.

Mr. Tracey: No.

Grants (Wolverhampton)

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what grants have been allocated by his Department to Wolverhampton borough council during the last four years for housing improvement projects; and what spending constraints have been imposed on the council during the same period.

Sir George Young: The Department does not allocate grants to local authorities for housing improvements. They are given by local authorities as part of their capital expenditure programmes on housing. Each year the Secretary of State determines for individual authorities a housing investment programme allocation for capital expenditure on housing. Authorities may spend up to the allocation specified and supplement it by using the prescribed proportion of capital receipts. The Secretary of State does not specify how the available resources should be spent; it is for each authority to determine its own priorities within its housing strategy as a whole.

Allocations and expenditure by Wolverhampton borough council over the last four financial years are as follows:

Financial year	HIP allocation £ million	*Expenditure £ million	Expenditure on home improvement grants £ million
1982-83	16·649	16·603	3·635
1983-84	14·603	22·392	4·862
1984-85	12·211	25·938	4·731
1985-86	9·958	†15·239	†4·300

* Includes use of capital receipts.
† Estimate.

Inner City Areas (Grants)

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for the Environment how much money has been set aside by his Department since 1981 for grants for projects in deprived inner city areas; and whether he will take steps to encourage inner city councils to submit claims for the £100 million set aside by his Department which has so far not been claimed.

Sir George Young: A wide range of programmes sponsored by my Department and by other Departments support projects in deprived inner city areas. The allocations for the urban programme for each of the years 1981-82 to 1985-86 were £215 million, £270 million, £348 million, £348 million and £338 million. It is not the case that £100 million of these resources remains unclaimed. Resources are reallocated during the year within the urban programme itself, and to other programmes within the urban block—derelict land grant and urban development corporations—to achieve the most effective pattern of capital expenditure in the inner cities. £87 million of resources were reallocated in this way over the last three years. Only £14 million, or some 1·5 per cent. of a total resource provision of £1,034 million was unspent over the same period.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Butter

Mr. Redmond asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what tonnage of butter was stored at the EEC intervention store at Kirk Sandall each year since 1978; at what annual running cost; at what price per tonne; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gummer: The following is the information for the years in which stocks have been held.

1 January	Tonnes	Value at then current purchase price (£ per tonne)
1979	700	1,458·48
1983	110	2,110·65
1984	1,230	2,159·90
1985	2,230	1,929·58
1986	2,750	1,890·35

Storage costs at individual stores are not given on grounds of commercial confidentiality, but the average annual cost is £71·76 per tonne.

Environmentally Sensitive Areas

Dr. Marek asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what will be the length of agreements made between his Department and farmers proposed for environmentally sensitive areas; whether the payments will fully take into account inflation on a yearly basis; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Fenner: I will reply to the hon. Member as soon as possible.

Fishery Protection

Mr. Randall asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will publish a table in the Official Report showing how many boardings by the United Kingdom fishery protection seaborne vessels took place on each day in January; in which area; and what was the nationality of the vessel boarded.

Mr. Gummer: The number of boardings by United Kingdom fishery protection seaborne vessels for each day in January 1986, by ICES area and nationality of vessels boarded, are as follows:

Date	Nationality of Vessel Boarded	North Sea ICES Area			West of Scotland ICES Area		Irish Sea ICES Area	Eastern Channel ICES Area	Western Channel ICES Area	South Western Approaches ICES Area			All

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT

The Gambia

46. Mr. Nicholls asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what development assistance he is providing to the Gambia.

Mr. Raison: In the present financial year we expect to spend about £5 million on programme aid, project aid and technical co-operation. Much of the assistance is designed to complement the efforts of the International Monetary Fund and the World Bank in helping the Gambia implement an economic recovery programme. In addition we organised a meeting of donors in London last September.

Overseas Students

51. Mr. Robert B. Jones asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what was the total sum provided by his Department in 1984-85 to assist students from developing countries to obtain qualifications in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Raison: £64·7 million. About two thirds of those coming here to study were on courses leading to formal qualifications.

Debt

52. Mr. Beith asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what studies his Department is making of the efforts of debt servicing and repayment on the development of poor countries.

Mr. Raison: We regularly review all aspects of the economic problems faced by poor countries, including debt service and repayment. Debt problems are an important element in our discussions with aid recipients.

Drought (Sub-Saharan Countries)

53. Mr. Stuart Holland asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what programmes he is supporting to evaluate and alleviate the long-term effects of drought on refugees in the sub-Saharan countries.

Mr. Raison: The programmes of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees, the League of Red Cross Societies and the International Committee of the Red Cross contain elements which are designed for this purpose. We make substantial contributions to these organisations: £9·8 million so far in the financial year 1985-86 for their Africa appeals.

As agreed in 1984 at the second international conference on assistance to refugees in Africa we are also providing £5 million towards infrastructure projects.

In addition, our bilateral aid to agriculture and other natural resources in Africa is designed to mitigate the effects of drought.

Donations

Mr. Neil Hamilton asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list, for each of the last 10 years, the amount of public money received by each of the following organisations: the Catholic Fund for Overseas Development, the Catholic Institute of International Relations, Christian Aid, Christians Aware, the Church Missionary Society, the Methodist Missionary Society, One World Week, the Scottish Churches Action for World Development, the Shaftesbury Project Overseas Aid and Development Group, the United Society for the Propagation of the Gospel, War on Want and the World Development Movement.

Mr. Raison: The information sought cannot all be provided as it is not held centrally and collecting it would involve disproportionate time and cost. For the organisations listed, those grants which can be readily identified from the material assembled for preparing the overseas aid vote supply Estimates are as follows:

	Catholic Fund for Overseas Development	Catholic Institute for International Relations	Christian Aid
Outturn:
1979-80	50,000	131,718	200,000

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

Student Grant

Mr. Wigley asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will show the value in real terms in 1985-86 of the basic student grant available to undergraduate students for 1961-62.

Mr. Walden: In 1961-62, the maintenance grant for a student living outside London in lodgings was £265, and in college or hall accommodation £280. Revalued to 1985-86 prices, these rates are £1,953 and £2,063 respectively.

Religious Education

Mr. Gregory asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science how many representations he has received since publication of Her Majesty's Inspectors' report on a "Survey of Religious Education in Years 4 and 5 of the Secondary School".

Mr. Chris Patten: None.

GCSE Examination

Mr. Powley asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science when he last discussed the introduction of the GCSE with representatives of the National Association of Head Teachers.

Mr. Chris Patten: My. right hon. Friend discussed school examination matters with representatives of the National Association of Head Teachers on 26 July 1984.

National Union of Students

Mr. Canavan asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what subjects he discussed at his last meeting with the representatives of the National Union of Students.

Mr. Walden: My right hon. Friend last met NUS representatives to discuss student financial support on 3 December 1984. I last met them on 12 February to discuss the level of grant and the effect of the proposed changes in social benefits.

Schools (Independence)

Mr. Marlow asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will investigate the possibility of giving each local education authority school more financial and educational independence.

Mr. Dunn: The Education Bill currently before Parliament makes provision to remove local education authority domination of governing bodies and to strengthen the parents' voice; and to enhance the governing body's role in all aspects of a school's life and work. These more balanced governing bodies will, in partnership with the local education authority and head teacher, have significant powers in respect of finance and in determining their schools' main policies and lines of development.

Overseas Students

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make a statement on recommendations affecting his Department's responsibility contained in "Containing Crisis: the Response to Overseas Student Groups in Hardship", a copy of which has been sent to him.

Mr. Walden: My right hon. Friend is considering those recommendations in "Containing Crisis" which relate to his areas of responsibility, but is not yet able to make a statement. The report is to be discussed later this month by representatives of Government Departments and other organisations concerned at the fourth "round table" meeting on matters concerning overseas students, to be chaired by my hon. Friend the Under-Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs.

Royal College of Music

Mr. St. John-Stevas asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what proposal he is currently considering for changes in the structure of the Royal College of Music; what consultations he has had on the matter; and what representations he has received in support of such proposals.

Sir Keith Joseph: I have received proposals from the Royal Academy of Music for its future academic development involving a restructuring of courses and a reduction in the number of its students. I have held meetings about the training of talented young musicians with leading figures in the music world and with the heads of the music colleges at which these and other possible proposals were discussed.

Physics Teaching

Mr. Dalyell asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what conveniently available figures he has for the number of physics teachers' posts occupied by non-physicists.

Mr. Chris Patten: The latest available information is from a survey of a sample of maintained secondary schools in England carried out by this Department in 1984. It is estimated that there were then some 12,600 full-time teachers teaching physics. Seventy per cent. of these teachers had a higher education qualification including physics although not all had it as the main subject of a degree. The remaining 30 per cent. were responsible for 17 per cent. of tuition in the subject: the majority of these teachers had a higher education qualification in chemistry, engineering or general science.

Mr. Dalyell asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science how many graduate physicists have applied to enter teacher training colleges for 1986; and what conveniently available comparative figures he has for 1983, 1984 and 1985.

Mr. Chris Patten: By 12 February, 245 applications to PGCE physics courses commencing this autumn had been received by the graduate teacher training registry. Totals for the corresponding dates in 1983, 1984 and 1985 were 521, 538 and 345 respectively. From September 1986 through the Department's bursary scheme, a tax-free sum of £1,200 in addition to the normal grant will be paid to encourage students to enter PGCE courses in physics as well as in mathematics and CDT.

Mr. Dalyell asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what estimate he has made of the shortage of physics teachers; and on what basis his estimate was made.

Mr. Chris Patten: The most recent data supplied by local authorities indicate that 109 posts for physics teachers were unfilled in January 1985, while 11 newly trained teachers of the subject were known to be unemployed and still seeking a teaching post. The secondary staffing survey of 1984 indicated some improvement in the proportion of tuition by staff not qualified in the subject, at a time when physics slightly increased its share of the total timetable. However, the 1984 survey still showed an estimated 17 per cent. of physics tuition as being undertaken by teachers without a qualification in the subject, and the Government are aware of evidence that this proportion may be rising again. We ae also concerned about the recent shortfall in recruitment to initial training courses in physics, and the undoubted impact this will have on the output of newly trained teachers seeking posts in maintained schools.

Falling Rolls

Mr. Radice asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what financial savings have arisen from the closure of schools following from his Department's circular 2/81, "Falling Rolls and Surplus Places".

Sir Keith Joseph: The information is not collected by the Department. However 855,000 surplus places have been removed since 1975. This has enabled local education authorities to make significant savings on teaching and non-teaching costs, and an Audit Commission calculation, repriced to 1985-86, indicates that at least £25 million might be saved for every 100,000 surplus secondary school places taken out of use.

Strategic Defence Initiative

Mr. Dalyell asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make a statement on the implications of unclassified research as a basis for undergraduate and postgraduate teaching for encouragement of collaboration under the strategic defence initiative.

Mr. Walden: It is widely accepted that teaching in higher education can benefit from a close association with research. In "A Strategy for Higher Education in the 1990s" (September 1984) the University Grants Committee says:

"able young students receive a unique stimulus from being taught by those engaged in extending the frontiers of their disciplines."

Mr. Dalyell asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what discussions have been held with the Committee of Vice-Chancellors and Principals on the matter of university participation in the strategic defence initiative.

Mr. Walden: Officials in the Department have had a preliminary discussion with the Secretary General of the committee of Vice-Chancellors and Principals over the arrangements to enable universities to submit proposals for participation in SDI research projects.

Russian Language Teaching

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will list the number of courses of Russian which have been terminated at universities or polytechnics in each of the last seven academic years.

Mr. Walden: The numbers of universities and colleges of London university listed in the Universities Central Council on Admissions handbook of undergraduate courses as no longer offering courses in Russian or Russian studies, and the numbers offering new courses in each academic year since 1979-80 are as follows:

	Russian courses no longer on offer	New Russian courses
1979-80	3	—
1980-81	—	1
1981-82	3	1
1982-83	—	1
1983-84	4	—
1984-85	—	—
1985-86	2	—

There was no change in the numbers of polytechnic courses in Russian during this period.

Scientific Research

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will list the number of applications which have been submitted to his Department during the last seven years for scientific research; and what proportion of such applications has been rejected.

Mr. Walden: Educational research apart, the Department does not directly fund scientific research in the way implied. Thus no such applications, other than for funding of educational research, have been submitted to the Department over the past seven years.

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what resources he intends to make available to universities and polytechnics to enable them to raise their levels of provision for modern equipment in scientific laboratories.

Mr. Walden: For the universities funded through the University Grants Committee, my right hon. Friend announced on 12 November, at columns 107-108, that in addition to the £4 million made available in the current year, he would be providing £30 million over the three years 1986-87 to 1988-89 to increase the amount available for the improvement of equipment in selected branches of research. This is on top of the general equipment grant for the universities, which for the academic year 1986-87 will be £95·1 million, the separate provision for equipment for the engineering and technology programme—about £9 million over the financial years 1985-86 to 1987-88—and provision by the Computer Board of £15·2 million in the 1986-87 financial year.

For the polytechnics, it is for the relevant local education authority to determine within the total prescribed expenditure allocation for all capital spending heads in the authority how much should be spent on FE equipment. However, an additional £2·3 million is being made available over 1986-87 and 1987-88 to provide for the associated equipment costs of the eight polytechnics participating in the engineering and technology programme.

Drugs

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what consultations he proposes to have with local education authorities and with representatives of the National Association of Head Teachers about establishing in school curricula long-term anti-drugs education programmes.

Mr. Dunn: I shall be meeting representatives from the National Association of Head Teachers later this week to discuss its recent memorandum on drug abuse and other issues arising.

The Health Education Council is preparing curriculum material on drug misuse which will become available for teachers and teacher trainers later this year. Local authority staff, appointed with funding from education support grant, will also be well placed to develop local programmes.

Politically Controversial Issues

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what representations he has received in response to the draft statement of principles and draft circulars to local authority associations, teachers' organisations, churches and voluntary bodies on how teaching staff should approach politically controversial issues in schools and colleges.

Mr. Chris Patten: Consultation was initiated only as recently as 4 February: it is therefore too early for the great majority of those consulted to reply.

Midday Supervision (Wolverhampton)

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what representations have been made to his Department by the Wolverhampton education authority about supervision of school pupils at midday; and what response he has given to those representations.

Mr. Dunn: No representations have been received from the Wolverhampton education authority.

Engineering and Technology

Mr. Bright asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what additional assistance is being made available by industry to the universities and polytechnics included in the engineering and technology programme.

Sir Keith Joseph: The Government are heartened by the impressive response of industry to the engineering and technology programme. An estimated £24 million of costed assistance related to provision under this programme is being made available directly by industry —and in addition there is evidence of other help which has not been costed. Particular forms of assistance include donation of equipment; loan of staff for part-time teaching; additional student sponsorships; and training places in firms.

In the light of the industrial support which has been forthcoming, the Government has now confirmed earlier conditional allocations to all universities and polytechnics in phase 2 of the programme.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Anglo-Irish Co-operative Action

Sir John Biggs-Davison asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what co-operative action in both parts of the island of Ireland, other than between the Royal Ulster Constabulary and the Garda Siochana, have been taken in accordance with article 2*(b)* of the Anglo-Irish agreement.

Mr. Scott: Apart from co-operative action taken between the Royal Ulster Constabulary and the Garda Siochana, no such action has been taken in accordance with article 2*(b)*.

Local Authorities and Public Bodies

Sir John Biggs-Davison asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on the effect of the operation on local authorities and other public bodies of the current abstention from participation of the Unionist parties.

Mr. Needham: 18 district councils with Unionist majorities have adjourned in protest at the Anglo-Irish agreement and have delegated certain functions to the clerks. So far this has caused no major disruption to local authority services. However, it appears that these councils may not meet to make a rate for 1986-87. Failure to do so would mean that from 1 April 1986 the councils would not have enough money to ensure the delivery of local authority services.

Public bodies have not been seriously affected by the abstention of Unionist members.

Anglo-Irish Intergovernmental Conference

Mr. Bell asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland (1) when he proposes to establish a working group of officials to consider the machinery for further discussion of legal matters, including the administration of justice, referred to at the Anglo-Irish Intergovernmental Conference on 11 December 1985;

(2) what representations have been made to the Government of the Republic of Ireland on policy aspects of extradition and related matters as referred to at the Anglo-Irish Intergovernmental Conference dated 10 January.

Mr. Scott: At the meeting my right hon. friend the Secretary of State, my right hon. and learned Friend the Attorney-General, my hon. and learned Friend the Solicitor-General and I had with the then Irish Minister for Justice and the Irish Attorney-General on 13 February, further work by officials on matters of mutual concern in accordance with the terms of article 8 of the agreement was authorised. These include measures relating to extradition; the possible harmonisation of areas of the criminal law; and the search for measures to enhance public confidence in the administration of justice.

Anglo-Irish Agreement

Mr. Bell asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what representations have been received from the international community in support of the Anglo-Irish agreement; and what specific offers have been made for financial assistance for economic development in Northern Irish areas which have suffered from the consequences of the recent instability.

Mr. Scott: Following the signing of the Anglo-Irish agreement on 15 November last year, public messages of welcome were sent by the Governments of the United States, Australia, New Zealand, Canada, Japan, France, Germany, Spain, Italy, Holland, Belgium, Luxembourg, Sweden, Denmark and Greece and by the European Commission, the Committee of Ministers of the Council of Europe and the United Nations.

While United Kingdom and Irish Republic officials have been involved in discussions with representatives from various parts of the international community, no formal proposals have yet been made.

Police Complaints Procedure

Mr. Bell asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will publish the responses he has received on the police complaints procedure, as referred to in the Anglo-Irish Intergovernmental Conference; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Scott: It is not our normal practice to publish responses received in respect of consultation papers. We do not intend to do so in the case of the paper on the reform of the police complaints procedures. Full account will be taken of the views of all those who responded to the consultation paper and other interested parties, in drafting the necessary legislation. We intend to publish a proposal for a draft Order in Council later this year. Interested parties will have a further opportunity to comment on the Government's proposals at that stage.

Gaelic Street Names

Mr. Bell asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland when he proposes to reach a decision on proposals to introduce Gaelic street names into Northern Ireland in accordance with proposals put to him during the course of the Anglo-Irish Intergovernmental Conference on 11 December 1985.

Mr. Scott: Views and proposals on the position of the Irish language in Northern Ireland were put forward by the Irish side at the Anglo-Irish Intergovernmental Conference on 10 January 1986. We are considering them. We shall also consider the views of other interested parties expressed outside the conference.

Mr. Bell asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what representations have been made by outside bodies concerning the proposals to introduce Gaelic street names into Northern Ireland.

Mr. Scott: The Government have received representations on the use of Irish street names from various individuals and groups including Newry and Mourne district council, Derry city council and the West Belfast committee of Glor na nGael.

Disabled Persons

Mr. Wigley asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland whether he is undertaking consultations with appropriate bodies in the Province concerning the possible application of the provisions of the Disabled Persons (Service, Consultation and Representation) Bill to Northern Ireland; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Needham: No. It would not be appropriate for Northern Ireland to be included in the scope of this Bill.

Harland and Wolff

Mr. Frank Field asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what subsidy his Department was asked to make when Harland and Wolff tendered for an order for an air training ship and for British Petroleum's single well oil production system; and how these figures compared with the size of the subsidy actually paid in each case.

Dr. Boyson: No subsidy was either sought or provided for the aviation training ship. Details of assistance for the British Petroleum single well oil production system order are regarded as commercially confidential.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Income Tax

Mr. Forman asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what would be the estimated cost to the Exchequer in a full year of changing the income tax system so that there was a starting rate of 25 per cent. on the first £1,000 of taxable income and the rates were then set at 30 per cent., 35 per cent., 40 per cent., 45 per cent. and 50 per cent., respectively, with the rates above 30 per cent. being reached at the threshold of taxable income currently associated with that of the 40 per cent., 45 per cent., 50 per cent., and 55 per cent. rates, respectively.

Mr. Moore: The direct revenue cost would be about £1·8 billion in a full year at 1986-87 levels of income, compared with an indexed income tax regime.

Bank of England

Mr. Cohen asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer on what basis he (a) makes statements in the House and (b) answers parliamentary questions on activities of the Bank of England in giving guarantees and making loans from funds other than those provided by Parliament; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ian Stewart: The Bank of England gives guarantees and makes loans in the day to day course of its ordinary banking business, relying on its own resources. Any questions are a matter for the Bank of England, not my right hon. Friend the Chancellor. As I indicated to the hon. Member on 25 November 1985 at columns 466-7, it is for the Bank of England to determine its policy on answering such questions, constrained among other things by customer confidentiality.

Channel Tunnel

Mr. Moate asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the implications of the decision to proceed with a fixed Channel link for his policy towards the creation of enterprise zones in Kent and in particular, the Isle of Sheppey.

Mr. MacGregor: The Government will be prepared to consider any evidence that action needs to be taken in relation to employment in particular locations in Kent. However, the link is unlikely to affect employment adversely in Kent as a whole.

Takeaway Food (VAT)

Mr. Irving asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what recent representations he has received from the takeaway food industry since the imposition of value added tax; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Brooke: I have recently met two deputations led by hon. Members to discuss the effect of VAT on takeaway food and a small number of letters has also been received.

Mr. Irving asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will estimate the effect of imposing value added tax on the takeaway food industry; and what has been the revenue from this taxation to the latest date for which figures are available.

Mr. Brooke: It is not possible to isolate and evaluate separately the effects of imposing value added tax on hot takeaway food and drink from those of other changes, such as trends in consumers' tastes, fluctuations in the price of raw materials, and the consequences of competition in the industry.

Value added tax paid in respect of that takeaway food and drink is not separately identified in Customs and Excise accounts, nor is it possible to produce a reliable estimate from consumers expenditure data, since the latest survey information relates only to 1984, when expenditure patterns were distorted by the immediate effects of imposing value added tax.

Unemployment (Costs)

Mr. Woodall asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will give an estimate of the average cost to the Exchequer, in the current financial year 1985-86, of the extra unemployed persons, taking into account the cost of social security benefits and loss of revenue from direct and indirect taxation.

Mr. MacGregor: The estimated cost of social security benefits paid in respect of unemployment in 1985-86 is £6,650 million, to an estimated 2,735 thousand beneficiaries—about £2,400 per beneficiary. It is not possible to estimate the tax revenue forgone.

Companies (Employee Ownership)

Mr. Murphy asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what recent representations he has received on the further encouragement of wider employee ownership in companies via incentive schemes; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Moore: We have received a variety of representations. They mainly relate to particular aspects of the measures the Government have introduced to encourage wider employee share ownership, which have been warmly welcomed.

Public Spending

Mr. Forman asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will set out in tabular form the change in the percentage shares of public spending in the United Kingdom by economic category from 1978-79 to 1985-86 and as projected to 1988-1989.

Mr. MacGregor: The table expresses the figures by economic category shown in table 2.10 of the 1986 public expenditure White Paper, as percentages of the planning total excluding the reserve, central privatisation proceeds and the adjustments which cannot be allocated to economic category. Figures prior to 1980-81 are not readily available.

Living Standards

Sir Adam Butler asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the amount by which the person currently on average earnings has changed his standard of living, measured by the percentage increase in earnings over the increase in retail prices, since May 1979.

Mr. Lawson: After adjusting for the change in retail prices, average earnings increased by 14 per cent. between May 1979 and December 1985. When changes in income tax and national insurance contributions are also taken into account, the increase in real average earnings after tax was 16 per cent.

Personal Taxation

Mr. Wrigglesworth asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what proportion of tax units (households) are paying, less income tax and national insurance contributions, as a proportion of gross earnings in 1985-86 than in 1978-79

Mr. Moore: I shall let the hon. Member have a reply as soon as possible.

Superannuation (Reckonable Service)

Mr. Stott asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will publish an actuarial statement of the cost of implementing the reckonability of former unestablished service in the General Post Office, prior to the 1969 Act, for superannuation purposes.

Mr. Brooke: Unestablished service in the Post Office after 14 July 1949 reckons in full for superannuation purposes. An estimate of the cost of allowing unestablished service before that date to reckon in full, including the cost of arrears of pension and increased lump sums, is not available. If no arrears of pension were paid to those who have already retired and there is no change in the basis of calculating lump sum retirement benefits, it has been estimated that the total cost over 25 years would be of the order of £70 million. Such an improvement would, however, have to be extended to the Civil Service and costs would then rise to the order of £550 million over 25 years.

Personal Taxation

Mr. Meacher asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what has been the level of tax reliefs granted for life assurance, mortgage interest, approved pension schemes, employers' contributions to approved pension schemes, retirement annuity and age allowance for each year since 1979; and what has been the annual percentage increase in each case and the total percentage increase 1979-85 in each case.

Mr. Moore [pursuant to his reply, 15 January 1986, c. 593]: The information is as follows. The figures represent the reduction in tax liabilities resulting from the existence of the reliefs.

* Life assurance premium relief was abolished for contracts made on or after 14 March 1984. Costs are net of the public expenditure element.

† The former option mortgage scheme was subsumed under the arrangements for giving mortgage interest relief at source (MIRAS) from April 1983. The 1983-84 cost is not therefore directly comparable with that for 1982-83. The percentage increase from 1978-79 to 1985-86 is based on the combined cost of mortgage interest relief and option mortgages. The cost of the option mortgage scheme was as follows:

	£ million
1978-79	148
1979-80	189
1980-81	228
1981-82	262
1982-83	306
1983-84	‡17

‡ For claims in respect of earlier years.

‖ Composite estimates published in the relevant public expenditure White Paper on the basis set out in the Inland Revenue's note of February 1978 to the General Sub-Committee of the Expenditure Committee (second report 1977-79, appendix 15). A comparable estimate for 1985-86 is not available. This approach to the calculation of the cost of pension scheme reliefs included the cost of relief for employees' contributions and funds' investment income net of tax paid on pensions received plus tax in excess of the basic rate on the estimated income element of pensions received. The 1984-85 estimate of cost on this basis is 189 per cent. higher than the 1978-79 figure.

Costs of three of the components of pensions reliefs for 1983-84 onwards are shown below. The total cost of tax reliefs for pension schemes cannot be calculated by summing the costs of the individual reliefs since this would imply a considerable degree of multiple taxation.

	1983-84 £ million	1984-85 £ million	1985-86 £ million
Employees' contributions to funded pension schemes	1,100	1,250	1,400
Pension funds' investment income (excluding capital gains for which no reliable estimate is available)	2,250	2,500	3,500
Lump sums on retirement (assuming relief at the basic rate)	650	900	1,000

¶ Calendar year series. These estimates are particularly tentative and are on the basis that employers' contributions are not taxed as a benefit in kind of the employee. The 1984-85 estimate is 62 per cent. higher than the 1978-79 figure.

● Estimates for 1978-79, 1979-80 and 1985-86 are the costs of tax relief on retirement annuity premiums. For 1980-81 to 1984-85, estimates on a comparable basis are not readily available.

■ Costs of the excess of age allowances over and above the corresponding single person's and married man's allowances.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Turkey

Mr. Wigley asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has made, or plans to make, to the Turkish Prime Minister, Mr. Turgut Ozal, concerning the fate of 1,619 missing Greek Cypriots who were taken prisoners following the Turkish invasion of Cyprus in 1974.

Mr. Eggar: The United Nations intercommunal committee on missing persons in Cyprus offers the best prospect of helpng those affected by this tragic problem which involves both communities in Cyprus. Separate representations would cut across the committee's delicate and difficult task.

Badreddine Children

Mr. Cartwright asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what efforts have been made to seek to secure the return of the four Badreddine children who are currently being detained against their will by their father in Tunisia, in breach of English High Court orders.

Mr. Eggar: The existence of the High Court orders has been brought to the attention of the Tunisian authorities and Her Majesty's consul has discussed the case with the Director of Consular Affairs in the Tunisian Ministry of Foreign Affairs. The limitations on the action we can take in cases of this type were fully described in the Adjournment debate of the 20 of December 1985 at columns 730-732.

Mr. Cartwright asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether he has been in contact with President Bourghiba of Tunisia concerning the return of the four Badgreddine children who are currently being detained against their will by their father in Tunisia, in breach of English High Court orders.

Mr. Eggar: No.

Cambodian Embassy

Mr. Wheeler asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is the diplomatic status of the premises formerly occupied by the embassy of Cambodia at Avenue road, St. John's Wood in the City of Westminster; how much is owed in lieu of rates to the City of Westminster; and who is responsible for the payment of the outstanding sum.

Mr. Eggar: The premises are not currently used for the purposes of any diplomatic mission. They therefore enjoy neither inviolability nor diplomatic rating relief.

We understand that the City of Westminster has been unable to collect £40,561 outstanding in respect of rates because they have been unable to prove to the satisfaction of the courts that anybody is in rateable occupation. Rates are the responsibility of the occupier of the premises.

We have under active consideration proposals for legislation to control in exceptional circumstances the acquisition and disposal of diplomatic premises in London.

Departmental Policies

Mr. Soames asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the objectives of his Department's policies for the rest of this Parliament.

Sir Geoffrey Howe: The chief aim of the United Kingdom's foreign policy will remain to protect our country's security and maintain peace through our membership of the North Atlantic Alliance. At the same time, we shall work for a more constructive relationship between the West and the Soviet Union and Eastern Europe, and for concrete progress in arms control. In the enlarged European Community, of which we hold the Presidency from July-December 1986, we shall place special emphasis on the completion of the Common Market, reform of the common agricultural policy, the preservation of the open trading system and the strengthening of political co-operation. We shall fully discharge our undertaking to the people of the Falkland Islands, while continuing to seek more normal relations with Argentina. We shall continue to implement the Sino-British joint declaration on Hong Kong. With our European and Commonwealth partners, we shall work for peaceful and fundamental change in South Africa. We shall play our part in long-term development and famine relief in the poorer countries, and in combating the worldwide scourge of terrorism. We shall support all practical moves for peace and stability in regions of conflict, including the efforts of the United Nations of which we remain a committed member.

Commercial Counsellors

Mr. George Robertson asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs which British embassies in Warsaw pact countries have commercial counsellors; and, where there is none, when their last one was in post.

Mr. Eggar: There is a full-time commercial counsellor in Her Majesty's embassy, Moscow. In other Warsaw pact countries commercial work is handled at first secretary level, the commercial counsellors having been withdrawn from Bucharest, East Berlin and Warsaw in 1982 and from Prague, Sofia and Budapest more than ten years ago.

Ministerial Visits

Mr. George Robertson asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list in the Official Report all ministerial visits to European Community countries since May 1979, except European Community and North Atlantic Treaty Organisation ministerial meetings, giving dates of the visits and the name of the Minister concerned.

Mr. Eggar: Details of all ministerial visits to European countries are not kept in a readily available form. They are currently being compiled as from 1983 when records were started and I shall write to the hon. Member shortly. In the meantime, details of visits by Foreign and Commonwealth Office Ministers, in the diplomatic wing, since May 1979, are as follows:

Geneva Convention

Mr. George Robertson asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he expects the United Kingdom to sign the 1977 additional protocols to the Geneva convention of 1949.

Mr. Eggar: The United Kingdom signed the additional protocols to the Geneva conventions in 1977.

Falkland Islands

Mr. Wallace asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether he will estimate the total volume catch of fish for the periods (a) January to December 1984 and (b) January to December 1985 within a 200-mile zone around the Falkland Islands.

Mr. Eggar: The best available estimates of the total catch of fish within a 200-mile zone around the Falkland Islands in 1984 and 1985 are respectively, 349,000 and 437,000 tonnes.

Mr. Wallace asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether he will estimate the total volume catch of fish for the periods (a) January to December 1984 and (b) January to December 1985 within the Falkland Islands protection zone.

Mr. Eggar: The best available estimates of the total catch of fish within the Falkland Islands protection zone in 1984 and 1985 are, respectively, 241,000 and 302,000 tonnes.

Mr. Wallace asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will publish a list of nations whose fishing vessels were reported as having been fishing within the Falkland Islands protection zone during 1985.

Mr. Eggar: During 1985, fishing vessels of the following fleets were sighted within the Falkland Islands protection zone and believed to be fishing (in alphabetical order): Bulgaria, German Democratic Republic, Japan, Republic of Korea, Poland, Soviet Union, Spain, Taiwan. There were also a few other isolated sightings.

Haiti

Mr. Parry asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on Her Majesty's Government's relations with the new administration in Haiti.

Mr. Eggar: We have no diplomatic staff resident in Haiti and Her Majesty's ambassador to the country resides in Jamaica. A member of his staff was in Haiti from 30 January until 20 February, when he was in close contact with the British community. He had a brief courtesy meeting with the newly appointed Minister of Foreign Affairs on 13 February in company with our locally appointed Haitian vice-consul.

Foreign Nationals (Representations)

Mr. McGuire asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will detail the criteria he uses to decide whether he should make representations to a foreign country on behalf of foreign nationals who have no connection whatsoever with the United Kingdom; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: We make such representations where there are compelling humanitarian or human rights grounds and where such representations are appropriate and likely to be effective.

Iran-Iraq War

Mr. Alex Carlile asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what recent reports he has received from Her Majesty's ambassadors regarding the Iran-Iraq war; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Renton: We receive regular reports from Her Majesty's ambassador in Baghdad and the acting head of the British interests section in Tehran. We deplore the latest escalation in the fighting between Iran and Iraq, which has resulted in further tragic loss of life, and hope that both sides will heed the United Nations Secretary-General's appeal of 14 February which called for a cessation of hostilities so that negotiations aimed at reaching a comprehensive settlement might take place.

Iran

Mr. Alex Carlile asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what recent representation Her Majesty's Government have made concerning the use of torture against their own citizens by the Government of Iran.

Mr. Renton: We wholly condemn the use of torture wherever and whenever it may occur. The United Kingdom co-sponsored the UN resolution in December which called on Iran to respond to the allegations of torture. We have made no recent representations to the Iranian Government specifically on torture, but we do take every suitable opportunity to raise human rights matters with them.

South Atlantic Islands Development Corporation Ltd

Dr. Marek asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what information he has as to the profit the South Atlantic Islands Development Corporation Ltd of Bermuda has made out of its trading concessions with Tristan da Cunha in the last five years; and whether Her Majesty's Government have provided any funds for the company.

Mr. Eggar: We understand that the gross profits of the South Atlantic Islands Development Corporation have been as follows:

	US$
1981	405,130
1982	1,108,199
1983	1,639,090
1984	1,102,036
1985	1,484,948

We have not provided any funds to the company.

Table Bay Marine

Dr. Marek asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what information he has as to the profit Table Bay Marine of Capetown has made out of its trading operations with Tristan da Cunha in the last five years; and whether Her Majesty's Government have provided any funds to the company.

Mr. Eggar: We are informed that Table Bay Marine of Capetown does not keep records of profit/loss derived from its Tristan da Cunha trading operations separate from those of its other operations. However we understand that the company has received agency commission on purchases undertaken on behalf of the Government of Tristan da Cunha, as follows:

	Rand
1980-81	21,414·67
1981-82	32,171·03
1982-83	32,909·13
1983-84	30,060·50
1984-85	40,526·82

We have not provided any funds to the company.

Strategic Defence Initiative

Mr. Dalyell asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether in discussions of the European Eureka programme, he has discussed the implications of British involvement in the strategic defence initiative.

Mr. Eggar: The implications of the United Kingdom's involvement in SDI have not been discussed in Eureka meetings that my right hon. and learned Friend has attended with European Foreign Ministers. Eureka is concerned only with civil projects. It is accepted that SDI participation is a matter for each country to decide alone.

Philippines

Mr. Dubs asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on Her Majesty's Government's policy towards their continued recognition of the Government of the Philippines in the light of the conduct of the recent elections in that country.

Mrs. Chalker: We recognise states, not Governments. Together with our European partners, we have expressed deep concern to the Philippines authorities about developments arising from the presidential elections, and in particular about the evidence of fraud and violence, and have called for an impartial investigation. We shall continue with our partners to support the commitment of the Filipino people to democratic values.

Mr. Dubs asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether Her Majesty's Government are to be represented at the forthcoming inauguration of President Marcos of the Philippines; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Chalker: There is no question of British participation in this ceremony, if indeed it is to take place at all.

EMPLOYMENT

News International (Work Permits)

Mr. Leighton asked the Paymaster General how many work permits he has authorised for foreign nationals to work for News International; and what criteria he has used.

Mr. Lang: In the last 12 months, one work permit has been issued—on 19 December 1985. The conditions of the work permit scheme were satisfied: permits are granted in respect of employment requiring professional qualifications, administrative responsibility or high technical skills, for which resident labour is not available.

News International Printing Plant, Wapping

Mr. Evans asked the Paymaster General how many visits have been made by Health and Safety Executive inspectors to the News Group Newspapers Limited additional printing facility at Wapping in each of the last four weeks.

Mr. Lang: One, on 18 February 1986.

Mr. Evans asked the Paymaster General if he has any plans to discuss the accident rate at the News Group Newspapers Limited additional printing facility at Wapping with the chairman of the Health and Safety Executive.

Mr. Lang: No.

Mr. Evans asked the Paymaster General if he will obtain a report from the chairman of the Health and Safety Executive of how many reportable accidents have occurred at the News Group Newspapers Limited additional printing facility at Wapping in each of the last four weeks; and if he will make a statement

Mr. Lang: One accident at the Wapping premises has been reported to the Health and Safety Executive in the last four weeks. The accident occurred on 3 February.

Labour Statistics

Mr. Nellist asked the Paymaster General what was the number of job vacancies registered at Coventry at the latest available date; and how many of those were (a) part-time, (b) situated outside the Coventry travel-to-work area and (c) funded by community programme, or other special employment measures.

Mr. Lang: The number of vacancies, excluding those funded by special employment measures, registered at Coventry jobcentre remaining unfilled on 3 January 1986 was 729, of which 72 were part-time—i.e., for less than 30 hours per week. In addition, there were 240 unfilled vacancies funded by special employment measures, of which 197 involved work for less than 35 hours per week.

The exact location of vacancies relating to travel-to-work area boundaries could be established only at disproportionate cost, although it is likely that the majority of vacancies registered at Coventry jobcentre are in the Coventry and Hinckley travel-to-work area.

Mr. Nellist asked the Paymaster General if he will give for Coventry the latest unemployment figures, broken down by age, sex and duration.

Mr. Lang: Following is the requested information, which is available in the library.

Mr. Terry Fields asked the Paymaster General what have been the Government's annual estimates, from 1979 to 1985, of the level of unemployment.

Mr. Lang: The following information is in the Library. The table shows annual average figures for the United Kingdom. They are adjusted for discontinuities and relate to unemployed claimants, excluding school leavers.

1980	1,487,100
1981	2,307,300
1982	2,669,000
1983	2,912,100
1984	3,046,800
1985	3,166,700

Youth Training Scheme

Mr. Kirkwood asked the Paymaster General if he will issue to YTS trainees a contract of traineeship with legal status.

Mr. Lang: Proposals for a training agreement for all YTS trainees were agreed by the Youth Training Board on 11 February 1986 and will be put before the Manpower Services Commission on 27 February 1986. These proposals would oblige managing agents to give each trainee an agreement conforming to a framework to be laid down by the commission. The managing agent could give this contractual status if he so chose.

Health and Safety (Letters)

Mr. Michie asked the Paymaster General what instructions the Health and Safety Executive has given to its inspectors on the passing to safety representatives of copies of letters sent to employers following a visit; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lang: The Health and Safety Commission has given guidance to enforcing authorities on the provision of information by inspectors and other staff to employees or their representatives. The principle followed is that safety representatives should have access to appropriate information which will enable them to carry out their functions.

Accidents (Power Stations)

Mr. Teddy Taylor asked the Paymaster General how many notifiable accidents and deaths, respectively, were recorded over the most recent annual period for which figures are available in the operation, respectively, of coal-fired, oil-fired and nuclear power stations; and how many were notified in respect of coal mining operations.

Mr. Trippier: I shall reply to my hon. Friend as soon as possible.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Members' Pensions

Mr. Robert Sheldon asked the Lord Privy Seal what would be the cost of (a) doubling and (b) trebling the statutory entitlement of former Members of the House from the House of Commons Members Fund for those aged over 65 years, over 70 years and over 75 years, respectively.

Mr. Biffen: The annual extra costs of (a) doubling and (b) trebling the payments at present made to former Members of the House from the House of Commons Members' Fund under the provisions of the House of Commons Members' Fund and Parliamentary Pensions Act 1981 for those over 65 years, over 70 years and over 75 years, respectively, would be as follows:

	Over 65 years £	Over 70 years £	Over 75 years £
Doubling payments	76,000	70,000	51,000
Trebling payments	152,000	140,000	102,000

Medical Facilities

Mr. Beaumont-Dark asked the Lord Privy Seal if he will describe the medical facilities available in the House at all times when the House is sitting.

Mr. Biffen: Details of the Palace of Westminster's medical facilities and procedures to be followed in an emergency are contained in the leaflet issued jointly by the Serjeant at Arms and Black Rod. I have asked for a copy to be sent to my hon. Friend.

Mr. Beaumont-Dark asked the Lord Privy Seal how many staff working in the House, including security staff and police, are trained in the use of first aid and in particular in the use of oxygen equipment.

Mr. Biffen: Forty-seven members of staff and 139 police and security officers are trained in first aid, including resuscitation techniques. With the exception of the nursing sister, their training does not include the use of oxygen equipment.

SCOTLAND

Dementia

Mr. Ron Brown asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he has recently received representations from Scottish Action on Dementia; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John MacKay: I refer the hon. Member to the reply which my right hon. and learned Friend gave the right hon. Member for Clydesdale (Dame J. Hart) on 12 February, 1986 at column 473.

Test Drilling

Mr. Donald Stewart asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he has any outstanding requests from the United Kingdom Atomic Energy Authority for permission to carry out test drilling in Scotland.

Mr. Rifkind: Any application for planning permission for test drilling would be submitted to the planning authority for the area concerned. I am not aware of any current applications. If planning permission were refused an appeal might be lodged with me but no appeals by the authority relating to test drilling are outstanding.

Colleges of Education

Mr. Foulkes asked the Secretary of State for Scotland on what evidence the Scottish Tertiary Education Advisory Council bases its recommendations that three colleges of education be closed.

Mr. Allan Stewart: The arguments underlying the council's recommendations on the colleges of education, and the factors taken into account, are set out in paragraphs 5.27 to 5.39 of the council's report (Cmnd. 9676).

Mr. Foulkes asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what factors he will take account of in deciding on the Scottish Tertiary Education Advisory Council's recommendations on colleges of education; and how important economic consideration will be.

Mr. Allan Stewart: As my right hon. Friend the Member for Ayr (Mr. Younger) indicated on 9 December 1985 at columns 460-461 in answer to a question by my hon. Friend the Member for Cunninghame North (Mr. Corrie) the Government have invited comments on the council's report and will wish to consider these before decisions are taken on the council's various recommendations. With regard to those recommendations relating to the colleges of education, my right hon. and learned Friend will have in mind the need to reach decisions, in the light of comments submitted, which are appropriate on educational grounds and at the same time cost-effective.

Leukaemia

Mr. Foulkes asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will collect the information and publish a list of the incidence of leukemia and myloid leukaemia for each convenient area of Scotland and details of any significant variations.

Mr. John MacKay: Data on all forms of cancer, including leukaemia, are collected routinely by the cancer registries, and are published. Detailed statistics on leukaemia were presented as evidence to the Black inquiry and were published. Further work to validate and update these statistics is expected to be completed by the late spring. These results will also be published.

Mr. Foulkes asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what representations he has received regarding the further analysis of information on incidence of leukaemia in the south-west of Scotland and the case for a systematic analysis of up-to-date data for the whole of Scotland; what action he has taken as a result; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John MacKay: Several such representations have been received. As the hon. Member knows, a systematic analysis of leukaemia statistics is taking place at present and it is intended that the results will be published.

Radioactive Discharges

Mr. Foulkes asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will set up a comprehensive inquiry into the discharge of radioactive materials from all sources in Scotland, and sources outwith Scotland which affect Scotland, and of possible links with the incidence of leukaemia and other cancers and related matters.

Mr. John MacKay: No. As the hon. Member knows the statistics on leukaemia are already being examined in detail. Where rates are significantly in excess of those expected and in areas where there could be possible links with radiation the relevant information is being referred to the Committee on the Medical Aspects of Radiation in the Environment.

Sellafield

Mr. Foulkes asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what action he has taken in relation to the Scottish data following the disclosure that the Sellafield discharge information given to the Black committee was incorrect.

Mr. John MacKay: The Committee on the Medical Aspects of Radiation in the Environment is already considering the implications for the conclusions reached by the Black inquiry of new information now available on Sellafield discharges.

Teachers

Mr. Foulkes asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the estimated demand for teachers in each of the next 10 years in primary and secondary schools in Scotland on which the Scottish Tertiary Education Advisory Council's recommendations are based; and what is the basis of the calculation of the estimated demand in each case.

Mr. Allan Stewart: As is noted in the footnote to paragraph 5.39 of the report of the Scottish Tertiary Education Advisory Council on its review of higher education in Scotland (Cmnd. 9676), the council had available to it the projections contained in appendix 3 to the Comptroller and Auditor General's report "Scottish Education Department: Control of Further Education Establishment" (HC 424).

The Scottish Education Department's projections of the requirements for trained teachers are based on a number of factors, including projections of the future population of primary and secondary school pupils, assumptions about school staffing consistent with the Government's public expenditure plans and estimates of the numbers of teachers leaving the profession.

Tourism

Mr. Michael Forsyth asked the Secretary of State for Scotland whether he has now completed his consideration of the Scottish Affairs Committee's recommendation for the transfer of tourist promotion activities from the Highlands and Islands Development Board to the Scottish Tourist Board; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John MacKay: I have nothing to add to the answer given to the hon. Member for Inverness, Nairn and Lochaber (Sir R. Johnston) on 4 February at column 97.

Scottish Adult Basic Education Unit

Mr. Millan asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what grants he has paid to the Scottish adult basic education unit for each of the last five years.

Mr. Rifkind: Grants paid to the Scottish adult basic education unit for each of the last five years are as follows:

Year	Recurrent grant £	Supplementary grant £
1981-82	120,000	2,647
1982-83	130,000	10,000
1983-84	152,000	7,000
1984-85	160,650	—
1985-86	165,500	—

Mr. Millan asked the Secretary of State for Scotland whether he will ensure that there is no reduction in the real value of the funds available to the Scottish adult basic education unit for 1986-87, compared to the current year.

Mr. Rifkind: In 1986-87 the current level of grant paid to the Scottish adult basic education unit (£165,500) will be aggregated with the current level of grant paid to the Scottish Community Education Council (£356,000) which has been responsible for managing the unit since 1983. The total grant to the council in 1986-87 will be £542,000, an overall increase of almost 4 per cent.

Corpach Sawmill

Mr. Michael Forsyth asked the Secretary of State for Scotland, pursuant to his answer of 5 February, Official Report, column 167, about projects considered successful by the Highlands and Islands Development Board, if he will give details of the current status of (a) the sawmill at Corpach, which was shown to the Scottish Affairs Committee by the board and (b) of the other projects drawn to the Committee's attention.

Mr. John MacKay: (a) The sawmill at Corpach is continuing in operation under the new owners, Thomas Smith and Sons.

(b) I have nothing to add to the answer given to my hon. Friend on 5 February 1986 at column 167.

Consultative Committee on the Curriculum

Mrs. McCurley asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement about the future of the Consultative Committee on the Curriculum.

Mr. Rifkind: As I announced on 7 February 1986 in answer to a question by my hon. Friend the Member for Cunninghame, North (Mr. Corrie) at column 276-7, the Consultative Committee on the Curriculum is one of a number of bodies on which a review is currently being carried out as part of the Government's programme of regular reviews of non-departmental public bodies. This review will have implications for the CCC's remit, structure and priorities. In particular it will have to consider the means of ensuring that in future the pace of curricular change is more closely related to the ability of the education service to deliver it effectively. I have therefore decided that the appointment of a new Consultative Committee on the Curriculum, which is due in August 1986, should be deferred for a year until August 1987 in order to allow any changes arising from the review to be implemented before the new body takes office. I am concerned moreover that a new CCC should secure at the outset the full support of the teaching profession for its work and believe that postponement of the appointment of a new CCC will help to ensure this.

My Department is therefore writing today to the chairman and members of the present CCC inviting them to continue in office in order to continue and complete current work. I am very grateful to the present membership for the valuable work done by the CCC during its current term of office and hope that they will be prepared to serve for a further year.

TRANSPORT

National Bus Company

5. Mr. Wood asked the Secretary of State for Transport what progress has been made towards the sale of National Bus Company subsidiary companies.

Mr. Ridley: The NBC is preparing some 65 local subsidiaries for sale. Over 50 local management teams are interested in buying their subsidiaries, and expressions of interest have also been received from third parties. The NBC will be getting on with disposals as quickly as possible.

M25 (Service Areas)

13. Mr. Warren asked the Secretary of State for Transport what action he is taking to seek to expedite the provision of motorway service areas on the M25; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ridley: I aim to establish four service areas as soon as practicable, at South Mimms in the north, Thurrock to the east, Clacket Lane near Westerham to the south and Iver to the west. These proposals are at various stages.

Civil Aircraft (Safety)

16. Mr. Favell asked the Secretary of State for Transport when he last discussed with the Civil Aviation Authority the structural safety of civil aircraft.

Mr. Michael Spicer: The structural safety of civil aircraft is the statutory responsibility of the Civil Aviation Authority, which is advised by the Airworthiness Requirements Board. The authority keeps me informed of significant safety issues.

23. Mr. David Marshall asked the Secretary of State for Transport when the Civil Aviation Authority expects that the additional inspections specified in the answer of 7 February, Official Report, column 272 relating to cracks in jumbo jets will be completed; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Spicer: The civil Aviation Authority has informed me that the initial inspection of the aircraft skin showed that no United Kingdom registered aircraft were cracked. Subsequently, as a result of additional inspections, cracks requiring repair have been found in the internal structure of 10 United Kingdom aircraft.

The CAA expects that as further aircraft are subjected to these inspections more may be found requiring repair, but the evidence does not warrant a general withdrawal of the type from service because the cracking is within the structural capability of the aircraft. The CAA has agreed a programme of inspection and repair where necessary. Each aeroplane takes three to four days for this work to be carried out and it is currently anticipated that all aircraft should be completed by mid-March.

Mr. McCrindle asked the Secretary of State for Transport what recent discussions he has had with the chairmen of British Airways and the Civil Aviation Authority on the work carried out or to be carried out on cracks discovered in some Boeing 747s.

Mr. Michael Spicer: The Civil Aviation Authority is in close contact with British Airways and has kept me informed about the cracks discovered in some Boeing 747 aircraft. The CAA has agreed with British Airways a programme of inspection and repair where necessary. Each aircraft takes about three to four days for this work to be carried out and all affected aircraft should be completed by the end of March.

A longer-term programme for inspecting a wider area may be instituted and may involve considerably more time on the ground to carry out. This long-term inspection has not yet been finalised and the FAA has not yet issued a further airworthiness directive.

Mr. McCrindle asked the Secretary of State for Transport whether the accident investigation branch of his Department is co-ordinating information on Boeing 747s with the Civil Aviation Authority; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Spicer: Inspectors of the accidents investigation branch participated in an investigation, conducted by the National Transportation Safety Board, USA, into an accident to a British Airways Boeing 747 which occurred during the approach to Boston, Massachusetts on 15 December 1985. On this approach sections of the left inboard trailing edge fore flap fell from the aircraft. The findings of the investigation were passed to the Civil Aviation Authority along with the results of the inspections of some other British Airways Boeing 747 flaps, carried out as a result of this accident.

The only other recent involvement of the accidents investigation branch with Boeing 747 aircraft was the analysis of the flight data recorder and cockpit voice recorder outputs from the Air India aircraft which crashed in the Irish sea on 23 June 1985. This work was in response to a request from the Indian authorities.

Mr. McCrindle asked the Secretary of State for Transport what information he has received from the aviation safety centre on the possible structural defects of some Boeing 747s.

Mr. Michael Spicer: None.

Concrete Safety Barriers

17. Mr. Hargreaves asked the Secretary of State for Transport what representations he has received regarding the adoption of concrete safety barriers on roads in the United Kingdom; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Since the beginning of 1985 concrete safety barriers have been the subject of three exchanges in the House and some correspondence. I met a number of hon. Members on 28 January to discuss the subject fully.

London Regional Transport (Mercedes Order)

19. Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for Transport why London Regional Transport has placed an order for 600 Mercedes minibuses.

Mr. David Mitchell: I understand that neither LRT nor London Buses Ltd. have placed such an order.

London Country Buses

20. Mr. Robert B. Jones asked the Secretary of State for Transport what is his policy towards a management-staff buy-out of London Country Buses.

Mr. David Mitchell: I would welcome buy-out proposals for the four separate parts of London Country Buses.

Cyclists (Radio Cassette Players)

21. Mr. David Atkinson asked the Secretary of State for Transport if his Department has made any studies into the road safety factor of cyclists wearing personal radios or cassette players.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The Transport Road and Research Laboratory is conducting a hospital-based study of cycling accidents. If the use of radio and cassette players represents a significant factor in such accidents, this should become clear from the results of the study.

Eastleigh Railway Workshop

22. Sir David Price asked the Secretary of State for Transport what progress has been made on the recommendations in the Serpell report regarding the future management of railway workshops as it relates to the Eastleigh railway workshop.

Mr. David Mitchell: The Serpell report emphasised that BR's maintenance and repair facilities needed to be reviewed as a whole. The British Railways Board has recently announced a restructuring of British Rail Engineering Ltd. into two separate groups from April 1986, with the Eastleigh works to form part of the BR maintenance group.

A127 (Safety Barriers)

24. Mr. Amess asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on the provision of road safety barriers along the A127 in Essex.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: There is central reserve safety fencing on all but two lengths of the trunk road in Essex. Work will start shortly on fencing between the GLC boundary and the A128 and during the coming financial year between the A130 and the Southend boundary. Within Southend the A127 is the responsibility of Essex county council.

Rail Services (Bradford)

25. Mr. Madden asked the Secretary of State for Transport if, when he next meets the chairman of British Rail, he will raise with him the provision of rail services in Bradford; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Mitchell: Responsibility for the level of local passenger rail services in West Yorkshire rests with the Passenger Transport Authority. It would not be appropriate for me to intervene.

Dockland Light Railway

26. Mr. Spearing asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he has any plans for further consultation concerning the eastern extension of the dockland light railway; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Mitchell: I have nothing to add to the answer I gave the hon. Member on 3 February, at column 42.

Transport Companies (Denationalisation)

27. Mr. Hickmet asked the Secretary of State for Transport what change there has been in the performance of state-owned transport companies which have been denationalised since 1979.

Mr. Ridley: Eormer state-owned transport companies are now free from constraints on their development and can profitably expand their activities and increase investment. The success of our policy for former state-owned transport companies is reflected in the increased share price of the companies which we have sold: for the National Freight Consortium, employees have seen the value of their investment multiply over 20 times since privatisation; for Associated British Ports, the value of shares has nearly quadrupled since the original share sale in 1983. There are no other quoted companies in this category.

Airlines (State Subsidies)

28. Mr. Gregory asked the Secretary of State for Transport what action he is taking to prevent unfair competition to British airlines from the state-subsidised airlines of other European Community member states.

Mr. Michael Spicer: We are pressing for agreement this year on a package of measures which will both bring real liberalisation and practical application of the treaty of Rome's competition rules to aviation.

Aviation (Liberalisation)

29. Mr. Richard Shepherd asked the Secretary of State for Transport what progress he has made in negotiations with his colleagues in the European Economic Community towards the liberalisation of air transport.

Mr. Michael Spicer: We now have four liberal agreements with other EC members, and the results so far are most encouraging. Last June we reviewed with the Dutch the success of the first year of our liberal agreement: 10 new services were introduced and traffic grew by 16 per cent. In December I met my German opposite number to review the first year of the new Anglo-German arrangements; 12 new services had been introduced and there were signs that new low fares had stimulated traffic, which had grown by 14 per cent. This year we are pressing hard for real progress at Community level.

Motor Cycle Couriers

30. Mr. Higgins asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will take steps to prohibit motor cyclists who have not passed his Department's riding test from acting as commercial motor cycle couriers.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: We are not at present persuaded of the case for such a measure. I hope that dispatch companies will follow the code of practice drawn up by the Despatch Association. It recommends the employment only of competent, experienced and knowledgeable riders or those taking part in a recognised training scheme.

Our overall priority is to improve the riding standards of all motor cyclists by ensuring that they take proper training in the use of their machines. That is why we are currently reviewing the licensing, testing and training arrangements.

Road Accidents

31. Mr. Chapman asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on the trend in road traffic accident casualties.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Information about the number of road casualties in recent years is shown in table 5 of "Road Accidents Great Britain". A copy is in the Library.

There were 5,599 deaths in 1984, 3 per cent. higher than in 1983, but 19 per cent. below the 1974 figure.

In the first nine months of 1985, deaths were 10 per cent. lower than in the first nine months of 1984. If this trend is continued through the fourth quarter of 1985, the number of road accident deaths in 1985 will be the lowest recorded since 1954.

London Transport (Passenger Statistics)

32. Mr. Greenway asked the Secretary of State for Transport how many passengers were carried by (a) London buses and (b) London underground trains in each of the last five years; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Mitchell: The information requested is as follows:

Passenger journeys on LTE-LRT services

	Bus (millions)	Underground (millions)
1981	1,080	541
1982	1,040	498
1983	1,090	563
1984	1,160	651
1985	1,150	720

London Regional Transport deserves congratulations for attracting this rising number of passengers.

British Rail (Investment)

33. Mr. Waller asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will state the amount of British Rail's investment programme which he has authorised since June 1983.

Mr. David Mitchell: We have approved projects totalling over £775 million.

Mr. Bowen Wells asked the Secretary of State for Transport how much investment has been agreed for British Rail in each of the years 1979 to 1986; and how this compares to 1974 to 1979.

Mr. David Mitchell: My hon. Friend will find British Rail's annual investment allocations listed in the table of "Nationalised Industries' Capital Requirements", which is included in each year's public expenditure White Paper.

North Wales Main Line

34. Dr. Marek asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he has received any proposals from British Rail for electrifying the North Wales main line; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Mitchell: I have received no such proposal and therefore I have no statement to make.

Chemicals (Conveyance)

Mr. Gareth Wardell asked the Secretary of State for Transport if benzylamine has been (a) approved as a dangerous substance that is permitted for conveyance by road and (b) classified for the purpose of assigning a hazard warning sign on transporting vehicles.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Benzylamine is classified as a corrosive liquid under the Dangerous Substances (Conveyance by Road in Road Tankers and Tank Containers) Regulations 1981 and an appropriate hazard warning panel must be displayed by the vehicle concerned.

This substance is used as a pesticide. It is regarded as "corrosive" for the purposes of supply and use under the Classification, Packaging and Labelling Regulations 1984, and packages must also be marked to indicate that the contents may cause burns and that, in the case of contact with eyes, rinse immediately with plenty of water and seek medical advice. No further package marking is required for transport purposes.

Hazard warning panels are required only for carriage by road in tank vehicles or large tank containers. For the purposes of the Dangerous Substances (Conveyance by Road in Road Tankers and Tank Containers) Regulations the substance meets the criteria for classification as a corrosive liquid and a full hazard warning panel with the "corrosive" diamond and substance identification No. 1760 should be displayed.

Mr. Gareth Wardell asked the Secretary of State for Transport if aminotriazole, has been (a) approved as a dangerous substance that is permitted for conveyance by road and (b) classified for the purpose of assigning a hazard warning sign on transporting vehicles.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: These substances are not regarded as dangerous in transport and vehicles carrying them are not required to display hazard warning panels.

These liquid agricultural herbicides are regarded as "harmful" for the purposes of supply and use under the Classification, Packaging and Labelling Regulations 1984, and packages must be marked with a number of appropriate risk and safety phrases. The substances fall below the toxicity level for transport purposes which is less stringent than that for supply and use.

Hazard warning panels are required only for carriage by road in tank vehicles or large tank containers, but these substances do not fall within the classification criteria for the Dangerous Substances (Conveyance by Road in Road Tankers and Tank Containers) Regulations 1981.

Mr. Gareth Wardell asked the Secretary of State for Transport if butanediol diglycidl ether has been (a) approved as a dangerous substance that is permitted for conveyance by road and (b) classified for the purpose of assigning a hazard warning sign on transporting vehicles.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the reply that I gave him on Friday 21 February 1986, at column 323.

Public Service Vehicles

Mr. Gareth Wardell asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will publish in the Official Report the number of public service vehicles, by operator group for the South Wales traffic area for each year since 1979, that failed the annual Department of Transport test on the original examination.

Mr. Peter Bottomely: Public service vehicle annual test statistics are available only from 1982-83 onwards. The number of failures at the first attempt is as follows:

South Wales traffic area—PSV annual test; initial failure rate (by operator group)

	National Bus Company		Local Authority		Private
		per cent.		per cent.		per cent.
1982-83
Total number of tests	922		501		2,176
Number of initial failures	485	(53)	237	(47)	1,179	(54)
1983-84
Total numbers of tests	834		503		2,198
Number of initial failures	321	(38)	183	(36)	1,121	(51)
1984-85
Total number of tests	693		462		1,859
Number of initial failures	231	(33)	175	(38)	948	(51)

Road Safety

Mr. Sheerman asked the Secretary of State for Transport when the interdepartmental working party on future road safety policy is due to report; and if he will publish their conclusions.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: I expect the report of the interdepartmental group reviewing road safety policy in July. When I have read it I shall consider how best to make its conclusions public.

Oil Pollution (North-East Coast)

Dr. David Clark asked the Secretary of State for Transport (1) if he will instigate an inquiry into the oil pollution along the north-east coast of England during the week beginning 16 February; and if he will make a statement;

(2) how many birds he estimates were badly affected by the oil slick off the north-east coast of England during the week beginning 16 February.

Mr. Ridley: I am not aware of any oil slick off the north-east coast.

The Nature Conservancy Council advises that up to 20 February, 570 birds, predominantly guillemots, had been affected; 415 of these were live birds and 155 were dead.

My Department's marine pollution control unit has an arrangement with the Nature Conservancy Council whereby an anti-pollution aircraft is flown on at sea reconnaissance whenever reports are received of five or more live oiled birds on 1 km of beach on two successive tides. One such flight, with an NCC observer on board, took place on 17 February but no oil could be found at sea. Samples have been taken both of the oil that has come ashore and of that on some of the birds affected and this will be analysed to try and determine its type and possible source of sources.

As oil has been affecting sea birds along the north-east coast of England for the last 10 years it is also proposed to deploy the MPCU's recently acquired remote sensing aircraft to carry out reconnaissance flights over a period of days on the next occasion that there is a sustained spell of north-east or east winds in a determined effort to try to establish the source of this oil.

Bus Companies (Redundancies)

Mr. Dixon asked the Secretary of State for Transport how many redundancies have been declared in the passenger transport authorities and the National Bus Company since October 1985.

Mr. David Mitchell: No firm information has been received so far. The number of redundancies will depend on the competitiveness of the individual operators and their success in winning tenders for subsidised services.

Lorries (Anti-spray Devices)

Mr. Woodall asked the Secretary of State for Transport whether he is planning to review enforcement methods on the fitting of anti-spray devices on heavy goods vehicles.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: We are considering whether anti-spray devices should be added to those items specifically checked at the annual test for heavy lorries.

Mr. Woodall asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he intends making the fitting of anti-spray devices compulsory on older heavy goods vehicles.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: In November 1984 regulations came into effect which require the older existing heavy trailers of articulated lorries, falling within their scope, to be fitted with anti-spray devices conforming to British Standard BSAU 200 by October 1987.

Mr. O'Brien asked the Secretary of State for Transport what information he has on the percentage of heavy goods vehicles fitted with anti-spray devices.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: We do not have records of the percentage of lorries equipped with anti-spray devices. Industry estimates that about 80,000 vehicles have been fitted so far.

Mr. O'Brien asked the Secretary of State for Transport whether he will report on the progress in the introduction of self-verification methods for anti-spray devices on heavy goods vehicles.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Heavy lorries falling within the scope of regulation 46E of the Construction and Use Regulations 1978 must be fitted with anti-spray devices conforming with British Standards BSAU 200.

The British Standards Institution offers third party certification, under its kite mark scheme, and several manufacturers have submitted their products.

Passenger Train Mileage

Dr. Marek asked the Secretary of State for Transport how many passenger train miles were run per week during the period from the beginning of November 1984 to the end of April 1985.

Mr. David Mitchell: The Department does not hold such information for periods of less than a year. Average weekly passenger train miles run by British Rail over the period from the beginning of January 1984 to the end of March 1985 were 3·7 million.

DEFENCE

Sharp-Hansford Report

Mr. Wiggin asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he is now ready to place the Sharp-Hansford report in the Library and announce the Government's decisions on it.

Mr. Lee: The Government have not yet taken any decisions on the recommendations of the Sharp-Hansford report. They hope to do so in due course once they have fully considered the consultants' recommendations. Copies of the report have been placed in the Libraries of both Houses today.

Mr. Wiggin asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he has sent copies of the Sharp-Hansford report to all those who were consulted during the course of their inquiry; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lee: Relevant extracts from the report have been sent to the principal parties consulted during the inquiry. Consultation with other interested parties will take place as appropriate. I have nothing to add to the answers I gave to my hon. Friend on 9 December 1985 at column 546.

Trident

Mr. Donald Stewart asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he is yet in a position to give an updated estimate of the cost of Trident.

Mr. Norman Lamont: This will be announced shortly.

Strategic Defence Initiative

Mr. Dalyell asked the Secretary of State for Defence what penalty clauses are contained in the memorandum of understanding on the strategic defence initiative with the United States of America.

Mr. Norman Lamont: None.

Mr. Dalyell asked the Secretary of State for Defence under what national authority United Kingdom companies involved in strategic defence initiative research will be regulated in respect of such research.

Mr. Norman Lamont: Depending on the nature of the contractural arrangements applicable to each piece of work placed in the United Kingdom either United States or United Kingdom law may apply.

Mr. Dalyell asked the Secretary of State for Defence whether approval has been given to the visit of the team led by Paul Hopler from the Pentagon to survey British technology of potential value to the strategic defence initiative programme with a view to its classification.

Mr. Norman Lamont: No request for such a visit has been made.

Mr. Dalyell asked the Secretary of State for Defence what assessment he has made of the extent to which the involvement of United Kingdom technologies in the strategic defence initiative would preclude their use in the European Esprit and Eureka programmes for civil purposes.

Mr. Norman Lamont: It is my intention, through participation in the United States strategic defence initiative, to enhance the potential for the development of United Kingdom technologies for a wide range of applications including civil programmes of the kind referred to. This objective has been kept very much in mind in the preparation of the arrangements for participation and will remain so as programmes proceed.

Mr. Dalyell asked the Secretary of State for Defence what further implementing instructions were agreed on Monday 17 February by Professor Richard Norman and Lieutenant-General James Abrahamson regarding the strategic defence initiative.

Mr. Norman Lamont: The document referred to covers administrative arrangements in support of the memorandum of understanding of 6 December 1985 for United Kingdom participation in the United States strategic defence initiative research.

Mr. Dalyell asked the Secretary of State for Defence what discussions he has had with the Governments of France and Germany on United Kingdom participation in the strategic defence initiative programme.

Mr. Norman Lamont: Discussions have taken place bilaterally where appropriate and within the Western European Union with member states about participation by the United Kingdom and other European allies in the United States strategic defence initiative research programme.

Mr. Dalyell asked the Secretary of State for Defence what he is doing to safeguard intellectual property rights for British universities and firms involved in the strategic defence initiative programme.

Mr. Norman Lamont: The memorandum of understanding and supporting documentation related to British participation in the SDI research programme provide satisfactory safeguards on intellectual property rights for universities, research institutions and firms who may participate in the programme.

Mr. Dalyell asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement regarding the role of Ford as lead contractor with GEC Marconi as a subsidiary on a strategic defence initiative contract for computer and communications aspects of a defensive system to shield the West from a nuclear strike by the Soviet Union.

Mr. Norman Lamont: As part of the SDI research programme, GEC Marconi has, during the last week, been awarded by Ford Aerospace and Communications two sub-contracts on battle management-C3. Ford is under contract to the United States Department of Defence.

Mr. Dalyell asked the Secretary of State for Defence what is the extent of the proposed involvement of Westland Research in composite materials in the strategic defence initiative programme on contracts led by UTG/ Sikorsky.

Mr. Norman Lamont: Westland is currently examining with the United States SDI organisation the possibility of obtaining United States-funded work in the area of composite materials as part of the SDI research programme.

Mr. Dalyell asked the Secretary of State for Defence whether he has given approval to the United States Office of Naval Research for approaching British academic groups, such as those at Brunel, with a view to their participation in strategic defence initiative research programmes.

Mr. Norman Lamont: United States authorities do not require United Kingdom Government approval before approaching British academic groups.

Mr. Dalyell asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement about the role of General Motors' subsidiary company Electronic Data Services and Logica UK in the strategic defence initiative programme.

Mr. Norman Lamont: I have no information on any such role.

Mr. Dalyell asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he will take steps to seek the advice on the feasibility of strategic defence initiative research from Professor Roger Needham of Cambridge, Professor Igor Alecksanders, John Darlington, and Robert Kowalski of Imperial college, London, and Professor Tony House of Oxford.

Mr. Norman Lamont: No, although if any of the persons named in the question wishes to offer such advice, they are free to do so.

Space Shuttle

Mr. Dalyell asked the Secretary of State for Defence what is the basis of United Kingdom participation in the United States space shuttle; and what are the defence implications, including the defence research and development implications.

Mr. Norman Lamont: We are a customer for the United States space shuttle as a launch vehicle for our military communications satellites Skynet 4A and 4B. The space shuttle itself is a United States programme without United Kingdom Government involvement.

Military Critical Technologies

Mr. Dalyell asked the Secretary of State for Defence what undertakings have been made to give Paul Hopler and his colleagues from the Pentagon military critical technologies list access to the work of Heriot Watt and other universities with a view to their classification under Cocom rules.

Mr. Norman Lamont: None.

Anti-ballistic Missiles

Mr. Dalyell asked the Secretary of State for Defence what representations he has had from Sir Ronald Mason FRS regarding the alleged breach of the anti-ballistic missile treaty, article 15, by the European Computer Architecture Studies such as that led by Ford, involving the transfer of anti-ballistic missile technology to a non-signatory power such as Britain.

Mr. Norman Lamont: The Secretary of State for Defence is not aware of having received representations from Sir Ronald Mason FRS regarding an alleged breach of the 1972 ABM treaty.

Metereological Office

Mr. Wiggin asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he will publish the conclusions reached by the survey on Metereological Office services recently conducted by a firm of market researchers in Aberdeen; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lee: A number of studies have been commissioned by the Meteorological Office following the resource control review, which recommended that the Meterological Office should seek to expand its commercial activities. Reports of these studies will not be published as they may benefit competitor organisations. The reports have not yet been presented.

Helicopter Search and Rescue Services

Mr. Viggers asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he will give his estimate of the cost per hour in flight of operating a Wessex search and rescue helicopter.

Mr. Stanley [pursuant to his reply, 10 February 1986, c. 390]: The estimated cost of operating a Royal Navy Wessex helicopter is £4,380 per hour.

SOCIAL SERVICES

Benefits (Claimants)

Mr. Wigley asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many persons, registered for social security purposes as having no fixed address, and claiming benefits from local offices of his Department in (a) Cardiff and (b) Swansea, respectively, are former inpatients at mental hospitals.

Mr. Major: I regret that no information is available centrally on the number of persons claiming social security benefits at Cardiff and Swansea local offices who had no fixed address and were former inpatients at mental hospitals.

Paediatricians

Mr. Gareth Wardell asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will publish in the Official Report for each health authority in England the number of (a) paediatric cardiologists and (b) paediatric cardiac surgeons employed.

Mr. Hayhoe: I regret that the information requested is not available. Neither paediatric cardiology nor paediatric cardiac surgery are recognised as distinct specialties by the Royal Colleges concerned. However, all paediatricians are trained in and provide paediatric cardiology, and all cardiothoracic surgeons are trained in and perform paediatric cardiac surgery. Within each of these major specialties there are some doctors who practice almost exclusively in the sub-specialty, but their numbers are not collected centrally.

Residential Homes

Mr. Ashley asked the Secretary of State for Social Services when he expects the joint working party to consider the means of harmonising financial support for people in residential care homes to meet for the first time; when he expects them to finish their deliberations; and who will be represented on the working party.

Mr. Newton: We expect the first meeting of the joint working party to be held in about four weeks' time. It will aim to produce a report within 12 months. The DHSS, the Scottish Office, the Welsh Office, the Treasury, the Association of County Councils, the Association of Metropolitan Authorities and the Convention of Scottish Local Authorities will be represented.

Mr. Ashley asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will make the findings of the Ernst and Whinney report on residential care available to the public.

Mr. Newton: We expect to receive Ernst and Whinney's report on residential care and nursing homes at the beginning of next month and will then consider whether, and if so in what form, the report should be published.

Board and Lodging Payments

Mr. Ashley asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what guidance he has given to Department of Health and Social Security officials of the interpretation of the exceptional hardship exemption for board and lodging payments.

Mr. Newton: I refer the right hon. Member to my reply to the hon. Member for Roxburgh and Berwickshire (Mr. Kirkwood) on 12 February at columns 488-89.

Income Statistics

Mr. Mason asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what is the income range of families in the bottom quintile of the national distribution of income, adjusted for differences in family size and composition; and if he will also give a breakdown by region of this figure.

Mr. Newton: The latest available estimate, derived from the family expenditure survey is that the net income range in the bottom quintile of the national distribution of income is up to £72·40 per week for a married couple without children and the equivalent for other families. Net income in this context is defined as gross income including state benefits, less income tax and national insurance contributions, adjusted for differences in family size, family composition and tenure status. This definition is consistent with figures published in Volume 3 of the Green Paper "Reform of Social Security" (Cmnd. 9519).

Regional breakdowns are not available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Severe Weather Payments

Mr. Frank Field asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if, pursuant to the statement of 17 February, Official Report, column 30, he will list each of the steps he has taken to bring to the attention of claimants the availability of special payments in areas where exceptionally severe weather has been declared.

Mr. Newton: In early January 1986, following the revised guidance issued by the Chief Adjudication Officer on this subject, local offices were advised to follow standing instructions on publicity arrangements in areas where exceptionally severe weather had been declared. (A copy of both the relevant paragraphs of the S Manual, 7448-7450, and S Circular 48/85 are in the Library).

Mr. Meacher asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many persons have received payments in each area now officially designated as exceptionally cold; and what was the average individual payment in each area.

Mr. Newton: The information requested is not yet available. When the period during which the possibility of such payments is likely to arise is over, local offices will be asked to make a return so that the total number of payments made for this winter and the cost can be calculated.

Ms. Harman asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) if he has asked the fuel boards to send out claim forms for exceptionally severe weather payments to all claimants on fuel direct at the same time as their bill;

(2) where he has distributed leaflets about exceptionally severe weather payments;

(3) if he has distributed leaflets advising claimants about exceptionally severe weather payments to family practitioner committees for distribution to claimants through general practitioner surgeries.

Mr. Newton: Paragraphs 7448-7450 of the S Manual, a copy of which is in the Library, cover the publicity arrangements to be followed in areas where exceptionally severe weather has been declared.

Most local offices already have a supply of leaflets both for display themselves and to distribute to local organisations; further supplies of these were sent out last week.

The S Manual provides for leaflets to be sent to local authority Social Services departments, housing benefit offices, advice bureaux and other agencies but not specifically family practitioner committees. Where fuel boards are willing and able to identify fuel direct claimants, they will send them a letter, incorporating a claim form, with their bill. Otherwise local offices are under instructions to write to these claimants themselves.

Ms. Harman: asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) how much was paid out to claimants for exceptionally severe weather payments in 1985 by (a) Blenheim grove office, SE15, (b) Bournemouth road office, SE15 and (c) London offices;

(2) how many claims were accepted for payment under exceptionally severe weather in 1985 in (a) Blenheim grove office, (b) Bournemouth road office and (c) London offices.

Mr. Newton: I shall let the hon. Member have replies as soon as possible.

Ms. Harman asked the Secretary of State for Social Services when leaflets about exceptionally severe weather payments will be made available to Department of Health and Social Security offices in (a) Blenheim grove, SE15, (b) Bournemouth road, SE15 and (c) London offices.

Mr. Newton: An additional supply of leaflets was sent to all offices in south London on 20 February 1986 and to all offices in north London on 21 February 1986.

Ms. Harman asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if people who cannot estimate normal consumption of fuel because they were (i) abroad, (ii) in prison, (iii) in hospital and (iv) not responsible for fuel bills for any other reason in the comparison period will be eligible for payments for extra heating due to exceptionally severe weather.

Mr. Newton: I refer the hon. Member to the guidance issued by the Chief Adjudication Officer on 6 December 1985, a copy of which is in the Library.

Conductive Education Project

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he has any plans to provide funding for the conductive education project set up by the Birmingham education (special needs and welfare) sub-committee in September 1984.

Mr. Whitney: This particular project is not being supported, but we are considering an application from the Spastics Society for assistance in funding a project to determine whether conductive education might be adapted for use in this country.

Disabled People (Representations)

Mr. Cohen asked the Secretary of State for Social Services why he has not sent NETWORK, the legal advisory service for disabled people, the consultation paper on the Disabled Persons (Services Consultation and Representation) Bill; if he will now do so; and if he will allow an extension beyond 4 March for the submission of their comments.

Mr. Hayhoe: I shall let the hon. Member have a reply as soon as possible.

Claimants

Mr. Terry Fields asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will provide a break-down of the number of social security claimants in Liverpool, Broadgreen, in each year since 1979, broken down to include; persons under pensionable age excluding the unemployed, unemployed persons and persons over pensionable age.

Mr. Major: Liverpool, Broadgreen is covered for social security purposes by the Department's offices at West Derby, Breckfield, Belle Vale and Edge Hill, but boundaries are not conterminous with the constituency.

The table shows the total number of people in receipt of supplementary benefit from these offices who were (a) under pension age, excluding the unemployed (b) unemployed and (c) over pension age in December of each year since 1981—the earliest available figures.

	1981	1982	1983	1984	1985
(a) Supplementary benefit claimants under pension age but not unemployed	8,227	8,623	9,838	11,794	12,555
(b) Supplementary benefit claimants unemployed	17,724	19,176	20,434	21,063	21,696
(c) Supplementary benefit claimants over pension age	13,877	13,892	11,882	11,880	12,153

Single Payments

Mr. Frank Field asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will list for each of the last five years the number and the total value in each of these years of single payments made to claimants for draught-proofing.

Mr. Newton: The information requested is as follows:

Single Payments of Supplementary Benefit for Draught-Proofing Materials

	Number (000s)	Value £ (000s)
1981	<1	15
1982	2·5	56
1983	9	181

Source: Annual Statistical Enquiry for December of the relevant year.
Note: Because these figures relate to single payments made during the 12 months preceding the date of each enquiry to people still in receipt of supplementary benefit at the time of that enquiry, they are underestimates of the total number and value of single payments made during the year. Figures are not yet available for 1984 and 1985.

Cervical Screening

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will list separately those district health authorities mentioned in paragraph 4.27 of the report of the Comptroller and Auditor General on National Health Service preventive medicine which (a) had no district call or recall schemes in operation, (b) had reported limited recall covering part of their areas, (c) had no firm plans for introducing schemes, (d) operated recall schemes only, (e) planned to introduce call schemes in 1985, (f) plan to introduce call schemes in 1986, (g) plan to use computerised patient registers and (h) already operated call and recall schemes.

Mr. Hayhoe: In reply to the hon. Member's first three questions lists of district health authorities are shown in appendix 8 of the report of the Comptroller and Auditor General on "NHS: Preventive Medicine."

Those health authorities which in June 1985 operated recall schemes only are shown in table 1, those which planned to introduce call schemes during 1985 are shown in table 2, and those planning to introduce call schemes in 1986 in table 3.

All district health authorities listed in tables 2 and 3 can be expected to use computerised registers; in June 1985 details were still under discussion in some authorities. As regards those health authorities already operating call and recall schemes I refer the hon. Member to my reply to him on 3 February at columns 87-88.

Supplementary Benefit Regulations

Mr. Richard Shepherd asked the Secretary of State for Social Services whether he has any plans to amend the supplementary benefit regulations.

Mr. Newton: A number of changes in the supplementary benefit regulations will be required to give effect to the uprating of benefits rates in July. My right hon. Friend, the Secretary of State for Social Services, has also referred today for consultation with the Social Security Advisory Committee draft regulations amending the rules for single payments.

Following is the covering note sent with the reference of the draft regulations to the Committee.

"PROPOSED CHANGES IN SUPPLEMENTARY BENEFIT SINGLE PAYMENTS REGULATIONS

Note for Social Security Advisory Committee

The Committee is invited to consider changes to the single payments regulations contained in the attached draft Supplementary Benefit (Miscellaneous Amendments) Regulations.

As the Committee is aware, the present single payments regulations came into being as part of the wider changes introduced in 1980 when the supplementary benefit scheme was put on the basis of regulated entitlement. Under this Government there have been substantial improvements in weekly benefit rates. Since 1978-79 their real value has risen by 6 per cent., while other changes have raised the real value of weekly heating additions by some £140 million. In 1980 itself, an improved pattern of children's scale rates was introduced with the result that support for children in supplementary benefit families is now estimated to be some £150 million higher in real terms than if the previous value and structure had been retained. At the same time, lone parents, and the long-term sick and disabled, started to receive the higher "long-term" rate of benefit after one year instead of two. Further beneficial changes have taken place subsequently including in particular the ending of the "invalidity trap" in 1983.

Despite these improvements, there has been since 1981 a rapid and continuing growth in single payments. They have risen from less than 1 million payments totalling some £45 million in 1981 to over 4 million payments totalling over £300 million in 1985.

The Government do not believe that this rate of increase can be either justified or sustained. It is imposing a disproportionately heavy administrative burden on DHSS local offices. It is aggravating the widely perceived unfairness of the contrast between the position of those in supplementary benefit and those who may have incomes only very little higher, including those in low-paid jobs, to whom no comparable help is available. Moreover, there are clear indications that this trend is continuing.

In these circumstances the Government now propose to take steps to bring expenditure back to around the 1984 level—the last full year before the present Social Security Review proposals were published—and to ensure an orderly administration of the single payments system in the two years before the Government reform proposals take effect.

The main changes which would be brought about by the proposed regulations are as follows:

—the list of eligible items for furniture to be revised with standard sums in a national price list;

—help with furniture for people moving to be linked more clearly to the reasons for a move which qualify for payment of removal expenses;

—the abolition of the condition that prevents payments for furniture for certain movers where there is suitable alternative furnished accommodation available, and the clarification of the position of people moving from special care accommodation;

—the introduction of a standard sum, based on the size of the family, for qualifying movers towards miscellaneous furniture and household equipment needs;

—help with replacement of furniture to be subject to time limits for initial and repeat payments other than on health and safety grounds, except for those over pension age and the chronically sick and disabled;

—revision of help with maternity needs, with prescribed sums and quantities;

—bedding to be provided for those with a good reason for move and to elderly or sick or disabled members of the family;

—limiting of help with costs of redecoration materials to those over pension age and the chronically sick or disabled;

—revised rules for payments for clothing and footwear.

No changes are proposed in the regulation covering exceptionally severe weather payments which the Government are keeping under review in the light of experience this winter, nor in the rules for payments for draughtproofing where Ministers are considering alternative arrangements with other interested Departments.

At Annex 1 is an explanatory note on the draft regulations and at Annex 2 are the draft regulations themselves."

Copies of the note with the annexes are in the Vote Office.

Written Answers to Questions

Tuesday 25 February 1986.

THE ARTS

Liverpool Philharmonic Hall

Mr. Hind asked the Minister for the Arts whether the Liverpool philharmonic hall will be transferred to the Merseyside Residuary Body on 1 April.

Mr. Luce: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment will soon lay before this House a property order which will include a provision transferring the hall to the Merseyside Residuary Body on 1 April. The Royal Liverpool Philharmonic Society is currently establishing a charitable trust which could subsequently be responsible for the hall. I am sure that the Residuary Body will wish to consult with the trust and other interested parties before deciding on final arrangements for the ownership and management of the hall.

We took the decision to transfer the hall to the Residuary Body in the light of the Arts Council committing itself to provide an additional grant of £137,500 to the Society. This will enable the society in 1986-87 to pay rent to the Residuary Body for the use of the hall. The Residuary Body will meet the balance of the running costs of the hall, recovering those costs through the districts, until such time as final decisions are taken on the ownership and management of the hall. I hope that the longer term future of he hall will be secured with continuing financial assistance from the Arts Council, the five district councils and, wherever possible, the private sector.

SCOTLAND

Boundary Reviews

Mr. Michael Forsyth asked the Secretary of State for Scotland whether the Boundary Commission for Scotland intends to conduct any interim reviews of Parliamentary constituencies.

Mr. Rifkind: The Boundary Commission for Scotland has informed me that it intends to conduct an interim review of 14 parliamentary constituencies under section 2(3) of the House of Commons (Redistribution of Seats) Act 1949. The constituencies are as follows:

Dumbarton CC and Stirling CC
East Lothian CC, and Roxburgh and Berwickshire CC
Hamilton BC anc East Kilbride CC
Ayr CC and Cunninghame South CC
Clackmannan CC, and Perth and Kinross CC
Edinburgh South BC and Midlothian CC
Strathkelvin and Bearsden CC, and Clydebank and Milngavie CC.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Departmental Staff

Mr. Watts asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the number of staff-in-post in central Government Departments at 1 January.

Mr. MacGregor: At 1 January 1986 there were 596,506 staff in post — 497,895 non-industrials and 98,611 industrials.

WALES

Health Authorities (Expenditure)

Mr. Wigley asked the Secretary of State for Wales if he will publish a table indicating the expenditure levels forecast for each district health authority in Wales for the coming financial year, together with comparable expenditure for each of the preceeding five years.

Mr. Mark Robinson: The following table provides the actual outturn expenditure on hospitals and community health services by health authorities in Wales for the years 1981-82 to 1984-85. The figures for 1985-86 and 1986-87 are provisional forecasts of outturn since they do not take account of all of the income which might be generated locally. Nordo they reflect possible movements in balances. Furthermore, the figures for 1986-87 do not take account of a further £13 million which will be allocated for centrally funded developments during the course of the year. It is therefore not possible to make a direct comparison between the provisional figures given for 1986-87 and those given for the preceeding years.

Notes:

1. Payments made centrally on behalf of health authorities for income tax, national insurance and superannuation have been included.
2. Prior to 1982-83 the Dyfed area health authority covered the whole county.
3. From 1 April 1985, the responsibility for family practitioner services was transferred from health authorities to independent family practitioner committees. Expenditure on these services has therefore been excluded from the figures provided.

Welsh Language

Mr. Wigley asked the Secretary of State for Wales how many letters his Department received during 1985 concerning the status of the Welsh language; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: This information can be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Cancer

Mr. Wigley asked the Secretary of State for Wales if he will take steps to arrange for the first report of the Welsh cancer registry, entitled "Cancer Registration in Wales 1974-1978," to be republished in a form which analyses the data in espect of wards and enumeration districts.

Mr. Mark Robinson: There are no plans to republish the first report of the Welsh cancer registry in the form requested.

Mr. Wigley asked the Secretary of State for Wales how many women in Wales were diagnosed during 1985 to be suffering from breast cancer; and how many died from breast cancer during 1985.

Mr. Mark Robinson: The latest available information is given in the following table:

	Year of registration/ death
	1983	1984
Registration of newly diagnosed cases of breast cancer	1,331	—*
Number of deaths due to breast cancer	748	806

* Not available.

Mr. Wigley asked the Secretary of State for Wales what progress has been made by his Department in improving services for cancer patients in northern Wales.

Mr. Mark Robinson: A departmental working party was appointed to report to my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State on regional services in North Wales, including services for cancer patients. Its recommendations are presently being considered.

Rural Areas

Mr. Best asked the Secretary of State for Wales what proposals he has to give the Welsh Development Agency greater scope for assisting rural areas by way of grants and other measures along the lines of those presently available to Mid-Wales Development; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholas Edwards: I have no plans to extend Mid-Wales development grant beyond its present scope, but my officials, the Welsh Development Agency and Mid-Wales Development are considering further programmes to help job creation and business activity in the rural areas and I hope to announce details within the next few weeks.

Labour Statistics

Mr. Ron Davies asked the Secretary of State for Wales how many people were employed in Wales, by county, part-time and full-time, male, female, and under 25 years of age, at the latest available date; and how these figures compare with the comparable figures in 1982 and 1979.

Mr. Nicholas Edwards: Information for the date requested is not available. However, information for the Welsh counties and Wales is given in the table. These are employees of all ages, an analysis by age not being available. The figures relate to June 1978 and September 1981, the latest dates for which data are available. Comparisons between these two dates will be affected by seasonal factors.

PRIME MINISTER

Fordyce

Q21. Mr. McQuarrie asked the Prime Minister if she will pay an official visit to Fordyce in the Banff and Buchan district area.

The Prime Minister: I have at present no plans to do so.

Carers (Policy)

Q48. Sir David Price asked the Prime Minister whether she will review Her Majesty's Government's policies towards caring for the carers; and whether she will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: The Government attach great importance to promoting measures which enhance and support the capacity and well-bing of carers, and this aspect is borne in mind in the development of all relevant policies. Apart from encouraging those providing health and personal social services to take account of the needs of informal carers in their planning and provision of services and making grants to carers' organisations, my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Social Services has launched an initiative, "Helping the Community to Care" which is designed to explore and improve the quality of support given to carers by statutory and voluntary bodies.

Economy (Wales)

Q92. Mr. Wigley asked the Prime Minister what further steps Her Majesty's Government intend taking to improve the economic well-being of Wales.

The Prime Minister: The Government will maintain their efforts to rebuild a sound and competitive economy, giving priority to the control of inflation, encouraging enterprise and seeking to keep wage increases to a level that will enable economic growth to be translated into increased employment, while improving the infrastructure and encouraging the development of business in Wales.

Nationalised Industries

Q95. Mr. Ewing asked the Prime Minister if she has any plans to meet the chairmen of nationalised industries to discuss the financing of the nationalised industries; and if she will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: I met the chairmen of the nationalised industries last November. The capital requirements and financing of the nationalised industries for 1986-87 to 1988-89 can be found in part five of the public expenditure White Paper published last month (Cmnd. 9702-II).

Disabled People

Mr. Wigley asked the Prime Minister if she will make it her policy to increase the resources available to improve services for disabled people; and if she will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: The Government have made it clear in guidance issued to health and local authorities, who are the main statutory providers of services for disabled people, that services for the most vulnerable groups in the community, including disabled people, should have priority. It is for individual health and local authorities to determine local priorities in light of their statutory responsibilities and local circumstances.

However, although it is not practicable to calculate the total amount spent on services for disabled people, overall expenditure on a number of services which particularly benefit them has substantially increased in real terms over recent years. For example, on the basis of 1984-85 prices, there was an 85 per cent. cost terms increase in local authority expenditure in England on homes for mentally handicapped adults between 1978-79 and 1984-85 and an increase of 39 per cent. over the same period in local authority expenditure in England on aids for disabled people.

With regard to social security benefits, total expenditure on all cash benefits for long term sick and disabled people in 1985-86 will be over £5 billion. This represents an increase in real terms of over 50 per cent. since 1978-79, of which some £380 million is due to real improvements in the average value of benefits paid.

Fraud (Prosecution)

Mr. Cohen asked the Prime Minister if any of the cases of fraud not prosecuted because of the difficulty of obtaining evidence to which she referred in her interview with CBI News involve public money, including Bank of England money.

The Prime Minister: Certain fraud investigations have been hindered by difficulties in obtaining evidence, in particular evidence from abroad. It is, however, hoped that these difficulties will be overcome and that the cases will be brought to trial. I am aware of four such cases, currently under investigation, in which the misappropriation of public money is involved.

Engagements

Mr. Peter Brunivels asked the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Tuesday 25 February.

Mr. Boyes asked the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Tuesday 25 February.

Mr. Yeo asked the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Tuesday 25 February.

Mr. Greenway asked the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Tuesday 25 February.

Mr. Leigh asked the Prime Minister she will list her official engagements for Tuesday 25 February.

The Prime Minister: This morning I had meetings with minsterial colleagues and others. In addition to my duties in this House I shall be having further meetings later today.

Parliamentary Questions

Mr. Proctor asked the Prime Minister what is the longest period of time between her giving a holding answer to a priority written question and her giving the substantive answer over the last 12 months.

The Prime Minister: Records show that the longest such period was 10 working days, although this was an exceptional case involving the compilation of detailed statistical tables. It is my normal practice to answer all priority written questions on the day for which they are tabled, but if it is ever necessary to put in a holding reply, to answer as soon as practicable thereafter.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Domestic Security Devices

Mr. Pawsey asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what studies his Department has made of the implications for crime prevention of changes in the price of domestic security devices; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Giles Shaw: None. However, we are aware that cost may well be a factor in influencing whether or not the public fit domestic security devices. The extent to which this is generally the case is currently being investigated by the Home Office crime prevention unit in the Surrey constabulary area with the assistance of the chief constable.

Moreover, the Home Office standing conference on crime prevention, through its working group on residential burglary, is seeking to devise a low-cost security package to protect residential dwellings which might be purchased by those living in particularly vulnerable areas such as the inner city.

Terrorism

Mr. Kaufman asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many persons were detained under the Prevention of Terrorism (Temporary Provisions) Act 1985 for periods in excess of 96 hours; how many persons so detained were charged with any offence; how many persons so detained were convicted of an offence; of which offences they were convicted; and how many persons were so convicted on the basis of evidence obtained by virtue of their detention in excess of 96 hours.

Mr. Hurd: I shall reply as soon as possible.

Open Prisons (Payphones)

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what will be his policy regarding permission given to inmates of open prisons to obtain, through the relevant governors, lists of telephone numbers of doctors or solicitors when payphones are introduced at the end of April.

Mr. Mellor: The present arrangements by which inmates are provided with names and addresses of solicitors will be extended to cover telephone numbers. Inmates wanting the telephone numbers of doctors will be required to apply to the governor, who may obtain the information for them unless he suspects an improper motive.

Crossbows

Mr. Trotter asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what representations he has had about the potential danger arising from the unrestricted sale of crossbows; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Giles Shaw: Since January 1985 we have received 22 letters about crossbows from hon. Members and 19 from members of the public. I would refer my hon. Friend to the reply given to a question from my hon. Friend the Member for Plymouth, Drake (Miss Fookes) on 3 February, at column 5.

News International, Wapping

Mr. Nellist asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if, pursuant to his answer of 18 February, Official Report, columns 124-25, he will give the same information regarding arrests at Wapping, and police deployment on Saturday 22 February, for the period 18 to 24 February.

Mr. Giles Shaw: I understand from the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis that a further 62 arrests were made in the period up to 2 pm on 24 February. 135 officers were deployed on 22 February.

Nuclear Waste

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether any special civil defence precaution and protection are envisaged for nuclear dumps run by NIREX; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Giles Shaw: The Government advocate an all hazards approach by civil defence planners, but no special civil defence plans in support of NIREX waste disposal sites are considered necessary.

Civil Defence

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what capital expenditure has been incurred by his Department since 1979 on the construction or adaptation of sub-regional headquarters and zone headquarters;

(2) what current expenditure has been incurred by his Department since 1979 on the maintenance of sub-regional headquarters and zone headquarters.

Mr. Giles Shaw: The information is not kept in the form requested. I shall write to the hon. Member.

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department why he decided to close the former sub-region 61 emergency headquarters at Dover.

Mr. Giles Shaw: The headquarters at Dover, which served as a communications centre, could not be refurbished at an economic cost.

Victim Compensation Schemes

Mr. Roger King asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what action the Government intend to seek to encourage the development of schemes for reparation between victim and offender.

Mr. Hurd: We have been observing the development of such schemes with great interest and are providing funding for four experimental projects. As a contribution to public debate and to help in reaching a view on the place of reparation in the criminal justice system, we have prepared a consultative document which is published today. I am arranging for copies to be placed in the Library and in the Vote Office. The document describes existing experimental schemes and the issues of principle and practice which they raise and invites views on these and on the adequacy of the courts' existing powers.

Visa Requirements

Mr. Trotter asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what countries whose citizens do not require visas to enter Britain impose visa requirements on British citizens.

Mr. Eggar: I have been asked to reply.

I refer my hon. Friend to the reply I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Epping Forest (Sir Biggs-Davison) on 21 November 1985 at columns 269-70.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT

Tanzania

Mr. Robert B. Jones asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what specific projects his Department has provided finance for which will improve the development prospects of Tanzania; and what are the sums of money involved.

Mr. Raison: Our largest project in Tanzania is the Songea-Makambako road. This was completed last year at a total cost of £90 million and is to be followed by the establishment of a post-construction maintenance unit (£2·8 million). Other major projects under way are the southern regions health project (£9·4 million) covering the Mbeya referral hospital, and the provision of medical specialists and rural health centres; a rural development project in Lindi-Mtwara (£2·8 million); and grain stores (£4·7 million). In addition, we are involved in other smaller rural development projects (in pest control, the clove industry, land surveys and dairy production in West Kilimangaro) and in a hospital in Zanzibar. We support with technical co-operation science departments in universities in Tanzania, English language teaching and the Tanzania Harbour Authority.

ENVIRONMENT

Local Plans

Dr. Cunningham asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list all the directions, concerning proposed local plans, that have been issued by his Department since May 1979, give the date, to local authorities under section 14(3) of the Town and Country Planning Act 1971.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: One direction has been issued by my Department under section 14(3) of the Town and Country Planning Act 1971. This was given on 28 January 1986 to the London borough of Southwark in respect of the north Southwark local plan. A direction under section 14(3A) of the Act was given to Berwick-upon-Tweed borough council on 20 February 1985 in respect of the Berwick-upon-Tweed town local plan.

National Parks (Land Disposal)

Mr. Knox asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he intends to introduce measures to ensure that national park authorities sell all the land they own, apart from that required for information centres, car parks and other such purposes.

Mrs. Rumbold: No. We believe that national park authorities should pursue their responsibilities where possible without holding land themselves. However, we recognise that there may be good reason, in some circumstances, for them to retain land in their ownership.

Property Services Agency

Mr. Lyell asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish in the Official Report in respect of each local authority in partnership programme and in respect of each other designated district the amount of unused land in the ownership of the Property Services Agency.

Sir George Young: The information is not readily available; but the PSA's policy is to retain only that land for which it has a use. Surplus land is disposed of as quickly as possible.

Local Government Reform

Mr. John Fraser asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the voluntary bodies that will receive the total of £1·388 million allocation to Lambeth for voluntary groups following the abolition of the Greater London council; and how much grant each body will receive.

Sir George Young: The Secretary of State has accepted the following projects as eligible for transitional grant support in the London borough of Lambeth, and for the maximum amounts specified. However, it is for Lambeth council to decide which of these organisations should receive support under the transitional grant scheme, and the precise sum to be allocated to each, up to the allocation limit of £1,388 million.

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what are his proposals for the future of the Greater London council's seaside and country homes after the abolition of the council; and if he will make a statement.

Sir George Young: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Havant (Mr. Lloyd) on 20 February, at columns 334-35.

Mr. Key asked the Secretary of State for the Environment when he intends to lay before the House his report under section 7(2) of the Local Government Act 1985.

Mr. Waldegrave: My right hon. Friend has today laid his report and arranged for copies to be available in the Vote Office.

Urban Aid

Mr. Fatchett asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the practice of his Department's urban housing renewal units regarding notification to the local authority's elected members if they are to visit housing estates in their areas.

Sir George Young: The Department's letters to chief executives of local authorities offering a visit by the urban housing renewal unit made it clear that the unit would be glad to meet with elected members if they so wish. It is for the local authorities to decide on the extent to which elected members should be involved in the unit's visits.

Mr. Hancock asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will now formally notify Portsmouth city council of its entitlement to submit a bid for urban aid; and if he will make a statement.

Sir George Young: I shall answer this question shortly.

Caravan Sites

Mr. Steen asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement as to his policy towards the placing of new caravan sites (a) in areas of outstanding natural beauty, (b) in areas of great landscape value and (c) along the heritage coastline; and what advice he has issued to the Camping and Caravanning Club with regard to consultations with local authorities before the issuing of licences in areas as above.

Mrs. Rumbold: New caravan sites are subject to the requirements of the Caravan Sites and Control of Development Act 1960 which prohibits the issue of a licence unless the site has the benefit of planning permission. Schedule 1 to the Act, however, sets out circumstances in which a site licence is not required and there is no statutory requirement to consult the local planning authority in such cases. No specific advice has been given to the Camping and Caravanning Club on this subject.

Mr. Steen asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will review the provisions of the Camping and Caravanning Act 1980 in the light of the granting of licences by the Camping and Caravanning Club without prior consultation with local authorities; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Rumbold: The Camping and Caravanning Club is authorised by a certificate of exemption granted under paragraph 12 of schedule 1 to the Caravan Sites and Control of Development Act 1960, to approve sites for use by not more than five caravans at a time without the need for a site licence. This was reviewed in 1980 following a public consultation exercise, and the Government proposed that legislation should be introduced eventually to require exempted organisations to notify the local planning authority prior to approval of such sites.

GLC (Technical and Professional Services)

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will place in the Library a copy of the London Residuary Body's review of the Greater London council's technical and professional services required by paragraph 8, schedule 13 of the Local Government Act 1985.

Mr. Tracey: The London Residuary Body's report was received today and I am arranging for a copy to be placed in the Library.

Citadels

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the current use of each of the second world war citadels sited at Dollis hill, station Z Harrow, Curzon street house, W1, Faraday building, EC4, Montague house, SW1, Broad Sanctuary, SW1, South Kensington, Horseferry road, and Horseguards Parade (Admiralty citadel).

Sir George Young: Of the nine second world war citadels, only five remain on the Government estate and are sued for various operational purposes in conjunction with the Government buildings of which they now form part.

Radioactive Pollution

Mr. Bowen Wells asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if the Government have submitted their report to the Paris commission outlining the measures being taken to meet the commission's 1984 recommendation that the best available technology should be taken into account in minimising radioactive discharges to the marine environment from nuclear reprocessing plants.

Mr. Waldegrave: A report by the United Kingdom was submitted to the Paris commission on 24 February 1986. I have placed copies in the Library of the House.

Sellafield (Safety Audit)

Mr. Hayes asked the Secretary of State for the Environment whether his Radio Chemical Inspectorate will be associated with the Health and Safety Executive's safety audit of Sellafield.

Mr. Waldegrave: Yes. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment and my right hon. Friend the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food have today asked their inspectors to collaborate with the Health and Safety Executive and to report to them on the adequacy and effectiveness of arrangements and procedures relating to releases of radioactivity from the British Nuclear Fuels Sellafield site.

National Heritage Memorial Fund

Mr. Wheeler asked the Secretary of State for the Environment whether, further to his reply of 20 February, Official Report, column 340, he will give further details of the financing of the additional resources he has announced for the National Heritage Memorial Fund.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: Subject to parliamentary approval of the necessary Supplementary Estimate, this will be financed by an increase of £9·5 million in the cash limit for Class VIII, Vote 4 from £70·42 million to £79·92 million, and from £1·0 million savings within that Vote. The cash limit for the DOE-NTI cash block is being reduced by £10·962 million, from £115·53million to £126·492 million, £1·462 million of which is being used to offset the additional capital allocation to Bradford city council as I announced in reply to a question from my hon. Friend the Member for Bradford, North (Mr. Lawler) on 7 February, at column 264.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Milk Quotas

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when he will re-issue more of the milk quota under the outgoers scheme in England and Wales.

Mr. Jopling: I announced in July last year that my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales and I aimed to make further allocations of quota to three categories of producer in 1986-87. I am glad to say that it will now be possible to enable these allocations to be made, ahead of schedule, in 1985-86.

The first group of producers we are helping comprises those whose development awards represented a high proportion of their total quota. These producers were particularly hard-hit by the 35 per cent. cutback on those awards. They will now have sufficient quota restored to them to ensure that they have at least 90 per cent. of the total quota which they would have had if there had been no cutback.

The second group comprises small producers with development awards. We shall now be ending completely the 35 per cent. cutback on development awards for all producers with quotas of up to 200,000 litres. At the same time, we shall restore to 200,000 litres the quotas of other producers who have been reduced below this level by the cutback. To avoid anomalies, no producer benefiting from this provision will have his quota increased beyond the 200,000 litre mark.

The third group we are helping includes producers with land which was expropriated by public authorities, but which will be returned to dairying by 31 March 1989.

Arrangements are also being made to allocate quota to certain institutions which used milk from their own herds in their catering arrangements before the introduction, last November, of additional restrictions on the use of unpasteurised milk.

Soil Survey

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he has yet reached a decision on his Department's future funding of the Soil Survey of England and Wales.

Mr. Jopling: In January 1985 I announced, in accordance with the advice of the Priorities Board, that, while the Ministry's commission with the Soil Survey would be unchanged in 1985-86, it would be set at half its current level in 1986-87. This early notification was intended to give the Soil Survey and the Agricultural and Food Research Council an opportunity to explore the possibility of alternative sources of income for future years. The Soil Survey has responded positively to the challenge of securing funds through a wider range of commercial contracts and the Priorities Board has now given further consideration to the funding of the Soil Survey beyond 1986-87. In accordance with the board's recommendations, I have decided that the Ministry should continue to commission work with the Soil Survey at levels of £650,000 in 1987-88 and £500,000 in 1988-89. The needs of my Department beyond this period will be reviewed at the appropriate time and the Priorities Board will again be consulted.

Environmentally Sensitive Areas

Dr. Marek asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what will be the length of agreements made between his Department and farmers proposed for environmentally sensitive areas; whether the payments will fully take into account inflation on a yearly basis; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Fenner [pursuant to her reply, 24 February 1986, c. 426]: We are awaiting the outcome of the consultations for which clause 12 of the Agriculture Bill provides before deciding on detailed arrangements.

Falkland Islands (Fishing Resources)

Mr. Randall asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether he intends to submit a programme to the EEC Commission in order to seek to attract funds for the development of fishing resources of the Falkland Islands; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Raison: I have been asked to reply.

I have no plans to do so. The choice of projects to be financed from European Community aid funds is primarily a matter for the Falkland Islands Government and the European Commission. Some assistance from the fourth European development fund has been given to assess the feasibility of salmon ranching.

In the common fisheries policy there is provision for assistance from Community and national funds for exploratory voyages by Community fishing vessels in certain circumstances. Were the Government to receive an application for such assistance for a voyage to the Falkland Islands from a British vessel owner, my right hon. Friend the Minister for Agriculture, Fisheries and Food would give it sympathetic consideration with a view to seeking the necessary Commission approval.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Birkenhead and Barrow Shipyards

Mr. Tim Smith asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what is his policy towards the maintenance of the existing terms and conditions of employment of the work force at the Birkenhead and Barrow warship yards, including pension arrangements, following the proposed privatisation of those yards; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Morrison: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave to the hon. Member for Bolton, North-East (Mr. Thurnham) on 24 February, at column 419.

Mr. Tim Smith asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry (1) what is his policy towards the involvement of employees in the privatisation of the Barrow and Birkenhead warship yards;

(2) what priority he proposes to attach to local employee and local community participation in considering the employee consortium's buy-out proposals for the Barrow and Birkenhead warship yards; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hanley asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what criteria other than price he intends to apply when judging rival bids for the Barrow and Birkenhead warship yards next week.

Mr. Thurnham asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make it his policy to attach a high priority to regional control and management and investment in the north-west when he considers bids for Barrow and Birkenhead warship yards; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Morrison: The Government have made it clear that they welcome bids from all interested parties who have the necessary skill, finance and commercial attributes to make a success of the business. Commercial considerations of this sort will be paramount in the assessment of bids for Vickers Shipbuilding and Engineering Limited.

Nuclear Waste

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether nuclear waste dumps established by NIREX would be eligible for regional aid if located in the appropriate areas.

Mr. Peter Morrison: I shall reply to the hon. Member as soon as possible.

Financial Services Bill

Mr. Dykes asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make a statement about the regulation of individuals under the Financial Services Bill.

Mr. Howard: I have received from the Marketing of Investment Board organising committee and the Securities and Investment Board a joint proposal that the Financial Services Bill should be amended so as to provide additional powers to maintain a comprehensive register of individuals employed in investment businesses, in order to allow for the registration of all those involved in selling life assurance and unit trusts. The board and the committee have today published their joint proposal and I would very much welcome within the next month the views of interested parties on its proposals. At this stage, I would hope that such representations would concentrate on the proposal to provide additional powers under the Bill, rather than on the details of the particular registration scheme outlined in the proposal.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Community Service Projects

Mr. Irving asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland (1) if he will make a statement on his Department's support for community service projects in Northern Ireland; and whether he has any plans to extend or develop his Department's work in this area;

(2) if he will estimate how many people have been involved in community service schemes supported by his Department in each of the last five years; and if he will make a statement.

Dr. Boyson: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply given to him by my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister on 20 February 1986 at column 266. My Department will continue to give support, within available resources, for the wide range of projects through which people in Northern Ireland are able to provide service to the community.

Strip Searches

Mr. McNamara asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many strip searches were made of female prisoners in Her Majesty's prison, Armagh, in January; if he will give the number of persons involved and the number of times each person was searched; whether any prison contraband, smuggled item or illegal correspondence was discovered in any search, indicating which items; in how many cases prisoners refused to be searched and had to be restrained while the search was being conducted; and if he will indicate the reasons for the search, namely, making an appearance at Armagh courthouse on remand, attending trial, inter-prison visit or other reasons.

Mr. Scott: During January 1986, a total of 49 searches was carried out on 27 prisoners; eight prisoners were searched once, 16 were searched twice, and three prisoners were searched on three occasions. No prohibited article was found during these searches, and no prisoner refused to be searched. Searches were carried out in the following circumstances:

	Number
First admission on remand or whilst awaiting trial	10
First admission on sentence or on final discharge	19
Attending remand courts	2
Bail Court appearances	10
Going on, or returning from, home leave	8
Total	49

Ulster Defence Regiment and Royal Ulster Constabulary

Sir John Biggs-Davison asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what changes have been made in the operational and other procedures of the Ulster Defence Regiment and the Royal Ulster Constabulary in the terms of paragraph 8 of the joint communiqué of the third meeting of the Anglo-Irish Intergovernmental Council at the level of Heads of Government, Cmnd. 9657.

Mr. Scott [pursuant to his reply, 13 February 1986, c. 523]: The Chief Constable and the General Officer Commanding are committed to the principle that under the rule of law the armed forces, which include the Ulster Defence Regiment, operate only in support of the civil power. They are moving as fast as operational deployments and manpower constraints will allow to ensuring that, save in the most exceptional circumstances, there will be a Royal Ulster Constabulary presence with all army patrols engaged on duties which are likely to bring them into direct contact with members of the public.

A working party established by the Chief Constable has for sometime been engaged on the preparation of a code of conduct for the Royal Ulster Constabulary; it aims to complete this work as soon as possible.

A leaflet providing guidance on complaints against the conduct of members of Her Majesty's Forces in Northern Ireland has recently been made available to members of the public. It explains in simple language the procedure for making such a complaint and how that complaint will be dealt with.

EMPLOYMENT

Labour Statistics

Sir Gerard Vaughan asked the Paymaster General what was the number and percentage of registered unemployed in Reading in April 1979 and the latest date for which figures are available, showing in both cases those who have been unemployed for over a year; and whether he will also publish the national average unemployment numbers and percentages for the same dates.

Mr. Lang: The following information is in the Library. The table shows the total number of unemployed claimants and the unemployment rate for the Reading travel-to-work area in January 1986, together with the number of claimants who have been unemployed for over one year at the same date. Comparable figures for April 1979 are not available because of changes in the way figures are collected. However, the table also shows the numbers of unemployed registrants and the unemployment rate for the former Reading travel-to-work area in April 1979. The table also shows the numbers of unemployed claimants, adjusted for discontinuities, in the United Kingdom at April 1979 and January 1986. These are seasonally adjusted and exclude school-leavers.

Unemployed Claimants—January 1986

	Number	Unemployment Percentage Rate per cent.	Unemployed over one year
Reading travel-to-work area	10,856	8·0	3,352
Unemployed Registrants—April 1979
Reading old travel-to-work area	4,382	2·5	818

Unemployed Claimants seasonally adjusted, excluding school-leavers

United Kingdom	Number	Unemployment percentage rate
April 1979	1,184,600	4·9
January 1986	3,204,900	13·2

Sir Gerard Vaughan asked the Paymaster General how many jobs are estimated by his Department to be available in the Reading area.

Mr. Lang: On 3 January 1986 there were 1,025 unfilled vacancies at the Reading jobcentre and 145 unfilled vacancies at the careers office. These figures cannot be added together because some vacancies are notified to both careers offices and jobcentres.

Morever, they are not a complete record of all vacancies available in the area.

Sir Gerard Vaughan asked the Paymaster General how many unemployed persons in Reading are currently registered at jobcentres and careers offices.

Mr. Lang: The information in respect of registrants at jobcentres is not available, because statistics of those registered at jobcentres do not distinguish those unemployed registrants from employed people seeking a change of employment. However, on 3 January 1986 there were 358 unemployed persons registered at the Reading careers office.

Mr. Hancock asked the Paymaster General how many unemployed persons in Portsmouth are currently registered at jobcentres and careers offices.

Mr. Lang: The information in respect of registrants at jobcentres is not available, because statistics of those registered at jobcentres do not distinguish those unemployed registrants from employed people seeking a change of employment. However, on 3 January 1986 there were 441 unemployed persons registered at the Portsmouth careers office.

Job Vacancies (Portsmouth)

Mr. Hancock asked the Paymaster General how many jobs are estimated by his Department to be available in the Portsmouth, South area.

Mr. Lang: Information on the total number of jobs available in the Portsmouth, South constituency is not available. However, the number of vacancies at jobcentres and careers offices is collected. On 3 January 1986 there were 197 unfilled vacancies at the Portsmouth jobcentre and 20 unfilled vacancies at the Portsmouth careers office.

Pay Levels

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Paymaster General if he will list the extent to which levels of pay have risen in manufacturing industry in the west midlands each year since 1981; and if he will list the number of people on short-time working contracts in December of each year during the same period and the number of hours of overtime worked per week in the same month.

Mr. Lang: The available information is as follows:

Average gross weekly earnings of full time adult employees in manufacturing in the West Midlands*

	Percentage increase
April 1981 to April 1982	†9·5
April 1982 to April 1983	†7·5

Long-term Unemployed Persons

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Paymaster General what further expenditure he is considering for schemes aimed at providing work for the long-term unemployed in the Wolverhampton area.

Mr. Lang: Our expenditure plans are set out in the White Paper "The Government's Expenditure Plans 1986-87 to 1988-89" (Cmnd. 9702).

Youth Training Scheme

Mr. Cash asked the Paymaster General whether he is satisfied with progress in setting up the two-year YTS.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: Progress in setting up two-year YTS has been excellent. The new programme will begin on 1 April, but already some 86 per cent. of the required places are definitely or likely to be provided. Around 86 per cent. of basic places have been found, and also 84 per cent. of premium places, which are designed to help young people and parts of the country with special needs. Our aim is to provide high quality training for young people of all abilities and circumstances, and the record shows we are well on the way to achieving that.

Wages Orders

Mr. Cash asked the Paymaster General if he will provide further information on the state of compliance by employers with wages orders.

Mr. Trippier: The best guide of the state of compliance is the number of workers found to be underpaid as a proportion of the workers whose pay is covered by all checks conducted by wages inspectors. The provisional figure for 1985 is 5·6 per cent.

In attempting to recall that statistic in order to refute the impression given by the hon. Member for Manchester, Blackley (Mr. Eastham) and other hon. Members, during the Second Reading debate on the Wages Bill on 11 February, at column 874, of widespread underpayment of workers covered by wages orders, I regret that I gave the figure of 8 per cent., which was inaccurate.

Health and Safety

Mr. Teddy Taylor asked the Paymaster General how many notifiable accidents and deaths, respectively, were recorded over the most recent annual period for which figures are available in the operation, respectively, of coal fired, oil fired and nuclear power stations; and how many were notified in respect of coal-mining operations.

Mr. Trippier [pursuant to his reply, 24 February 1986]: Information is not available in the form requested and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

For the electricity industry as a whole, in 1984, there were 11 deaths and 89 major injuries reported to the Health and Safety Executive arising as a result of or in connection with work activities.

Comparable figures for the coal mining industry were 19 deaths and 273 major injuries.

TRANSPORT

M3 (Widening)

Mr. John Browne asked the Secretary of State for Transport what are the estimated costs of widening the two-lane motorway between Popham and Bar End into a three-lane motorway.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The cost of widening the Popham to Easton Lane section of the M3 to dual three-lane carriageways is estimated at about £24 million at current prices. This figure excludes the cost of delays to traffic. The Easton Lane to Bar End section has already been constructed to dual three-lane carriageway standard.

Mr. John Browne asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will publish the traffic density forecasts he used when deciding to construct the Popham to Bar End section of the M3 to dual two-lane standards, as distinct from the three-lane standard of the rest of the motorway.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: At the time of the decision to construct the Popham to Easton Lane, Winchester section of the M3 as a dual two-lane motorway, the traffic flow was forecast to be up to about 43,000 vehicles per average August 16-hour day for the design year 1995. This is well within the current design capacity for a dual two-lane motorway.

Mr. John Browne asked the Secretary of State for Transport how much money was saved by constructing a two-lane motorway rather than a three-lane motorway on the M3 between Popham and Bar End, Winchester.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: On the basis of national average rates at 1983 price levels it is estimated that to have constructed the 10 miles of the M3 from Popham to Easton Lane as a dual three-lane motorway would have cost an additional £18 million. The Easton Lane to Bar End section of the M3 has been constructed to dual three-lane standard.

Trunk Roads (Database)

Mr. Coombs asked the Secretary of State for Transport what stage his Department has reached in the development of a national computerised database of trunk road conditions; and if he will indicate the nature of the information which will be retained.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: A three-year project to develop a computer database began on 1 January 1986. It relates to trunk roads including motorways.

When completed the system will hold data in relation to location, layout, construction, condition, traffic, accidents, classification and bridges.

Uninsured Drivers

Mr. Conway asked the Secretary of State for Transport whether he has any estimate of the number of vehicles in use on public roads without insurance cover.

Mr. Michael Spicer: In 1984, the most recent year for which figures are available, there were 194,378 findings of guilt by magistrates' courts in England and Wales for using a motor vehicle without having insurance covering personal injury to third parties as required by law. I am not aware of any reliable estimate of the number of vehicles actually being used without insurance.

Oadby (Traffic Congestion)

Sir John Farr asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will take steps to make plans to avoid heavy traffic congestion in Oadby when the Leicester southern district distributor road stage 3 is completed; and if he will now put in hand work on the eastern district distributor road.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The Department will consult the county on the design and construction of the junctions where the proposed county road schemes joint trunk road A6 in Oadby. Non-trunk roads are the responsibility of Leicestershire county council as highway authority.

Car Insurance (Discs)

Mr. Conway asked the Secretary of State for Transport what consideration he has given to the mandatory display of insurance discs on car windscreens; and what representations he has received to that effect.

Mr. Michael Spicer: The use of windscreens discs to provide evidence of insurance is suggested from time to time and has been most recently by the RAC. But, for the reasons I gave in reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Derby, North (Mr. Knight) on 29 January, at column 520, I have yet to be convinced of the value of such a system.

Roads (Lighting)

Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the Secretary of State for Transport whether there have been any studies undertaken to show that the artificial lighting of roads does or does not improve driver comfort at night.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: No such studies have been undertaken.

M25 (Traffic Flows)

Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the Secretary of State for Transport (1) how current traffic flows on the M25 compare with pre-construction estimates; and if he will make a statement.

(2) if he will specify those sections of the M25 where traffic flows exceed 50,000 vehicles per day, and their direction.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The information requested is set out in the table. Current flows for those sections listed relate to traffic counts taken in December 1985. The results of traffic counts on other sections will be available by the summer. The measured flows are the total numbers of vehicles travelling in both directions. There is no significant difference between the numbers travelling clockwise and anti-clockwise. In no case does a directional flow exceed 50,000 vehicles per day.

The design flow for the dual three-lane sections of the M25 was 85,000 vehicles per day. The design flow for any road is less than its maximum capacity.

M25 (Lighting)

Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the Secretary of State for Transport which of the 30 fog blackspots on the M25 recently identified are currently lit; how many of the remainder he plans to have lit; and if he will list them.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The following fog-prone sites on the M25 are lit:

River Roding crossing
River Lee crossing
Junction 5 area
Between Junctions 13 and 14
The "Paddocks" area
Junction 23 area
Junction 7 area
Between Junctions 29 and 30
Junction 25 area
Between Junctions 30 and 31
Junction 28 slip roads.

Additionally, lighting will be provided at junction 6. I am presently considering the position in relation to the remainder of the sites identified.

Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the Secretary of State for Transport which stretches of the M25 opened in 1985 and due to be opened in 1986 will be lit.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Lighting has been, or will be, provided on the sections of the M25 between junctions 14 and 15 and on junctions 3, 6, 11, 15, 21, 21A and the remainder of junction 23.

Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list the total number of miles of the M25 currently lit and the number of miles unlit.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: There are 44.5 miles currently lit and 62·55 miles unlit.

Motorways (Lighting)

Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the Secretary of State for Transport how many miles of Britain's motorways system are currently lit and how many unlit; how many additional miles of motorway are planned to be lit; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: 384 miles of the English motorway system are lit and 1,101 miles unlit. It is currently planned to light a further 36 miles. The extent of motorway lighting is kept under review.

Lockheed Aircraft Company

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Secretary of State for Transport whether Her Majesty's Government have held discussions with representatives of the Lockheed Aircraft Company about the purchase of any British airport by that company.

Mr. Michael Spicer: No. I met representatives of Lockheed Air Terminal Inc. in November 1985, when they expressed an interest in managing airports and airport terminals, but not in purchasing airports.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Nuclear Test Ban Treaty

Mr. D. E. Thomas asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if, following the announcement by Mr. Gorbachev on 19 December 1985 that the Soviet Union is prepared to allow on-site verification of potential nuclear testing sites, he will forthwith initiate a new series of talks with the Soviet Union on a comprehensive nuclear test ban treaty.

Mr. Eggar: No. Our position on re-opening negotiations for a comprehensive test ban treaty remains that outstanding verification problems would have to be resolved first.

Mr. Turgut Ozal

Mr. Hardy asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the recent visit to the United Kingdom of the Prime Minister of Turkey.

Mr. Boyes asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what matters were discussed with the Prime Minister of Turkey during his recent visit; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given by my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister to the hon. Member for Liverpool, Riverside (Mr. Parry) on 24 February at column 412.

South Africa

Mrs. Clwyd asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when the European Economic Community Council will next discuss South Africa.

Mrs. Chalker: South Africa is expected to be one of the topics for discussion at today's meeting of EC Foreign Ministers in the Netherlands.

Central America

Mr. Terry Lewis asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what recent discussions have been held in the Foreign Affairs Council concerning the Contadora process or the Caraballeda declaration.

Mr. Eggar: None. However, within the framework of European political co-operation there is regular discussion at appropriate levels of all important issues, including Central America. On 20 January, the twelve member states of the European Community publicly welcomed the impetus given to the Contadora negotiations by the Caraballeda declaration.

Nicaragua

Mr. Eastham asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations have been made by European Economic Community member states to the United States of America about its policies towards Nicaragua.

Mr. Eggar: The twelve member states of the European Community discuss all-important issues, including central America, with the United States Government which is aware of their views.

Prime Minister (Video Tape)

Mr. Tony Banks: asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what use will be made of the video tape profile and script of the Prime Minister delivered to his Department from the Central Office of Information on 21 February 1986.

Mr. Eggar: No decision has been taken on what further use will be made of this material, which was prepared in connection with the visits of my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister to south-east Asia and the middle east in 1985.

ENVIRONMENT

Nuclear Waste

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Secretary of State for the Environment whether any of the structure plans (a) approved by him or (b) currently before him incorporated, when originally submitted, policies seeking to prohibit the disposal or transport of nuclear waste; and what is his general policy towards the use of structure plans as a vehicle for such control of nuclear waste.

Mr. Waldegrave: A proposed alteration to the Bedfordshire structure plan and a proposed additional policy to the Humberside structure plan, submitted to my right hon. Friend for approval, oppose the disposal of nuclear waste within the boundaries of the two counties. The Bedfordshire alteration also opposes the transportation of nuclear wastes within or through the county.

My Department has pointed out to Bedfordshire and Humberside county councils that such policies, if adopted, would conflict with Government policy as set out in the 1982 White Paper "Radioactive Waste Management" regarding the need for suitable disposal facilities for low and intermediate level radioactive wastes. My Department also invited Bedfordshire county council to consider whether the proposed policy to control material transported could be regarded as a measure for the management of traffic and therefore within the functions of the structure plan. My right hon. Friend is presently considering his response. There are no policies in approved structure plans which prohibit the disposal or transport of nuclear waste.

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) if, when announcing the list of possible sites for the disposal of nuclear waste, he will include a statement detailing, in respect of each site (a) his most recent assessment of public opinion in the areas concerned, (b) his assessment of the regional policy implications of the choice, (c) the implications for development blight in the area and (d) his assessment of the impact on other local industries; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what account he is taking in considering the list of nuclear dump sites submitted to him by NIREX on 8 January of (a) public opinion in the areas concerned, (b) regional policy, (c) development blight, (d) other local industries, (e) alternative sites, (f) the effect on the nuclear programme of not permitting dumping and (g) the effect on the reprocessing of nuclear waste from other countries.

Mr. Waldegrave: In considering the list of sites my right hon. Friend's main concern was to ensure that NIREX's proposals were the best way of carrying forward the Government's policy for the management of radioactive waste. Considerations such as those mentioned by the right hon. Member will be suitable for discussion at the public inquiry into NIREX's proposals for development.

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if, when arranging the list of possible sites for the disposal of nuclear waste, he will also publish a full list of sites considered by NIREX but rejected by either NIREX or him; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waldegrave: No.

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if, when arranging the list of possible sites for the disposal of nuclear waste, he will make a statement on the effect on the reprocessing of nuclear waste from other countries of the failure to construct such a dump; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waldegrave: The proposed new disposal facility is needed to supplement the site at Drigg in Cumbria and to take wastes from the reprocessing of United Kingdom-produced spent fuel, from the electricity generating industry and from hospitals, research establishments and industry. The wastes from reprocessing fuel from overseas are not a factor in the decision to investigate geologically the four sites announced today.

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) whether he will consider changes to the list of sites chosen for geological exploration under a special development order;

(2) if in the light of comments received on the draft special development order to be submitted to Parliament to give NIREX planning permission to investigate geologically, he is prepared to bring forward the order in an amended form; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waldegrave: Any amendments to the draft special development order will be considered on their merits.

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the areas from which he has received petitions against proposed nuclear dumps; and if he will state (a) the account he has taken of those in formulating his proposed choice of sites and (b) the account he has taken of them subsequently.

Mr. Waldegrave: My Department's Yorkshire and Humberside regional director has recently received a petition in opposition to storage or disposal facilities for raidoactive waste in Humberside. I am aware that a similar petition has been presented to Parliament by the hon. Member. These will be taken into account before my right hon. Friend lays before the House the special development order that will authorise geological investigations of sites by NIREX. The choice of sites was for NIREX.

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will delay any announcement of the list of sites for nuclear dumps until he has had time to consider the petition presented to the House on 21 February by the hon. Member for Great Grimsby.

Mr. Waldegrave: My right hon. Friend will take the petition into account before he lays before the House the special development order that will authorise NIREX to undertake geological investigations at sites.

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make it his policy for Ministers in his Department to receive deputations from local authorities in whose areas are situated sites proposed by NIREX for geological investigations as possible sites for nuclear dumping following the announcement of those chosen for investigations; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waldegrave: Yes.

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Secretary of State for the Environment, pursuant to the answer of 20 February about the NIREX list of nuclear sites, whether the representations made by hon. Members with Oxfordshire constituencies were made before or after he received the NIREX list on 8 January.

Mr. Waldegrave: Before.

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what proposals he has had for meetings with hon. Members representing Humberside constituencies to discuss the NIREX list of possible nuclear waste sites; and what other representations he has received from such hon. Members on this subject.

Mr. Waldegrave: I have received a number of representations from hon. Members representing Humberside constituencies, both before and since 8 January. I met the hon. Member and the hon. Members for Brigg and Cleethorpes (Mr. Brown) and for Glanford and Scunthorpe (Mr. Hickmet) on 17 December to discuss the question of sites. The hon. Member has asked subsequently for a further meeting. I reaffirm that I shall be pleased to meet hon. Members following the statement on NIREX sites by my right hon. Friend today.

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if, when he announces the list of possible sites for investigation as nuclear dumps, he will also publish the names of sites included in the NIREX list of 8 January.

Mr. Waldegrave: My right hon. Friend's statement today identified all the sites proposed to him by the chairman of NIREX on 8 January.

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Secretary of State for the Environment whether, when he makes the announcement next week of the list of NIREX sites mentioned in the reply of 20 February to the hon. Member for Great Grimsby, he will specify which of the sites are in public ownership or owned by NIREX partners; and if he will make a statement on the criteria used to assess the implications for choice of whether the site was in public ownership, NIREX partners' ownership or private ownership, respectively.

Mr. Waldegrave: Of the sites which NIREX wishes to investigate further, those at Elstow, Bradwell and South Killingholme are owned by the CEGB. That at Fulbeck is owned by the Ministry of Defence. I understand that ownership was a factor in NIREX's choice of sites in so far as it seemed likely to affect availability.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Personal Incomes

Mr. Meacher asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what has been the gain or loss to those with incomes (a) under £5,000, (b) £5,000-£10,000, (c) £10,000-£15,000, (d) £15,000-£20,000, (e) £20,000-£30,000, (f) £30,000-£50,000 and (g) over £50,000 a year as a result of each Finance Act since 1979, both in aggregate and per person on average in each of these categories, in each case indicating how much is due to indexation and how much is real gain.

Mr. Alexander asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) what was the value of income tax concessions to those earnings £30,000 per annum and more for each year since 1979;

(2) what was the number of people taken out of tax for each year since 1979 and the cost to the Exchequer in revenue forgone.

Mr. Moore [pursuant to his reply, 15 January 1986, c. 593-94]: The information is in the tables. For each financial year shown, the tables compare the yield from the tax regime in that year with the 1978-79 tax regime. All estimates are calculated on the 1985-86 tax base and all tax regimes have been indexed to 1985-86 levels by reference to the statutory formula. The comparisons therefore allow for budgetary changes in income tax rates and allowances, but not for any changes since 1978-79 in the definition of the income tax base.

The first table shows the total reduction (+) or increase (−) in tax yield from each income range; and the second table shows the average change for individual tax units. The third table shows the change in numbers of individuals liable to tax.

As child tax allowances were being phased out in 1978-79 they have been excluded from the comparison.

It is not possible to provide useful estimates of the liabilities in 1985-86 for the 1978-79 regime without indexation since Inland Revenue records do not cover many of the people who would be brought into tax by such low levels of personal allowances. A partial analysis with incomplete coverage would be misleading.

Schools (Heating Systems)

Mr. Campbell-Savours asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what information he has as to the number of schools which have had to be closed because their heating systems have been inadequate to deal with the recent cold weather.

Mr. Dunn: This information is not collected centrally.

English Teaching

Mr. Thurnham asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what is his policy towards the teaching of English to children of ethnic minorities; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Chris Patten: The Government believe that all ethnic minority children must be equipped with a good command of English if they are to participate fully in school and adult life. Responsibility for determining the nature and extent of provision for teaching English as a second language rests with the local education authorities. The Swann committee endorsed an integrated approach towards teaching ESL within the normal classroom, where it can be related to the rest of the curriculum. The Department is encouraging LEAs to adopt this approach wherever possible. Good practice will continue to be promoted and disseminated by Her Majesty's Inspectorate and supported by grants made by my right hon. Friend the Home Secretary, under section 11 of the Local Government Act 1966.

Public Examinations (Multiple Choice Questions)

Mr. Greenway asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what information he has on the incidence of multiple choice questions in public examinations; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Chris Patten: This information is not collected by the Department.

Reading University

Sir Gerard Vaughan asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science how many students were at Reading university in 1978 and in the latest year for which figures are available.

Mr. Walden: The information is as follows:

	Full-time students	Part-time students
December 1978	5,849	357
December 1984	5,560	515

Student Grants

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science, pursuant to his reply of 22 January, Official Report, columns 194-6, about the value of student grants, if he will provide the same information from 1978-79 as a base year.

Mr. Walden: The information is as follows:

Physics and Mathematics Graduates

Mr. Norman Atkinson asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what proportion he estimates of the current year's graduates in physics and mathematics will enter the teaching profession; and how many will have honours.

Mr. Chris Patten: Graduates in 1986 in mathematics and physics will not be available to enter the teaching profession until autumn 1987, after successfully completing a course of initial teacher training. Approximately 10 per cent. of estimated 1986 graduates in physics and 15 per cent. of those in mathematics have so far applied for places on initial teacher training courses in England and Wales starting in the autumn of 1986, leading to a postgraduate certificate in education. Estimates are not available of the likely honours graduates among these applicants. About 80 per cent. of all graduates in both subjects normally obtain honours.

Erdington (Secondary School)

Mr. Corbett asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science (1) on what date he received a copy of the statutory notice about the proposal by Birmingham local education authority to establish a combined secondary school from September 1986 in Erdington as a result of a merger between Erdington girls' and Orchard schools;

(2) what representations, and on what dates, he has received seeking an early decision on the proposal by Birmingham local education authority to establish a combined secondary school from September 1986 in Erdington as a result of a merger between Erdington girls' and Orchard schools;

(3) whether he will announce his decision on the proposal by Birmingham local education authority to establish a combined secondary school from September 1986 in Erdington as a result of a merger between Erdington girls' and Orchard schools.

Mr. Dunn: Birmingham local education authority published on 16 March 1985 proposals under section 12 of the Education Act 1980 to cease to maintain Erdington girls' school and Orchard school at the end of the summer term 1986 and to establish a new mixed school in both sets of premises from September 1986.

A copy of the proposals was sent to my right hon. Friend on 19 March and received on 25 March.

The chief education officer of Birmingham wrote on 15 January 1986 to an official of the Department expressing concern that no decision had been announced. Since that date the authority has made further representations seeking a decision by means of telephone calls to officials.

A letter has been sent to the Birmingham local education authority today announcing my right hon. Friend's decision to approve the proposal.

GCSE Examination

Mr. Hancock asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science which local authorities have asked for the introduction of the GCSE examination to be delayed.

Mr. Chris Patten: I refer the hon. Member to the answer which I gave on 17 February, at column 14 to the hon. and learned Member for Leicester, West (Mr. Janner).

Higher Education

Mr. Hancock asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science how many representations he has received concerning the Green Paper "The Development of Higher Education into the 1990s"; and what has been the nature of these representations.

Mr. Walden: My right hon. Friend has received 446 representations that referred specifically to the Green Paper "The Development of Higher Education into the 1990s" and several hundred more concerning aspects of higher education policy that were covered in the Green Paper. The nature of the representations and the concerns expressed have varied widely. The issues most frequently raised have been: the funding of higher education, including research; future student numbers; the subject balance within higher education; and links between higher education and industry.

Schools (Leeds)

Mr. Fatchett asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science how many schools in Leeds metropolitan district council were built before 1914.

Mr. Dunn: This information is not held centrally.

"Drug Misuse and the Young"

Mr. Michael Forsyth asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what responses there have been to his Department's booklet, "Drug Misuse and the Young", which was published in 1985.

Mr. Dunn: A great deal of interest has been shown in this booklet: to date over 150,000 copies have been issued; another 50,000 will be issued. Most of these have been distributed to schools and colleges and other copies have been requested by health education departments, the youth service, the police, the churches, television authorities, and individuals from the United Kingdom and overseas. The booklet has been generally well received and is being used in various training courses and seminars on drugs misuse and as a reference by local authority officers, teachers and others.

SOLICITOR-GENERAL FOR SCOTLAND

Procurator Fiscal's Office, Glasgow

Mr. Martin asked the Solicitor-General for Scotland why there was a delay in making public the burglary at the procurator fiscal's office in Glasgow on 2 January.

The Solicitor-General for Scotland: Premature disclosure might have hampered investigations which were begun immediately and which continue. There was also concern that publication of details of the break in or lines of inquiry being pursued might be prejudicial to the rights of accused persons to a fair trial.

Mr. Martin asked the Solicitor-General for Scotland following the theft from the procurator fiscal's office in Glasgow, what steps are being taken to improve security.

The Solicitor-General for Scotland: A full review of security arrangements in the premises occupied by all procurators fiscal is underway, and a number of changes have already been implemented.

Drugs

Mr. Norman Hogg asked the Solicitor-General for Scotland whether any arrangements exist in Scotland in cases where controlled drugs are to be presented as evidence in a trial whereby the bulk of the quantity of the drug confiscated may be destroyed and a sample amount held for production, together with a certificate indicating the precise quantity originally confiscated.

The Solicitor-General for Scotland: Under existing law and practice, the Crown must lodge all productions required for trial unless it is not reasonably practicable to do so. In serious drugs cases the Crown therefore lodges recovered drugs in their entirety.

Mr. Norman Hogg asked the Solicitor-General for Scotland if he will make a statement on the operation in Scotland of the present system for holding controlled drugs required for production as evidence in trials.

The Solicitor-General for Scotland: Controlled drugs required for production in court may be held by the police, officers of Customs and Excise, the procurator fiscal or the clerk of court, depending upon the stage reached in pre-trial procedure and security considerations.

Mr. Norman Hogg asked the Solicitor-General for Scotland what arrangements exist in Scotland for the destruction of controlled drugs confiscated from people who have committed or are alleged to have committed drugs offences.

The Solicitor-General for Scotland: Drugs forfeited as a result of Court, proceedings are destroyed by the police on behalf of the Court authorities to whom a certificate of destruction is subsequently provided.

SOCIAL SERVICES

Residential Care Homes

12. Mr. Corbyn asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what proportion of residents in private or voluntary care homes for the elderly are physically disabled.

Mr. Major: I regret that the information is not currently available. However, the Department is engaged in discussions with the local authorities with a view to introducing an improved data collection system. This will provide information on the number of persons in residential care by disability as well as by age.

43. Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will consider amending the Registered Homes Act 1984 to permit his Department to prescribe, as pre-conditions to legislation, minimum numbers of beds for (a) private nursing homes and (b) residential care homes.

Mr. Whitney: I refer my hon. Friend to my reply to him on 16 December 1985, at column 80. For private nursing homes, there is no minimum number of beds prescribed so that if only one bed is provided for use at night the home is subject to registration. There are no plans to amend the Registered Homes Act 1984.

70. Mr. Andrew Bowden asked the Secretary of State for Social Services when he expects to publish the Ernst and Whinney report on residential care homes.

Mr. Newton: I refer my hon. Friend to my reply to the right hon. Member for Stoke-on-Trent, south (Mr. Ashley) on 24 February.

Health Education

15. Mr. Dormand asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he plans to take any additional steps to improve the effectiveness of health education; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hayhoe: The main responsibility for health education in England, Wales and Northern Ireland rests with the Health Education Council, which is largely funded by the Government. The council has instituted a complete review of its operations with the aim of improving their effectiveness, and is also introducing improved methods of evaluating the material that it provides.

Regional Health Authorities

17. Mr. Terry Lewis asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he has received any representations on the present system of appointing members of regional health authorities.

Mr. Hayhoe: I am not aware of any representations about the appointments system as such.

Social Workers

18. Mr. Fisher asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what information he has as to the trend in the level of violence against social workers by their clients in the last two years.

Mr. Whitney: Certain risks of this kind are inherent in the nature of a social worker's duties, particularly those which bring him or her into contact with emotionally disturbed or mentally disordered clients. It would not be practicable to collect comprehensive information centrally but such indications as we have about the incidence of violence do not reveal a trend. Employing authorities have a responsibility to monitor the level of risk to their staff.

Civil Defence

19. Mr. Hind asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what guidance he has given to regional health authorities on the minimum protection factor recommended for emergency medical centres and community first aid posts.

Mr. Whitney: Guidance has not been given to health authorities on minimum protection factors for nuclear attack. The advice on emergency planning which the Department issues to health authorities comes within that which the Home Office issues to local authorities. The question of the protection factor for any building is one which forms part of continuing studies on the general subject of protection against nuclear attack.

50. Mr. John Browne asked the Secretary of State for Social Services whether supplies of respirators and protective clothing will be made available for ambulance personnel working in contaminated areas following an attack with chemical weapons.

61. Sir Kenneth Lewis asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what form of chemical monitoring equipment will be available to ambulance personnel operating in contaminated areas following an attack with chemical weapons.

68. Mr. Alexander asked the Secretary of State for Social Services by what means hospitals, medical centres and community first aid posts will be warned that they are under chemical attack or are in a contaminated zone.

72. Mr. Roger King asked the Secretary of State for Social Services whether training of medical staff for emergency medical centres will include treatment of casualties caused by chemical weapons; and if he will make a statement.

73. Mr. Robert Banks asked the Secretary of State for Social Services on what level of casualties resulting from chemical attack on United Kingdom military targets his civil defence plans are based.

95. Mr. Jessel asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what stocks of decontamination materials will be held at hospitals, emergency medical centres and community first-aid posts in the event of chemical attack on the United Kingdom.

93. Mr. Spence asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he proposes to give guidance to his civil defence planning staff on the provision of decontamination materials and training in decontamination to meet the effects of chemical attack on the United Kingdom; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Whitney: In the absence of a ban on chemical weapons the Government are considering the questions of detection and warning of chemical attacks and protective measures against them. Broad guidance on the threat from chemical warfare is contained in emergency planning guidance to local authorities issued by the Home Office. Health authorities are being advised that the threat from chemical weapons will be the subject of guidance when current studies by the Government are complete.

51. Mr. Stevens asked the Secretary of State for Social Services which organisations were consulted before he issued the draft document "Civil Defence Planning in the National Health Service".

Mr. Whitney: The draft document "Civil Defence Planning in the National Health Service" was itself a consultation document and was issued for such purpose in 1985 to regional health authorities, district health authorities, special health authorities, special hospitals, family practitioner committees, Public Health Laboratory Service, Regional Blood Transfusion Service, British Medical Association, Royal College of Nursing and the Royal College of Midwives.

Before the document was issued the Department had meetings with health emergency planning officers and with other representatives of the Health Service as well as with representatives of professional bodies and the voluntary aid societies, in order to get their views on the need for and content of a revised circular. We are now considering the substantial amount of comment received following the issue of the document.

76. Mr. Ashby asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what discussions he has held with the voluntary aid societies on the manning of emergency medical centres and the training of the necessary staff.

84. Mr. Evennett asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what guidance he gives to regional health authorities on the location and manning of emergency medical centres.

Mr. Whitney: Officials of the Department have held joint discussions with Home Office officials and representatives of the voluntary aid societies on a range of matters which have included the manning of emergency medical centres and the training of the necessary staff. Discussions have been held at the request of the VAS since the issue in June 1985 of the draft consultation document on civil defence planning in the National Health Service.

Guidance on the location and manning of EMCs is contained in the document which was issued to regional health authorities, amongst others, for consultation. It included the following: EMCs should be seperate from major hospitals and as far as possible, depending upon local geography and other features, co-located or close to premises which have been designated by local authorities as community facilities. They should be staffed wherever possible by general practitioners and qualified nurses drawn from various sources together with members of the VAS and public volunteers. The small cadre of trained staff would be most effective if used to advise and direct voluntary help in tending the sick and injured. EMCs will vary in size, levels of staff and equipment, and potential for care depending on geographical factors and local requirements. Suitable buildings should now be identified having regard externally to ambulance access and internally to stretcher handling, and the need to observe large numbers of casualties. The planning for this vital element in emergency care will require close liaison and co-operation between health and county environmental protection officers, local authorities, family practitioner committees and VAS.

91. Mr. Aspinwall asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what steps have been taken to ensure that adequate supplies of dosimeters and survey meters will be made available for hospitals, emergency medical centres and community first aid posts in the event of nuclear attack.

Mr. Whitney: A new type of survey meter will be issued which does not require stringently controlled storage conditions. Hitherto, there has been a standing arrangement with public authorities that ear-marked stocks of a range of survey instruments will be held in some Home Office depots. Adequate stocks of both survey meters and dosimeters will continue to be held centrally and would be issued as part of the measures for transition to war.

94. Mr. Pawsey asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what guidance he has given on the levels of first aid and pharmaceutical materials to be held at all emergency medical centres.

Mr. Whitney: I refer my hon. Friend to my reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Gainsborough and Horncastle (Mr. Leigh) earlier today.

Social Security Bill

20. Lord James Douglas-Hamilton asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what representations he has had from disability organisations in relation to the Social Security Bill.

Mr. Newton: Since June 1985 Ministers have had meetings with several organisations representing disabled people including Mencap, MIND, the Spastics Society, the Royal National Institute for the Deaf, the National Deaf Children Society and Age Concern. In addition, a large number of written submissions have been received from a wide range of national and local organisations, many of whom made representations about the needs of disabled people.

Royal College of Nursing

21. Mr. Beith asked the Secretary of State for Social Services when he last met representatives of the Royal College of Nursing; and what subjects were discussed.

Mr. Hayhoe: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State last met representatives of the Royal College of Nursing at a private dinner on 15 January 1986. Since then I have had discussions with representatives of the Royal College on NHS expenditure and on nurse education and training.

Ambulance Service

22. Mr. Dickens asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he proposes to make available pralidoxime mesylate (oxime) tablets, atropine antoject units and atropine eye drops for use by ambulance personnel operating in contaminated areas following an attack with chemical weapons.

Mr. Whitney: The Government are considering how best to protect people from the hazards brought about by the use of chemical weapons, and are examining ways of detecting and monitoring the presence of chemical agents. This is a major task and it would be inappropriate to issue guidance on the availability of drugs for use by ambulance personnel until the work is complete.

69. Mr. Pike asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he has received representations regarding the cutbacks in ambulance provision; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Whitney: The Department has received a number of representations about various aspects of the ambulance service. Some of these have been concerned with the effects of local reorganisation or the application of the correct criteria for transport by the ambulance service, that it should be provided only when the patient has medical need for it.

This Government have increased, not cut back, ambulance provision. Expenditure on ambulance services in England increased by 94·4 per cent. in cash terms between 1978-79 and 1984-85. This represents an increase in real terms of 9·2 per cent.

92. Dr. Marek asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will review the ambulance service.

Mr. Whitney: We see no reason to do so at present.

Abortions (Cost)

23. Mr. Marlow asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what is the latest average cost of an abortion in National Health Service hospitals.

Mr. Hayhoe: The estimated revenue cost is about £170.

NHS (Regional Inequalities)

24. Mr. Nicholas Brown asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will make a statement on regional inequalities in National Health Service provision.

Mr. Hayhoe: The Government remain committed to the principle of redistributing resources across the country as recommended by the resource allocation working party in order to secure equal access to health care for working people in equal need. Very considerable progress has been made, and in 1986-87 all regions except North East and North West Thames will be within 4 per cent. of their target shares of resources.

As regions come close to their targets it is increasingly important that those targets should reflect relative need as fairly as possible. It is for this reason that my right hon.

Friend has asked the NHS management board to take the lead in reviewing the operation of the RAWP formula and looking at the scope for improvement.

Social Security Review

25. Mrs. Clwyd asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what assessment he has made of the implications of the social security review for the future level of demand for social services for single parents.

Mr. Tony Lloyd asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what are the implications of the social security review for the work of social workers.

Mr. Newton: We do not expect the reform of social security to have a significant direct effect on the level of demand for social services, although our proposals for the social fund recognise the importance of good liaison between social services departments and social security offices. A major objective of our proposals for the income-related benefits is to direct more help to families with children, including lone parents.

NHS Expenditure

26. Mr. Dubs asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will make a statement on the implications for social services provision over the next three years of the levels of expenditure referred to in the Government expenditure plans, Cmnd. 9702.

Mr. Whitney: I assume that the hon. Member is referring to local authority social services. The figures given in Cmnd. 9702 for spending on individual local authority services in 1986-87 are indicative. It is for local authorities themselves to decide their spending on the individual services they provide, in the light of all their local circumstances and of the Government's call for restraint in total local authority spending.

The 1986-87 indicative figure for personal social services spending in England (£2,521 million) represents a 4·3 per cent. cash increase over the local authorities' budgets in 1985-86. The implications of spending at this level for services will depend on movements in the costs facing local authorities over the coming months, in particular pay settlements for local authority employees, and on the extent to which authorities can achieve improvements in efficiency.

No decisions on provision for local authority current spending for years after 1986-87 have been taken. These will be reviewed in the public expenditure survey during 1986.

28. Mr. Hicks asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what was the growth in real financial terms since May 1979 of expenditure on the National Health Service in England and Wales; what was the corresponding figure for the South-West regional health authority; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hayhoe: Between 1978-79 and 1984-85 expenditure on the National Health Service in England and Wales grew by 21 per cent. in real terms. Within that overall total health authority expenditure grew by 17 per cent. in real terms and spending by South Western regional health authority by 19 per cent. in real terms. These figures clearly demonstrate the Government's commitment to the Health Service.

Basildon Hospital

27. Mr. Amess asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what representations he has received about the possible removal of maternity and other associated services from Basildon hospital.

Mr. Whitney: As at 14 February we had received 34 representations about various aspects of the proposals for reorganising services in Basildon and Thurrock health authority. These representations followed the issue of a consultation document by the authority. It is not possible to separate those representations which dealt only with those proposals affecting Basildon hospital's maternity or other services.

Basildon and Thurrock District Health Authority

29. Dr. McDonald asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what steps he takes to monitor the level of hospital provision in the Basildon and Thurrock district health authority; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Whitney: Initial responsibility for monitoring Basildon and Thurrock district health authority and the services it provides rests with the North East Thames regional health authority. Regional health authorities are held accountable by the Secretary of State for Social Services, in particular through the regional review and regional performance review processes, for the health care provision within their regions.

Disabled People (Charities)

31. Mr. Tom Clarke asked the Secretary of State for Social Services when he last met representatives of the charities which represent the disabled; and what was discussed.

Mr. Newton: My right hon. Friend, my ministerial colleagues and I often meet representatives of voluntary organisations concerned with disabled people, and discuss a variety of issues of general or particular concern.

Speech Therapists

32. Mr. Maxton asked the Secretary of State for Social Services whether there are any proposals to increase the salaries of speech therapists in line with other graduate professions in the National Health Service.

54. Mr. Fatchett asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will make a statement on the current salaries and conditions of speech therapists.

83. Mr. Chris Smith asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will make a statement on the salaries and conditions of speech therapists.

85. Mr. Hoyle asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will make a statement on the salaries and conditions of speech therapists.

86. Ms. Richardson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services whether there are any proposals to increase the salaries of speech therapists in line with other graduate professions in the National Health Service.

Mr. Whitney: I refer the hon. Members to my reply to the hon. Member for Sheffield, Hillsborough (Mr. Flannery) on 17 February, at column 63.

Severe Weather Payments

33. Mr. Flannery asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will make a statement on the steps taken to activate the exceptionally severe weather payments for those on supplementary benefit.

Mr. Newton: I refer the hon. Member to my reply earlier today to the hon. Members for Wentworth (Mr. Hardy) and for Walsall, North (Mr. Winnick).

Resettlement Units

34. Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what progress is being made in the consultation on the replacement of resettlement units; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Major: In each of the Department's seven social security regions review teams have been set up to consider future resettlement provision for the single homeless and rootless. The teams, with members from both statutory and voluntary organisations as well as the Department, are looking at the existing network of services and the level of demand and will make recommendations on the type and range of facilities that should replace the 15 resettlement units outside London. Five regions have produced interim reports dealing with the proposals they have received to date: local authority housing departments have been involved in most of the larger urban areas and several have expressed an interest in providing direct access hostels. In general voluntary agencies are concentrating on second stage hostels.

Officials have asked review teams to report substantively by the spring, when it is hoped to mount a national conference at which nominees from the review teams and representatives of local authority associations and national agencies dealing with the single homeless will discuss the reports and the national framework for resettlement which they suggest. Ministers will consider the recommendations arising from the exercise later this year.

Limited List Prescribing

35. Mr. Wallace asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what are the latest figures for the estimated savings on the selected list of drugs.

Mr. Hayhoe: The estimated annual savings remain at £75 million.

Supplementary Benefit (Students)

36. Mr. Andrew F. Bennett asked the Secretary of State for Social Services when he intends to lay the regulations on supplementary benefit in respect of students.

Mr. Newton: After we have had an appropriate opportunity to consider the views of the Social Security Advisory Committee and the local authority associations on the proposals which have been put to them for consultation, which we expect to receive by mid-March.

Ancillary Workers (Pay)

37. Ms. Clare Short asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will make a statement on the pay claim of ancillary workers in the National Health Service.

Mr. Whitney: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to the hon. Member for Falkirk, West (Mr. Canavan) on 17 February, at column 64.

State Pension

38. Mr. Kirkwood asked the Secretary of State for Social Services whether he has any plans to uprate the state basic pension to bring it more into line with the increase in earnings.

Mr. Major: I refer the hon. Member to my right hon. Friend's statement to the House yesterday at columns 680-81, on the subject of the uprating of social security benefits.

Mentally Handicapped People

39. Mr. Wainwright asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will make a statement on the operation of joint health and social services finance schemes for the care of the mentally handicapped.

Mr. Whitney: Under the joint finance arrangements, which were introduced in 1976, district health authorities make payments to local social services authorities or voluntary organisations towards selected social services schemes. Payments may be made to meet the full cost for a maximum of three years, and for a maximum of seven years in all after which the local authority or voluntary organisation is expected to take over the funding of the scheme. Funds are allocated to health authorities for this specific purpose and for 1985-86 the total allocation amounted to £105 million. Roughly one third of joint finance is spent on services for mentally handicapped people.

Under the care in the community arrangements, district health authorities may make payments for as long as necessary towards community services for long-stay patients moving out of hospital. Joint finance may be used as bridging finance until full savings accrue from the movement of people out of hospital. For this purpose the maximum period of joint finance may in special circumstances be extended to 10 years at 100 per cent. and to 13 years in all. District health authorities may then continue the payments from their main allocations. It is for health and local authorities and other agencies to make use of this financial flexibility in jointly planning the development of community care. About £17 million of the joint finance funds have been centrally reserved over the four-year period up to March 1988 to fund a programme of 28 pilot projects under the care in the community arrangements. Eleven of these projects relate to mentally handicapped people.

Some health and local authorities have entered into joint funding arrangements for the provision of, for example, day centres where operational costs are shared.

Child Benefit

40. Mr. Rogers asked the Secretary of State for Social Services whether it is his policy to increase child benefit in line with inflation at the next uprating.

Mr. Newton: I refer the hon. Member to my right hon. Friend's statement to the House yesterday, at columns 680-81.

Hypothermia

41. Mr. Parry asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what guidance has been given by his Department to local offices and local authority social services departments concerning the danger of hypothermia among the aged and the very young.

Mr. Newton: Revised guidance was issued in October 1985 to local office staff to assist them in identifying potential hypothermia sufferers. That guidance is contained in paras 53 and 54 of appendix 23 to the "S Manual", a copy of which is in the library.

Mortgage Interest

42. Mrs. Beckett asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what are the results of his latest discussions with the building societies about new arrangements for the payment of mortgage interest in the first six months of receiving benefit.

Mr. Newton: Discussions are continuing.

McColl Report

44. Mr. Ashdown asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will publish the National Health Service management board report on the McColl report.

Mr. Newton: The management board has been asked for advice to enable ministerial decisions to be taken on action to follow up the McColl report, not to produce another report for publication.

Social Security Reform

45. Mr. Bell asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will take steps to provide a more accurate estimate of the effect on income support claimants of the new rules on capital assessment proposed in the White Paper, "Reform of Social Security," Cmnd. 9691; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Newton: Such estimates are at present very imprecise as they can be obtained only from data about claimants' investment income contained in the family expenditure survey. The technical difficulties of collecting information about capital holdings are considerable, but we have asked the Office of Population Censuses and Surveys to undertake a pilot study to test the feasibility of obtaining more accurate data.

97. Mr. Roy Hughes asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what discussions he has had with student organisations concerning the social security review.

Mr. Newton: I shall let the hon. Member have a reply as soon as possible.

Mr. Wigley asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many persons are currently in receipt of attendance allowances (a) on the higher rate and (b) on the lower rate; and how these figures compare with corresponding figures for each of the past five years.

Mr. Yeo asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what recent representations he has received regarding the effect on severely disabled persons of the provisions of the Social Security Bill.

Mr. Newton: Since June 1985 I have met a number of organisations representing disabled people to discuss the social security reforms. I held a meeting in September 1985 at which the Royal Association for Disability and Rehabilitation were represented, and a joint meeting attended by representatives from MENCAP, MIND and Spastics Society in October 1985. In addition I have addressed meetings held by organisations representing disabled people including the Royal National Institute for the Deaf in October 1985, the National Deaf Children's Society in October 1985 and the Spastics Society in November 1985.

A wide range of organisations representing disabled people responded to the invitation to send in comments on the Green Paper. These included the Voluntary Council for Handicapped Children, Disabled Information and Advice, Scottish Council on Disability, the Haemophilia Society, British Limbless Ex-Servicemen's Association, Greater London Association for Disabled People, Disability Alliance, Disablement Income Group, Disablement Income Group (Scotland), MENCAP, MIND, Multiple Sclerosis Society, Scottish Association for Autistic Children, National League of the Blind and Disabled, Royal National Institute for the Blind, National Schizophrenia Fellowship, Parkinson's Disease Society, RADAR, Scottish Association for Mental Health, Wales Council for the Disabled, The Association of Carers, National Association of Industries for the Blind and Disabled, and the Northern Ireland Council for the Handicapped.

Records of correspondence received since the publication of the White Paper are not held in a form which would enable me readily to identify those organisations representing disabled people.

Mr. Meacher asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what assumptions were made in tables P1 to P6 in the technical annex to "Reform of Social Security" as to the career pattern of earnings of each of the 12 earners listed in paragraph 1.3; and whether he will publish figures illustrating the effects of varying these assumptions.

Mr. Newton: The following tables set out the assumptions made for each of the earners listed in tables P1-P4 of the technical annex. The earnings values used are at November 1985 levels and are assumed to increase in real terms by 1·5 per cent. a year. For tables P5 and P6, it has been assumed that women in table P3 were married to men in table P1 and women in P4 to men in P2, respectively.

I regret that it is not possible to provide information on the effects of varying these assumptions as producing this would involved disproportionate use of computer and manpower resources.

Community Charge

46. Mr. Snape asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will publish a new version of the technical annex to the White Paper, "Reform of Social Security", Cmnd. 9691, in the light of the proposals for a community charge in "Paying for Local Government", Cmnd. 9714.

Mr. Newton: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to the hon. Member for Dunfermline, East (Mr. Brown) on 17 February, at column 69.

Nursing Staff (Recruitment)

47. Mr. Stern asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will make a statement about the current ability of the National Health Service nationally to recruit nursing staff at all grades on current terms and conditions of service.

Mr. Hayhoe: Recruitment to all grades of nursing and midwifery staff continues to be generally satisfactory. Provisional figures for September 1985 show that the number of such staff in England increased by 3,600 to 401,100 whole time equivalents compared with September 1984.

Some recruitment problems do exist in specific areas of work and particular locations. A survey for the Review Body for Nursing Staff, Midwives and Health Visitors showed that at 31 March 1984 the main areas of difficulty were nurse education, maternity midwifery, mental handicap and mental illness, where between 3 and 5 per cent. of all whole-time equivalent funded posts had remained vacant for at least three months compared with the average of 2·5 per cent. for all nursing and midwifery staff. Inadequate pay and career prospects were given as factors in less than 2 per cent. of the vacancies.

The information for March 1985 is still being validated, but provisional results indicate a similar picture of low levels of vacancies.

Breast Cancer

48. Mr. Wigley asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what is the outcome of his Department's consideration of the experience of Sweden in relation to developing screening methods for the early identification of breast cancer; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hayhoe: The United Kingdom working group on breast cancer screening has considered the evidence from the Swedish and other important overseas studies of breast cancer screening by mammography. This is reviewed in the group's interim report, copies of which have been placed in the Library. The group will submit its final report later this year. This will set out the policy options for the development of breast cancer screening, their costs and benefits, and overall implications for the National Health Service.

Elderly Persons

49. Mr. Cohen asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he plans any new initiatives regarding care for the elderly in the community.

Mr. Whitney: Our main objective for the care of elderly people is to enable them to live independently in the community for as long as possible. All relevant health and social services policies are directed to that end. Two recent specific initiatives designed to assist the development of services are still being advanced—the "Care in the Community" pilot projects include seven schemes to enable elderly long-stay patients to move out of hospital and a number of projects under the "Helping the Community to Care" programme are designed to help families and volunteers to meet the needs of elderly people living at home. Progress is kept under review. For example, a joint seminar with the Department of the Environment is to be held on 5 March to discuss the various services which can help elderly people to stay in their own homes, and there is to be a DHSS seminar on the specific issue of dispersed alarm systems on 10 April.

Drug Misuse

52. Mr. Spencer asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will make a statement on his Department's measures to combat drug misuse.

Mr. Whitney: We aim to reduce demand by continuing our campaign of education and information, while taking further steps to encourage better services for those who suffer harm from misuse.

Mr. Simon Hughes asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will list the total number of deaths recorded as resulting in whole or part from drug abuse for each London borough for the last year in which figures are available.

Mr. Whitney: The table shows the numbers of deaths from drug dependence and from nondependent abuse of drugs (excluding tobacco and alcohol) for usual residents of each London borough where at least one death was registered in 1984. There were no deaths from these causes to usual residents of the remaining London boroughs in that year.

Pharmaceutical Service

53. Mr. Chapman asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will undertake a review of the salaries and conditions of service of those employed in the National Health Service pharmaceutical service; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hayhoe: Salaries and conditions of service of pharmaceutical staff in the National Health Service are matters for negotiation in the Pharmaceutical Whitley council. I understand that proposals for substantial increases in the pay of basic and staff grade pharmacists have been made by the management side of the council and are under consideration by the staff side; and that the council expects shortly to receive a report by a working party on the grading structure of hospital pharmacy staff.

Family Income Supplement, Leicester

55. Mr. Janner asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many recipients of family income supplement there were in the years 1980 to 1985 from the office of his Department in (i) Lower Hill street, Leicester and (ii) Yeoman street, Leicester.

Mr. Major: I regret that this information is not available. Family income supplement claims are dealt with by one centre at Blackpool and no information is maintained about claims from particular local areas.

NHS General Managers

56. Mr. Stephen Ross asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what representations he has received on the effects of the appointment of National Health Service general managers on provision of adequate nursing care.

Mr. Hayhoe: I have received some 200 letters as a result of the Royal College of Nursing's campaign about general management. Few have concentrated upon patient care.

Board and Lodging Regulations

57. Mr. Alton asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will make a statement on the operation of the Department of Health and Social Security board and lodging regulations.

Mr. Newton: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to my hon. Friend, the Member for Southend, East (Mr. Taylor) on 28 January, at column 782.

Community Care

58. Mr. Davies asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what estimate he has of the number of people who have been discharged into the community under the community care policy in each year since 1980.

Mr. Whitney: Statistics of the total number of discharges (including transfers) from mental illness and mental handicap hospitals are available in the series of DHSS booklets "Mental Health Statistics for England", copies of which are in the Library. However, the statistics show that the great majority of discharges follow stays of less than six months, usually for short-term care and treatment or family respite. An indication of the number of people who have been resettled in the community after, in effect, living in hospital is given by the figures in the table of people discharged after stays of five years or more. Some of those concerned may require to be readmitted for a time for example because of changes in their condition.

Discharges after durations of stay of 5 years or more from NHS mental illness and mental handicap hospitals and units in England

	Mental illness	Mental handicap
1980	1,452	1,064
1981	1,293	1,122
1982	1,253	1,144
1983	1,311	1,457
1984	1,624	1,787

Chiropodists

59. Mr. Pavitt asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what is his estimate of the present shortage of National Health Service trained and state registered chiropodists and the number of training places which will be available in 1986-87; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hayhoe: Although at 31 March 1984, 14 per cent. of funded posts in chiropody were unfilled after three months, I understand that because of improved recruitment since then the number of such vacancies has fallen.

Firm information is not available on the exact number of training places which will be available in England in the academic year 1986-87 — the figure for 1985-86 was 318, which represents a 16 per cent. increase over previous years. This increase takes account of the opening of a new school of chiropody at Northampton. A further school at Southampton should be ready for opening in the 1987-88 academic year.

Pensioners' Charter

60. Mr. Livsey asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what representations he has received from the National Federation of Retirement Pensioners Associations on the pensioners' charter, a copy of which has been sent to him.

Mr. Major: We have received a substantial number of representations from individual members of the National Federation of Retirement Pensioners, both directly and through hon. Members. My right hon. Friend expects shortly to meet a delegation from the national executive of the federation in order to discuss the pensioners' charter and other issues.

Homelessness (Greater London)

63. Mr. Dykes asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will establish a departmental inquiry into the problem of homeless families in the Greater London area.

Mr. Whitney: There are no plans to establish such an inquiry at present; however, the main responsibility for the accommodation needs of homeless families lies with my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment.

Child Minder Schemes

64. Ms. Harman asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will make a statement on the implications of the social security review for local authority child minder schemes.

Mr. Newton: We would not expect the proposals in the current Social Security Bill to have a significant impact on local authority child minder schemes.

Social Fund

65. Mr. Kennedy asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what representations he has received from the Council on Tribunals, on the right to independent appeal for claimants against decisions made by officers of the proposed social fund.

Mr. Newton: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Social Services and I met the chairman and secretary of the Council on Tribunals on 11 December 1985. On 21 January the chairman of the council sent my right hon. Friend a copy of its special report concerning appeals under the proposed social fund.

82. Mr. Gordon Brown asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what right of appeal he proposes for claimants debarred from assistance from the social fund.

Mr. Newton: A person who is dissatisfied with the outcome of a request for help from the social fund would have a right to a review of the decision along the lines set out in the White Paper "Reform of Social Security".

Kidney Transplant Programme

66. Mr. Michael McNair-Wilson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he is satisfied with the progress of the kidney transplant programme.

Mr. Whitney: No. Although the numbers of kidney transplants performed in 1984 and 1985 were significantly higher than in previous years, more such operations are urgently needed; the waiting list continues to rise as a higher proportion of kidney patients are diagnosed as suitable for transplantation. The factor that limits the expansion of the kidney transplant programme is the availability of donor organs. Ministers have taken a number of initiatives in the last two years to encourage more donation, the most recent an approach to the Confederation of British Industry and the Institute of Directors, who have agreed to bring the need to the attention of people in industry.

Hospitals (Military Targets)

67. Mr. Michael Brown asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what percentage of hospitals lie within a 20 km radius of possible military targets.

Mr. Whitney: It is impossible to predict with any certainty which targets would be included in any attack on this country; they would depend upon the political and strategic intentions of an enemy at the time.

Health and Social Services

71. Mr. Freud asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will estimate the potential for a rise in employment in health and social services over the next 12 months.

Mr. Hayhoe: Health authorities are responsible for estimating their manpower needs, and their proposals for staffing in 1986-87 are at present being considered in the context of their short-term programmes for that year. Employment in the family practitioner services is expected to increase slightly in line with past trends despite a small projected reduction in administrative and clerical posts. Local authorities are responsible for the staffing of social services departments.

Pharmacists (Contract)

75. Mr. Heathcoat-Amory asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what representations he has received about the proposed new contract for pharmacists; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hayhoe: Since the new contract was agreed with the representatives of community pharmacists in May 1985 approximately 600 representations have been received, 85 per cent. of which were in favour of its early implementation. I refer my hon. Friend to my reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Slough (Mr. Watts) on 7 February, at columns 289-90.

Child Abuse

77. Mr. Meadowcroft asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what plans he has to produce a document on research into the incidence and causes of child abuse in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Whitney: The Department has no plans to produce a document about research into the incidence and causes of child abuse but is currently funding research to evaluate various types of intervention in cases of child abuse.

Care Allowance

78. Mr. Barron asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will now extend invalid care allowance to married women.

Mr. Newton: I refer the hon. Member to my reply earlier today to the hon. Member for Sheffield, Brightside (Miss Maynard) and my hon. Friend the Member for Eastleigh (Sir. D. Price).

Hospitals (Linen Supplies)

79. Mr. O'Brien asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what guidance he gives to health authorities on arrangements for the regular delivery to hospitals of clean linen and clothes by contractors; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Whitney: The Department issued guidance to health authorities in the notes attached to its specimen contract for laundry services, a copy of which is in the Library.

Renal Failure

80. Mr. Carter-Jones asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will make a statement on the current treatment position for end stage renal failure.

Mr. Whitney: According to the latest figures available from the European Dialysis and Transplant Association, the number of new renal patients accepted for treatment in the United Kingdom during 1984 was 2,023, which compares with 1,233 in 1979, and the number of renal patients in the United Kingdom receiving treatment on 31 December 1984 was 11,235, which compares with 6,167 on 31 December 1979. All regional health authorities have agreed to increase facilities for the treatment of end stage renal failure and to accept new patients at an annual rate of at least 40 per million population by 1987.

Personal Social Services

81. Mr. Foulkes asked the Secretary of State for Social Services when he expects to publish a Green Paper on the personal social services.

Mr. Whitney: We are still considering the issues concerned.

Supplementary Benefit (Young Persons)

87. Mr. Nellist asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many young people are presently in receipt of reduced supplementary benefit because they have declined a place on the YTS.

Mr. Newton: I regret that this information could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Hospitals (Food Poisoning)

88. Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will make it his policy to ensure that in future statistics of deaths from food poisoning in National Health Service hospitals distinguish those who acquired the infection in hospital from those who acquired it elsewhere.

Mr. Hayhoe: There are two sources of information about people who die in National Health Service hospitals from food poisoning:

i. information on death certificates. This does not identify where the infection was acquired.

ii. Reports of deaths arising in food poisoning outbreaks in hospitals, which are notified to the communicable diseases surveillance centre.

The latter are not comprehensive and difficulties in identifying the source and type of infection make such information imprecise. However, I have no plans to collect more detailed statistics.

British Medical Association

89. Mr. Alex Carlile asked the Secretary of State for Social Services when he next plans to meet the hospital junior staff committee of the British Medical Association.

Mr. Hayhoe: I have no such plans at present.

In Vitro Fertilisation

90. Mr. Hargreaves asked the Secretary of State for Social Services, how many patients received in vitro fertilisation treatment in England and Wales (a) privately and (b) through the National Health Service for the last year for which figures are available.

Mr. Hayhoe: I regret that this information is not available centrally.

Long-term Unemployed Persons

96. Mr. Holt asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what plans he has to give additional financial assistance to those who are long-term unemployed and have never had a job.

Mr. Newton: Those entitled to supplementary benefit will receive additional benefit following the uprating in July. The proposals in the current Social Security Bill to replace the present supplementary benefit scheme by income support are designed to help those with children by providing for a family premium.

Special Hardship Provision

98. Mr. Willie W. Hamilton asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many requests for special hardship provision from elderly and disabled residents in private or voluntary care homes who have been in receipt of supplementary benefit since April 1985 have been (a) granted and (b) refused.

Mr. Newton: Seventy nine applications have been received for an extension of the transitional protection provisions on the grounds that exceptional hardship would otherwise result. We are currently considering these applications.

AIDS

99. Mr. Cash asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many people have died from acquired immune deficiency syndrome since the disease was first diagnosed in the United Kingdom, in which places in the United Kingdom; how many have been diagnosed as having contracted acquired immune deficiency syndrome; and where the diagnosis was made.

Mr. Hayhoe: Up to the end of January 1986, 287 cases of acquired immune deficiency syndrome had been reported to the communicable disease surveillance centre. These may be broken down into geographical areas as follows:

	Number
Thames Region	232
Wessex and South Western	20
Other regions:
Midlands and the North	22
Wales	5
Scotland	6
Northern Ireland	2

It is not possible to provide a more detailed breakdown of the location of these cases without endangering patient confidentiality.

Of these cases, there have been 144 deaths. As patients may receive treatment in one part of the country but return closer to home when they are nearing death, a breakdown of deaths by location is not available.

Pensions (Income Support)

30. Mr. Michie asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what estimate he has of the number of pensioners that will be on income support in 2030 if the income support rates go up in line with earnings, on the assumptions given in the technical annex of the White Paper, Cmnd. 9691.

Mr. Newton: Given the major changes there have been since national assistance (the predecessor of the present supplementary benefit scheme) was established in 1948 and the many factors that determine who gets this form of benefit, any estimate of the position of pensioners in relation to income-related asistance in 2030 is very speculative. The Government are committed to a soundly-based social security system. With the expansion of occupational and personal pensions and the growing value of state pensions as more is paid out through the earnings-related scheme along with basic pension, the proportion of pensioners entitled to income support next century is expected to be very much smaller than when it begins. This assumes the value of basic pension relative to the illustrative income support rates in the technical annex to the White Paper Cmnd. 9691 is maintained.

Disabled People (Benefits)

62. Mr. Bermingham asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will make a statement about the operation of the powers whereby local authorities can add to benefits payable in respect of disabled people in private and voluntary homes for the elderly.

Mr. Newton: I shall let the hon. Member have a reply as soon as possible.

Retirement age

74. Mr. Nicholls asked the Secretary of State for Social Services whether he now has any proposals to introduce a common retirement age for men and women; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Newton: I shall let my hon. Friend have a reply as soon as possible.

Mortality Statistics

Mr. Michael Forsyth asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will list in the Official Report the deaths in England in each of the last five years for which records are available attributed to (a) malignant neoplasm of trachea, bronchus and lung, (b) bronchitis and emphysema and (c) ischaemic heart disease, giving the figures for all deaths and broken down by sex.

Mr. Whitney: The information is given in the table:

Number of deaths from selected diseases, all ages, males, females, England 1980-84

*ICD (9) Number	Cause of death	Sex	Year
			1980	1981	1982	1983	†1984
162	Malignant neoplasm of trachea, bronchus and lung	Males	25,306	24,886	24,547	25,055	24,581

Mr. Michael Forsyth asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will list in the Official Report, for the last five years for which records are available, the average age of those who died from (a) malignant neoplasm of trachea, bronchus and lung, (b) bronchitis and emphysema and (c) ischaemic heart disease, giving the figures for all deaths and broken down by sex.

Mr. Whitney: The information is given in the table:

Average age at death from selected causes, males, females, England and Wales 1980-84

ICD (9) Number*	Cause of death	Sex	Year 1980	1981	1982	1983	†1984

Smoking

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many schools in the Wolverhampton area were included in the survey conducted by the Office of Population Censuses and Surveys on the numbers of child and teenage smokers.

Mr. Whitney: One school from the Wolverhampton education authority was included in the OPCS survey on smoking among secondary school children in 1984.

Occupational Pension Schemes

Mr. Watts asked the Secretary of State for Social Services when he intends to publish his proposals for regulations on disclosure of information by occupational pension schemes.

Mr. Newton: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply given by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State to my hon. Friend the Member for Kettering (Mr. Freeman) earlier today.

Hospital Buildings (Asbestos)

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what grants are available to health authorities which have hospital buildings containing dangerous amounts of asbestos.

Mr. Whitney: None. No special financial provision is made for this. Health authorities are expected to fund any necessary action to deal with asbestos from the total capital available to them, in the same way as any other health and safety measures for which capital expenditure is required.

Rampton Hospital

Mr. Phillip Oppenheim asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what arrangements he proposes for the management of the special hospitals once the Rampton hospital review board completes its period of office in June; and whether he will make a statement.

Mr. Norman Fowler: The Rampton hospital review board was established in 1981, following the Boynton Committee's inquiry into the management of the hospital. Previously Rampton had been run by a management team, chaired by a medical director reporting directly to officials in my Department. This arrangement still applies to the other special hospitals — Broadmoor, Moss Side and Park Lane. It means centralised management from London and deprives the hospital of local support in translating national policies into local practices.

The establishment of the review board at Rampton provided an intermediate management tier between the hospital management team and my Department. The board is chaired by a business man and has members with relevant interests and experience who know the hospital well and can stand a little apart from the day-to-day business. The board has been able to provide closer oversight of the hospital management team and strengthen its accountability. It has also introduced tighter mechanisms of financial control and has generally encouraged better management practices. The hospital has clearly benefited from the establishment of the Board and its image has also improved.

I have therefore decided that a permanent local board should be established at Rampton hospital when the term of the present review board expires in June. Like the existing board, it will be a special health authority and accountable to me.

The other special hospitals face the same challenges and can also benefit from the wider perspective and fresh insights of an informed local Board. I shall therefore be appointing a local Board for Broadmoor and one for the two Merseyside hospitals, Moss Side and Park Lane to enhance the effectiveness and accountability of the Special Hospitals Service as a whole. The aim is to establish the other two boards by the end of the year. The necessary statutory instruments will be introduced in due course. My overall responsibilities as Secretary of State will remain unchanged.

Hospitals (Thames Regions)

Mr. Pavitt asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will publish in the Official Report a table showing the hospitals within the four Thames regions which still retain accident and emergency units, together with the number of times in the last three months when they have been placed on a treat and transfer basis.

Mr. Whitney: I shall let the hon. Member have a reply as soon as possible.

Dental Charges

Mr. Michie asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what assessment his Department has made of the effect on patients' choice of treatments of increases in dental charges; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hayhoe: No such assessment has been made and it would be very difficult to undertake as the charge is only one of many factors which might affect a patient's choice of treatment.

NHS (Contract Cleaners)

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many contract cleaning groups or companies have withdrawn from competition for National Health Service cleaning work under the competitive tendering programme during the last 12 months.

Mr. Whitney: This information is not collected centrally.

Medical Records

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will make a statement on the consultations which he has had with medical and consumer organisations about restriction of the circulation of medical records.

Mr. Hayhoe: In October 1984 my Department issued for consultation a draft code on the confidentiality of personal health information (circular DA(84)25). This was sent out widely to health professional and consumer organisations and to all health and local authorities. In the light of the comments received and with the assistance of Sir Douglas Black's interprofessional working group on access to personal health information, work is proceeding to finalise the code for promulgation in a direction under section 17 of the National Health Service Act 1977 later this year.

Operations (Facilities)

Mr. Thurnham asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what are his Department's objectives on the provision of facilities for operations; how he is monitoring their effectiveness; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Whitney: We expect each health authority to provide the facilities necessary for emergency and elective surgery and to monitor their effective and efficient use.

NHS (Overseas Visitors)

Mr. Meacher asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what is the (a) income per district health authority and (b) nationally for each year since 1 October 1982 from charges to overseas visitors using National Health Service facilities.

Mr. Hayhoe: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to the hon. Member for Roxburgh and Berwickshire (Mr. Kirkwood) on 2 December 1985, at columns 117-126.

Benefits

Mr. Meacher asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) what was the number of lone parent claimants in receipt of (a) family income supplement, (b) unemployment benefit, (c) supplementary benefit and (d) unemployment benefit and supplementary benefit for the latest available year in Wales;

(2) what was the number of lone parent claimants in receipt of (a) family income supplement, (b) unemployment benefit, (c) supplementary benefit and (d) unemployment benefit and supplementary benefit for the latest available year in Scotland;

(3) what was the number of lone parent claimants in receipt of (a) family income supplement, (b) unemployment benefit, (c) supplementary benefit and (d) unemployment benefit and supplementary benefit for the latest available year.

Mr. Major [pursuant to his reply, 10 February 1986, c. 371]: The number of lone parents receiving unemployment benefit only cannot be identified separately. The other information requested is as follows:

Benefit	Number of lone parents in:			Latest available date
	Great Britain	Scotland	Wales
Family income supplement	80,000	12,000	4,000	November 1985
Supplementary benefit	475,000	50,000	25,000	December 1983
Supplementary benefit and unemployment benefit	*5,000	—	—	December 1983

* This figure is included in the overall supplementary benefit figure.

DEFENCE

Departmental Staff (Travel Expenditure)

Mr. Wigley asked the Secretary of State for Defence what is the total travelling expenditure incurred by staff in his Department during the last financial year; and what were the corresponding figures for each of the previous five years.

Mr. Lee: The total indentifiable travelling expenditure incurred by civilian staff in my Department while on duty during the last financial year (1984-85) was £20·726 million. The corresponding figures for each of the previous five years are:

Financial year	£ million
1979-80	15·101
1980-81	14·804
1981-82	14·346
1982-83	17·816
1983-84	19·101

Royal Yacht Britannia

Mr. Willie W. Hamilton asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he will publish a table showing the dates and costs of refits of the Royal Yacht Britannia since 1960, including the estimated cost of the refit planned for 1985-86.

Mr. Lee: The next refit of HMY Britannia is currently planned to start in January 1987. Because the Government are considering inviting tenders from private sector shipyards the estimated cost is commercially confidential. Details of previous refits since 1960 are given in the table.

Although these figures are broadly comparable they are not adjusted for changes in accounting conventions, for example, depreciation and other overheads.

Cost of refitting HMY Britannia since 1960

Refit dates	Total actual production cost £ million
November 1960 to March 1961	0·194
March 1962 to June 1962	0·063
December 1964 to April 1965	0·324
August 1967 to November 1967	0·234
August 1969 to December 1969	0·474
October 1972 to July 1973	1·782
January 1976 to April 1976	1·379
September 1979 to April 1980	4·915
September 1983 to March 1984	6·692

Mr. Trotter asked the Secretary of State for Defence whether the Tyneside shipyards will be able to bid for the refit of the royal yacht.

Mr. Lee: If the Government decide to invite tenders from commercial shipyards for the refit of HMY Britannia, the invitation will extend to all suitable shipyards in the United Kingdom which meet the necessary standards.

Service Establishments

Mr. Michael McNair-Wilson asked the Secretary of State for Defence how many Army establishments exist in the United Kingdom and overseas; and what is his estimate of the value of other buildings, facilities and stores; and if he will give similar figures for the Royal Navy.

Mr. Lee: There are approximately 500 major army units and establishments in the United Kingdom and an army presence in 74 main locations overseas. The navy has 65 principal establishments in the United Kingdom and a further four overseas.

No estimate is readily available of the value of buildings, facilities and stores, and the assembly of this information would involve a disproportionate amount of effort in both the Ministry of Defence and the Property Services Agency.

Service Personnel (Casualties)

Mr. Patrick McNair-Wilson asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he will publish details of the number of members of the armed forces who were killed while training in the years 1982, 1983, 1984 and 1985.

Mr. Lee: The numbers of regular Service personnel killed during schedule training — including flying accidents—and exercises were as follows:

	Number
1982	33
1983	32
1984	29
1985	*24

* Provisional figures only

Animals (Experiments)

Mr. Freeson asked the Secretary of State for Defence in which Ministry of Defence establishments experiments are carried out on animals; and for what purpose.

Mr. Lee: It is not the practice to list establishments at which animal experiments are carried out. Experiments at Ministry of Defence establishments involving the use of animals are mainly directed at developing defensive measures against chemical attack. It is also necessary to ensure protection against biological warfare. Other work includes medical research, such as the study of wounds and the diagnosis of disease. No animals are used to practice surgery, or in work to improve weapons or ammunition performance. All animals are deeply anaesthetised when wounded. All experiments involving live animals are conducted in accordance with current legislation.

Mr. Freeson asked the Secretary of State for Defence what chemical and biological agents have been tested on animals in Ministry of Defence establishments in the last year; and for what purpose.

Mr. Lee: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the answer I gave on 22 March 1984 at column 570 in which I explained that, as is the case with many other defence activities, a great deal of the work at the chemical defence establishment must be protected in the interests of national security. It would not be in the national interest to make available detailed information which could enable an informed observer to gain a useful insight into the scope of CDE's work and the line particular research is taking.

Mr. Freeson asked the Secretary of State for Defence how many experiments have been carried out on animals in Ministry of Defence establishments in each of the last five years; and how many animals were involved.

Mr. Lee: The number of experiments notifiable under the Cruelty to Animals Act 1876 carried out in MOD establishments in each of the last five years for which figures are available is as follows. Each separate animal used counts as one experiment.

	Number
1980	20,700
1981	18,200
1982	14,400
1983	9,900
1984	11,332

Mr. Freeson asked the Secretary of State for Defence how many animals have died as a result of tests concerning chemical and biological agents in Ministry of Defence establishments in each of the last five years.

Mr. Lee: Information is not available in the form requested. I refer the hon. Gentleman to my previous answer which gives the number of experiments subject to the Cruelty of Animals Act 1876. It is normal practice to kill an animal painlessly at the end of an experiment.

Written Answers to Questions

Wednesday 26 February 1986

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Poplars, Blunham

Mr. Lyell asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what representations he has received in relation to an application to fell match poplars at Blunham in Bedfordshire and return the land to horticultural use.

Mrs. Fenner: My right hon. Friend has received only one representation regarding this application, and this was from the owner of the plantation. However, the Forestry Commission is still involved in consultations on the matter with the Mid-Bedfordshire district council and under the normal procedures for dealing with disputed felling licence application it may yet seek my views before giving a decision on the application.

Farmers (Support System)

Sir Richard Body asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether any study has been made by his Department as to how the different types of farmers have benefited from the existing system of support.

Mrs. Fenner: Information about grants and subsidies received by farm businesses, according to type of farming, is collected as part of the farm management survey. The most recent published information is contained in "Farm Incomes in England 1983-84", copies of which are available in the Library of the House. Information relating to 1984-85 for the United Kingdom is expected to be published in a few weeks time.

The total effect of farmers of the existing system of support could be assessed only by making hypothetical assumptions about the alternative policy which might otherwise have obtained.

Animal Welfare (Report)

Mr. Steel asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when his Department will respond to the Farm Animal Welfare Council report; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Fenner: The recommendations in the Farm Animal Welfare Council's report on the welfare of livestock when slaughtered by religious methods are under consideration in the light of representations received. We fully recognise the importance attached to both the report and the Government's response.

Severe Weather Payments

Mr. Burt asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what representations he has received from farmers in the Greater Manchester county area about the exceptional weather aid scheme; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Jopling: I have received four letters from hon. Members asking me to extend payments under the exceptional weather aid scheme to farmers in the Greater Manchester area. While I sympathise with all farmers who suffered as a result of last year's bad weather but did not qualify for assistance under the scheme, we had to direct the limited resources available to those areas which were most seriously affected. There was inevitably some element of rough justice, but I believe that in broad terms we have achieved our objective of helping those most in need.

Those farmers in Greater Manchester who fall within the less favoured areas will qualify for hill livestock compensatory allowances which will be paid at increased rates for 1986, as I announced on 28 November 1985.

Plant Breeding

Mr. John asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will state the cost of plant breeding rights and national list testing in England; and if he will distinguish therein between administrative and operational costs.

Mrs. Fenner: My Ministry incurs expenditure on these systems both internally and in relation to work performed on its behalf by the National Institute of Agricultural Botany and other bodies. In the financial year 1985-86, internal expenditure, mainly attributable to administration, is estimated at £0·3 million. Payments to NIAB, which account for the bulk of the operational expenditure, are estimated at £0·5 million for plant breeders rights and £1·3 million for national listing. My Ministry also incurs expenditure in respect of plant breeders rights and national listing in Northern Ireland and in respect of the former in Scotland.

Sheep Farming (Damage by Dogs)

Mr. Alex Carlile asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he has any proposals concerning damage to sheep farming enterprises by dogs.

Mrs. Fenner: The loss of sheep and other livestock killed by dogs is a matter of concern to the Government. Livestock worrying is an offence under the Dogs (Protection of Livestock) Act 1953, and the maximum fine on the owner or handler of a dog found worrying livestock on agricultural land was raised in 1984 to £400. The Animals Act 1971 makes the keeper of a dog which kills or injures livestock responsible for the damage and liable to a claim for compensation, and under the same legislation farmers may shoot a dog if there is no other way of preventing it attacking their stock.

The problem of worrying is well understood, and I do not believe there are grounds for an inquiry. However, I am aware that the legislation must be supplemented by a vigorous campaign of education, publicity and advice. My Department is contributing to this by continuing its successful publicity campaign launched in 1984.

Agriculture Council

Mr. Nicholls asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what was the outcome of the Council of Agriculture Ministers meeting held in Brussels on 24 and 25 February; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Jopling: The Council had an initial discussion of the Commission's proposals on agricultural prices and related measures for 1986/87. I pointed to the increasingly serious problems confronting the common agricultural policy and the need for firm measures to deal with them. In general I commended the Commission's determination to place the main emphasis on action through price, but I expressed concern about the proposal to exceed the financial guideline for agricultural expenditure. I made clear my very strong objections in particular to those aspects of the proposals which would differentiate the level of support under the policy to the disadvantage of larger farmers.

The Council adopted, subject to the opinion of the European Parliament, three measures to improve agriculture in particular disadvantaged areas. One of the areas benefiting will be the islands off the northern and western coasts of Scotland (except the Western Isles, which have already been the subject of a similar measure). Provision is made for expenditure on the Scottish measure of 62·5 million ecu over five years, to which the Community will contribute 25 million ecu. This covers improvement of farm structures and infrastructure, improvements in farm houses, assistance for farm tourism and craft industries and management payments for farmers undertaking environmental agreements.

The Council reached an agreement in principle, with Belgium dissenting, on measures enabling starch and sugar to be made available at preferential prices for use in a range of industrial products. The intention is, on the one hand, to encourage these products to be manufactured within the Community rather than outside and, on the other, to ensure reasonable terms of competition between sugar and starch. I obtained an assurance that the arrangements for starch could be extended to certain food products, provided they met the agreed criteria.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Lignite

Mr. Favell asked the Secretary of State of State for Northern Ireland what assessment he has made of the benefit of lignite development for Northern Ireland and of the time scale on which these will accrue.

Dr. Boyson: Lignite development in Northern Ireland offers the possibility of significantly reduced electricity generation cost and the creation of new employment in mining and in the construction of power stations. The first lignite fired power station should come into use in the early to mid-1990s.

Down Development Plan

Mr. Budgen asked the Secretary of State of State for Northern Ireland if he has received the Commissioners' report on the public inquiry held on 22 May 1985 at Downpatrick into objections to the Down development plan; and when he expects to publish it and his own decisions.

Mr. Needham: The report of the Planning Appeals Commission was received on 19 December 1985 and is under consideration by the Department of the Environment. It is likely that a statement on the plan together with the commissioner's report will be published by the end of April 1986.

Plant Breeding

Mr. John asked the Secretary of State of State for Northern Ireland if he will state the cost of plant breeding rights and national list testing in Northern Ireland; and if he will distinguish therein between administrative and operational costs.

Dr. Boyson: Estimated expenditure by the Department of Agriculture for Northern Ireland on plant breeders rights in 1985-86 is £128,000, of which administrative expenses are £16,000; for national list testing the figures are £107,000 and £17,000 respectively.

Colleges of Education (Students)

Mr. Alton asked the Secretary of State of State for Northern Ireland what are the respective numbers of students at St. Mary's college of education and Stranmillis college of education; what is the respective funding of each college; and what is the respective funding of each student union.

Dr. Mawhinney: The information is as follows:

	St. Mary's	Stranmillis £
Student Numbers 1985-86 (Academic Year)	563	566
Recurrent Funding 1985-86 (Financial Year)	£2,245,000	£2,842,000

The level of student union funding is a matter for local determination between a union and its institution within the totality of the institution's recurrent financial position.

SOLICITOR-GENERAL FOR SCOTLAND

Entrapment

44. Mr. Kennedy asked the Solicitor-General for Scotland if he will review the guidelines issued to the police on the subject of entrapment; and if he will make a statement.

The Solicitor-General for Scotland: The Lord Advocate has not issued guidelines to the police on this subject, but a Scottish Office circular issued in 1969 to chief constables makes it absolutely clear that no member of a police force should counsel, incite or procure the commission of a crime. The 1977 High Court judgment in Cook v. Skinner gives further guidance. These sources should be sufficient to enable the police to distinguish clearly between entrapment and legitimate crime detection operations.

Public Order Law (Reform)

45. Mr. Wallace asked the Solicitor-General for Scotland when the Lord Advocate last met members of the Scottish Law Commission to discuss reform of the law in relation to public order.

The Solicitor-General for Scotland: In the course of a recent meeting with the chairman of the Scottish Law Commission my noble and learned Friend the Lord Advocate discussed the commission's work on the law of mobbing and rioting. Subsequently the chairman has written to the Lord Advocate advising him that the Commission has decided not to publish a report for the time being. I am arranging for a copy of the letter to be placed in the Library.

Driving Offences

47. Mr. Allen Adams asked the Solicitor-General for Scotland how many prosecutions there have been in Scotland in 1986 for driving offences that do not include alcohol or parking.

The Solicitor-General for Scotland: Statistics in respect of motor vehicle offences for 1986 are not yet available.

Procurators Fiscal

48. Mr. Bill Walker asked the Solicitor-General for Scotland which procurators fiscal offices are presently under establishment.

The Solicitor-General for Scotland: Following a recent resignation there is one legal assistant vacancy at the procurator fiscal's office, Linlithgow. Dumbarton and Edinburgh is each short of an officer at the executive officer grade; Dundee, Falkirk and Kilmarnock are each short of one clerical or secretarial grade, and Hamilton is short of two.

Summary Cases (Trials)

49. Mr. Millan asked the Solicitor-General for Scotland if he will make a statement about the transfer of certain types of summary case from a sheriff court to the district courts in Glasgow.

The Solicitor-General for Scotland: Glasgow has four district courts presided over by stipendiary magistrates, who have the full summary criminal jurisdiction of sheriffs. It is the policy of the procurator fiscal to make full use of these courts and thereby to relieve some of the pressures on the sheriff court which will continue to be fully utilised.

Wildlife and Countryside Act 1981

50. Sir Hector Monro asked the Solicitor-General for Scotland how many prosecutions have taken place under the Wildlife and Countryside Act 1981 in each year since its enactment.

The Solicitor-General for Scotland: Separate statistics in relation to such prosecutions are not available.

Industrial Tribunals

51. Mr. Home Robertson asked the Solicitor-General for Scotland if he will ask the Scottish Law Commission to review legislation relating to the operation of industrial tribunals in Scotland in the light of recent cases involving miners.

The Solicitor-General for Scotland: No. Neither I nor my noble and learned Friend the Lord Advocate has any ministerial responsibilities for employment law and it would therefore not be appropriate for the Lord Advocate to refer this matter to the Scottish Law Commission. Responsibility for employment law rests with my right hon. and noble Friend the Secretary of State for Employment.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Bills (Standing Order No. 15)

Mr. Evans asked the Lord Privy Seal (1) how many Bills introduced under Standing Order No. 15 were rejected on a Division in each separate Session of Parliament from May 1979 to November 1985;

(2) how many Bills were introduced under Standing Order No. 15 in each separate Session of Parliament from May 1979 until November 1985.

Mr. Biffen: There follows a list of the number of motions for leave to bring in Bills under the ten-minute rule—Standing Order No. 15—negatived on Division and agreed to.

Session	Negatived on Division	Agreed to
1979-80	11	63
1980-81	15	33
1981-82	6	50
1982-83	4	30
1983-84	6	66
1984-85	13	43

Mr. Evans asked the Lord Privy Seal how many Bills were introduced under Standing Order No. 15 by Labour hon. Members have been enacted in each Session of Parliament from May 1979 to November 1985.

Mr. Biffen: One — in Session 1982-83, Solvent Abuse (Scotland) Act, introduced by the hon. Member for Glasgow, Shettleston (Mr. Marshall).

Government Bills

Mr. Evans asked the Lord Privy Seal how many Bills introduced by Her Majesty's Government received a Second Reading in each Session of Parliament from May 1979 to November 1985.

Mr. Biffen: Information of this sort may be obtained from the Return of Public Bills, published sessionally as a House of Commons paper.

ENVIRONMENT

Disabled Council Tenants

Mr. Hannam asked the Secretary of State for the Environment, pursuant to the reply given by the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State to the hon. Member for Normanton (Mr. O'Brien) on 29 November 1985, whether he has, as an exception to the policy in circular 26/85, approved any applications by local authorities for the payment of Exchequer contribution in respect of grants for disabled council tenants.

Mr. John Patten: My right hon. Friend, the Secretary of State for Wales and I are aware of the special needs of disabled people and recognise that it may be necessary for adaptation to their homes to be carried out quickly to meet those needs. We have therefore decided to make a general exception to the policy in circular 26/85 (Welsh Office 54/85) as regards home improvement grants for the adaptation of local authority dwellings by disabled council tenants.

It will no longer be necessary for local authorities to refer individual applications to the Departments for the payment of Exchequer contribution in respect of grants under part VII of the Housing Act 1974, given by a local authority which contributes all or part of the tenant's share of the cost. In future, Exchequer contribution will be payable in the usual way in respect of such cases. The Departments are informing local authorities of this decision.

Derelict Land

Mr. Lyell asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the acreage of land shown in the derelict land register in respect of each of the parliamentary authorities listed in his answer to the hon. Member for Birmingham, Perry Barr (Mr. Rooker) on 28 January, Official Report, column 470.

Mr. John Patten: My Department does not maintain a register of derelict land. Registers of unused and underused publicly-owned land were set up under part X of the Local Government, Planning and Land Act 1980. On 20 February the amount of land shown on these registers as owned by the authorities listed in the answer of 28 January was as follows:

	Local Authority	Amount of registered land (acres)
1	Leeds	1,264
2	Kingston-upon-Hull	892
3	Sunderland	845
4	Manchester	646
5	Liverpool	503
6	Bradford	489
7	Sheffield	480
8	Wakefield	471
9	Gateshead	460
10	Rotherham	445
11	Preston	434
12	Rochdale	433
13	Coventry	421
14	Barnsley	410
15	Kirklees	389
16	Dudley	359
17	North Tyneside	344
18	Nottingham	281

Yorkshire Water Authority

Mr. Harrison asked the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) what is the total acreage of land owned or leased as water catchment areas by the Yorkshire water authority;

(2) if he will identify the various areas by name, the specified acreage of each site, and the geographical position of water catchment areas owned or rented by the Yorkshire water authority.

Mr. John Patten: This information is not held centrally. I suggest that the right hon. Member approaches the Yorkshire water authority.

Mr. Harrison asked the Secretary of State for the Environment how many fishing associations have permission to fish within the Yorkshire water authority area; and if he will identify them by name and total numbers involved.

Mr. John Patten: This information is not available within my Department. I suggest that the right hon. Member approaches the Yorkshire water authority.

Local Authority Dwellings and Derelict Land

Mr. Lyell asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish in the Official Report in respect of each local authority area participating in the partnership programme and each other designated district the number of local authority dwellings which have been empty for more than 12 months and the amount of derelict land shown in the derelict land register.

Sir George Young: Following are the numbers of local authority dwellings vacant for more than a year and the amounts of local authority land in the registers of unused and underused land:

Southwark Law Project

Mr. Gerald Bowden asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations he has received about the future of the Southwark law project when its urban aid grant expires in 1987.

Mr. John Patten: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment received representations last summer from the hon. Member for Southwark and Bermondsey (Mr. Hughes) and one of his constituents about the future funding of the Southwark law project. They were both informed that it is for the London borough of Southwark to decide how best to replace the urban programme funding when its time expires in 1987.

London Docklands Development Corporation

Mr. Cohen asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what safeguards the London Docklands Development Corporation has to seek to prevent the manipulation of the affordable homes schemes to secure the benefits of the scheme for persons not so entitled; and if he will make a statement.

Sir George Young: The LDDC has recently reviewed the operation of its "affordable housing policy" and taken steps to prevent the abuse of the priority arrangements for local tenants. Priority is given to local authority tenants living within the docklands boroughs, who can provide evidence of tenancy and who have been on the electoral roll at their council address for 12 months. After six weeks on the market, the builder may then take reservations from open market purchasers.

All purchasers of affordable homes (that is priced at £40,000 or less) are now required by covenant to pay the LDDC on resale a proportion of the difference between the affordable selling price and the open market selling price at the time of the original reservation. The proportion to be paid declines in stages over a five-year period.

Purchasers are also required to sign a declaration to the effect that they will take occupation of the dwelling being purchased. LDDC has publicised these new arrangements within the local communities.

Radiation

Mr. Teddy Taylor asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what assessment he has made of the exposure to radiation each year which is experienced, respectively, by a person living five miles from a nuclear power station and a person using a colour television set in the family home for four hours a day.

Mr. Waldegrave: The National Radiological Protection Board advises me that direct exposure from a television set operating four hours a day will be above 5 nanoSieverts per year. There will be no direct radiation exposure five miles away from an operating advanced gas-cooled nuclear reactor and exposure to authorised discharges will be about 1 microsievert per year.

Mr. Frank Cook asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list all accidents at Sellafield, Windscale, Drigg and associated sites involving release of radiation which have been notified to the Irish Government for the purpose of their monitoring of possible radiological consequences, since 1956; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waldegrave: With the exception of the Windscale fire of 1957 there have been no accidents at any of these sites which would have necessitated such monitoring. Since 1977 the Irish Government have been furnished by the Health and Safety Executive with regular quarterly statements of incidents at nuclear installations in Britain, copies of which are available in the Library of the House.

In addition, my Department has informed the Irish Government of all incidents which have resulted in the release of significant quantities of radioactivity.

Council House Sales

Sir Gerard Vaughan asked the Secretary of State for the Environment how many council dwellings have been sold in Reading since April 1979; what proportion this represents of the April 1979 housing stock; and how many council dwellings remain in council ownership.

Sir George Young: Estimates of sales of council dwellings from April 1979 to September 1985 and of the stock owned by the local authority at 1 April 1985 are given in the table which was laid in the Library in response to a question from the hon. Member for Welwyn Hatfield (Mr. Murphy) on 19 December, at column 259. Sales reported by Reading represent 16·2 per cent. of its April 1979 stock.

Reading (Urban Aid)

Sir Gerard Vaughan asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what urban aid was given to Reading in 1978 and in each subsequent year.

Sir George Young: For the years from 1978-79 to 1985-86 inclusive, Reading borough councils estimated expenditure under the traditional urban programme totalled £1,772,845, of which 75 per cent. is being met by central Government.

The yearly breakdown is:

Year	Amount £
1978-79	8,122
1979-80	22,111
1980-81	62,188
1981-82	208,852
1982-83	236,908
1983-84	349,317
1984-85	*581,182
1985-86	*304,165

News International Planning Permission

Mr. Nellist asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if, pursuant to his answer of 17 February, Official Report, column 35, he will place in the Library the information available to the London Docklands Development Corporation on the terms of the planning permission granted to News International prior to the existence of the London Docklands Development Corporation.

Sir George Young [pursuant to his reply, 20 February 1986, c. 340]: I have today placed the information requested in the Library of the House.

Local Government Act 1985

Mr. Hunter asked the Secretary of State for the Environment when he expects to make a scheme under the provisions of section 59(3) of the Local Government Act 1985; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Tracey: My right hon. Friend has now made the scheme promised in the announcement made by my noble Friend the Minister of Planning and Regional Affairs on 13 November 1985, at columns 379-87, in another place. Full details of the scheme — the Government Reorganisation (Reduction of Redundancy Payment Cases) Scheme 1986 — are being published with guidance notes in a joint circular (DOE5/86: SDD6/86: WOI3/86) issued today. The circular, issued by my Department, and the Scottish and Welsh Offices, is addressed to all local authorities in England, Scotland and Wales, and to the residuary bodies which were established under the Local Government Act 1985 to wind up the affairs of the GLC and the six metropolitan county councils. I am arranging for copies to be placed in the Library.

The scheme implements the decisions which were summarised in the announcement made on 13 November and communicated to the main interested parties at that time. It is designed to stimulate the creation of additional job opportunities for GLC and MCC employees by encouraging local authorities at large to allow some of their own employees to retire early and to fill the vacancies so created by recruiting GLC or MCC employees who might otherwise be left redundant at abolition.

The Government hope that authorities will make full use of the scheme, thereby retaining the experience and expertise of such officers in local government and minimising redundancies.

Watercourses (Mercury Contamination)

Mr. Hardy asked the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) if he will list those rivers and watercourses or areas of still water where the levels of mercury are such as to present a hazard to the public;

(2) which stretches of rivers and watercourses in England contain levels of mercury which are (a) above and (b) over twice the level of the limit set down by the European Economic Community.

Mr. John Patten [pursuant to his reply, 23 January 1986, c. 297]: The quality standard for mercury in fresh water required by EC directives 82/176/EEC and 84/156/EEC is an average annual concentration of 1 ug/l total mercury. Apart from areas immediately downstream of discharge points, where the standard is not required to be complied with, it is known to be exceeded at only two places (in both cases by more than a factor of two).

(a) In the Trent Mersey canal at Northwich. The quality standard is not met because of the very limited dilution available, although the discharge of mercury is well within the limit values for emissions laid down in the directive.

(b) In the River Rother at Stavely. When new treatment plant is commissioned later this year it is anticipated that the quality standard will be met.

At neither of these sites, nor any other affected by major discharges of mercury, is water abstracted for public supply, or is there known to be any hazard to the public.

PRIME MINISTER

Education Policies

Mr. Freud asked the Prime Minister whether she will make a statement on her intentions in respect of (a) education vouchers, (b) reintroduction of direct grant schools or status and (c) expansion of the assisted places scheme.

The Prime Minister: The Government continue to consider all possibilities for improving school education.

WALES

Breast Cancer

Mr. Wigley asked the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list those district health authorities in Wales which currently screen all symptomless women aged 50 years and older for breast cancer as a matter of routine; at what cycle of frequency such screening takes place; and what are the future plans for his Department for developing these services.

Mr. Mark Robinson: No district health authorities in Wales routinely screen women for breast cancer at present.

An expert working group on breast cancer screening was appointed in July 1985 under the chairmanship of Professor Sir Patrick Forrest to consider the situation in the United Kingdom. It has produced an interim report, a copy of which has been placed in the Library. The report concluded that there was a clinical case for providing mammographic facilities and screening for symptomless women aged 50 and over, together with the necessary back-up services. This will be considered in detail in the final report, which will set out policy options, their costs and benefits and the overall implications for the NHS. The final report is expected later this year.

Higher and Further Education

Mr. Barry Jones asked the Secretary of State for Wales what proportion of Welsh students concluding secondary education in July 1985 at the age of 18 years progressed to (a) university courses, (b) polytechnic courses and (c) any further education courses; and if he will give comparable figures for each year from 1980.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: The information is not available in the form requested. Estimates from a sample of leavers from maintained and independent schools in Wales indicate intentions of entry into full-time further education as follows:

Percentage of school leavers aged 18 and over intending to enter full-time further education

Type of education	1979-80	1980-81	1981-82	1982-83	1983-84
Degree and teacher training courses	48	49	44	45	43
Other full-time further and higher education	18	19	21	21	24
All further and higher education	66	68	65	65	66

Comparable information for school leavers in 1984-85 is not yet available.

Forestry Commission Land

Mr. Geraint Howells asked the Secretary of State for Wales how many acres of Forestry Commission land in Wales were sold last year; what were the corresponding figures for the last 10 years; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholas Edwards: Sales records are maintained by financial years to 31 March. In the period from 1 April 1985 the Forestry Commission has sold 2,143 hectares of land in Wales. Figures for the previous 10 years are as follows:

Year to 31 March	Land sold (Hectares)
1976	316
1977	200
1978	507
1979	221
1980	396
1981	361
1982	1,743
1983	1,450
1984	3,347
1985	3,522

Mr. Geraint Howells asked the Secretary of State for Wales if he has any plans to sell off to private buyers all the land held by the Forestry Commission in Wales; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholas Edwards: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the statement made by my right hon. Friend the Member for Ayr on 8 November 1984, at columns 6-7, setting out the Government's policy on disposals by the Forestry Commission. As in all other areas of Government activity, policy is kept under regular review.

ENERGY

Sellafield

Mr. Frank Cook asked the Secretary of State for Energy (1) what was the actual dose level in rad rem on mSv calculated to have been received by the one individual worker who at Sellafield in February was exposed in one incident to the equivalent of one year's permissible dose;

(2) what criteria were applied by the Health and Safety Executive or the Nuclear Industries Inspectorate in their assessment that one individual worker at Sellafield had received in February the equivalent in one incident of one year's permissible radiation dose;

(3) what method was applied by the Health and Safety Executive or the Nuclear Industries Inspectorate in their assessment that one individual worker at Sellafield had received in February 1986 the equivalent in one incident of one year's permissible radiation dose.

Mr. Goodlad: Final assessment of the dose level must await the results of biological monitoring. The present assessment of intake is, I am advised by the Nuclear Industries Inspectorate and British Nuclear Fuels, based on measurements of the plutonium alpha activity on a personal air sampler worn by the individual concerned, as interpreted by ICRP published data relating intake to consequential doses, and the statutory dose limits in the Ionising Radiation Regulations 1985. If the assessment is confirmed, it is estimated that the worker received an intake which will commit him to a dose of about 50 rem (500 mSv) to his bone surfaces, which is equivalent to the current statutory dose limit for one year set by the regulations. This dose would be delivered at a rate of about 1 rem (10 mSv) per annum.

EMPLOYMENT

Disabled Persons

Mr. Wigley asked the Paymaster General how many officers in his Department, including local offices, deal totally or mainly with issues relating to the employment of disabled people; and how this figure compares to the corresponding figures five years ago.

Mr. Lang: There are currently around 1,440 officers in the Department of Employment group dealing totally or mainly with issues relating to the employment of disabled people. The corresponding figure five years ago was around 1,820, but since then there have been a number of important changes in the way this work is organised. In particular other mainstream employment service staff have been given responsibility for helping disabled people whose needs are similar to other job seekers; and thus many of them individually spend part of their time on such work.

Labour Statistics

Mr. Robert B. Jones asked the Paymaster General if he will list the help being provided by his Department for the young unemployed in West Hertfordshire.

Mr. Lang: Available information is as follows:

(1) 424 places offering YTS training are available in the Dacorum local authority district.
(2) 217 people are taking part in the community programme in the Hemel Hempstead area.
(3) In the Hemel Hempstead area 49 young people are being supported under the young workers scheme. young people from west Hertfordshire will also be able to benefit from employment and training measures in neighbouring areas.

Manchester

Mr. Tony Lloyd asked the Paymaster General if he will list the places in Manchester he visited on 10 February; and which Members of Parliament were advised of the details of this visit in advance.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: On 10 February I began my visit to Manchester at the regional office of the Manpower Services Commission for a meeting with members of the city action team. I then had discussions with the leader of Manchester city council, Councillor Stringer, and then visited the Moss Side link programme. My visit ended with the churches work scheme in Moss Side.

The right hon. Member for Manchester, Gorton (Mr. Kaufman), and the hon. Members for Manchester, Central (Mr. Litherland), and for Stretford (Mr. Lloyd) were all informed of my visit in advance, and the hon. Member for Manchester, Central was also given details of my programme.

Mr. Lloyd asked the Paymaster General why he chose the title Moss Side-Lloyd street for the area of Manchester involved in the recent announcement of inner cities; how much of this area he expects to lie outside the Stretford constituency; what information he provided to hon. Members about this project; to which hon. Members and when.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: We identified the area in Manchester we had in mind for the pilot initiative in these general terms because we based our choice on the 1981 census wards of Moss Side and Lloyd street. A significant part of these wards lies outside Stretford constituency. however, I will take final decisions on the precise boundaries of this and the other pilot areas only after further local consultation.

I wrote to the hon. members most concerned with details of the initiative on 6 February. I apologise for the fact that due to an oversight I did not write to the hon. Member until 17 February.

Youth Training

Sir Gerard Vaughan asked the Paymaster General how many jobs are currently being provided in Reading by YTS and other schemes for which his Department is responsible; and how this compares with the number of jobs provided in or near April 1979.

Mr. Trippier: Some 3,200 people are currently supported by our employment and training measures in Reading. Because of the basis on which local statistics are collected, an unknown proportion may fall in areas outside the local authority district. I regret that we do not hold local figures for 1979.

Job Start Scheme

Mr. Gardiner asked the Paymaster General what reductions have been achieved so far in the totals of long-term unemployed in each of the nine pilot areas in which the job start scheme is operating.

Mr. Lang: Analysis of unemployment by duration are available only on a quarterly basis. The last count was undertaken on 9 January, only three days after the pilot schemes had begun. The analysis of the next count, undertaken on 10 April, is expected in late May.

For monitoring purposes, however, we have collected information on the numbers of people leaving the unemployment count after being contacted by the Manpower Services Commission under the initiative. The details for each of the nine pilot areas after the first six weeks of the scheme are as follows:

	Number
Dundee	86
Billingham	42
Preston	87
Huddersfield	62
Stoke-on-Trent	163
Port Talbot & Neath	57
Plymouth	66
Crawley and Horsham	111
Ealing	75
	749

These figures include those who left the count any time after receiving letters from the MSC inviting them to in-depth counselling interviews, either before or after their interviews. It is not possible yet to say what proportion of these people would have left without the help of the scheme.

Community Industry

Mr. Hughes asked the Paymaster General how many persons aged 18 to 25 years are presently engaged in the community industry scheme in the borough of Knowsley; and what change in numbers there has been over the past year.

Mr. Lang: The community industry scheme is for disadvantaged young people aged 17 to 19 years of age. The Kirkby and Knowsley units both recruit from within the Metropolitan borough of Knowsley. In January 1986 it employed 141 young people aged 18 years and over. The corresponding figure for January 1985 was 161.

CHURCH COMMISSIONERS

Clergy Marriages

Mr. Frank Field asked the hon. Member for Wokingham, as representing the Church Commissioners, if he will place in the Library a copy of any submissions the Church Commissioners made to the House of Bishops' working party on the break-up of clergy marriages and any papers they have subsequently prepared following the publication of the working party's report.

Sir William van Straubenzee: The commissioners did not make formal submissions to the working party, nor have they prepared papers subsequently. As I explained in my answer to the hon. Member on 22 April 1985, representatives of the commissioners attended all the meetings of the working party and offered information and advice as and when required. I have arranged to place in the Library a copy of a note concerning the application of the Church Commissioners' funds prepared by the Church Commissioners official solicitor and submitted by the Third Church Estates Commissioner, a member of the working party.

DEFENCE

Radiation Illness, Coulport

Dr. Godman asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the issues raised about radiation illness at Coulport by the hon. Member for Greenock and Port Glasgow in the debates on the Royal Navy on 6 February, Official Report, column 517, and which he undertook to investigate, Official Report, column 532.

Mr. Lee: No illness caused by radiation is known to have occurred at Coulport. The Health and Safety Executive is investigating a recent suggestion that certain health problems at the depot might be associated with radiation; however, their investigation is not yet complete. I shall write to the hon. Gentleman very shortly.

Apprentices (Rosyth)

Mr. Gordon Brown asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the estimate for (a) apprentice intake and (b) the number of apprentices in training at Rosyth dockyard for 1986-87 and 1987-88.

Mr. Lee: The estimate for apprentice entry at Rosyth dockyard in 1986-87 is 144. Following entry of this number, and allowing for those completing training, there should be some 649 apprentices under training at Rosyth in the latter part of 1986-87; this would be the highest level since 1981-82.

The number of apprentices to be trained in future years, which would include decisions on the 1987-88 level of intake and the number then under training, will be a matter for discussion between the dockyard commercial operator and this Department.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Police (Firearms)

Mr. Marlow asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he proposes to review the procedures relating to the use of firearms by the police; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hurd: I am aware of and understand the public concern about the use of firearms by the police in recent months. I have therefore set in hand a thorough review of the relevant procedures. A working group, under Home Office chairmanship, will look at such matters as the selection and training of police officers in the use of firearms, the procedures for authorisation to issue firearms for particular operations, the existing instructions and guidelines regarding issue and use, and the choice of weapons and ammunition. The review of policy in these areas will involve representatives of police forces and appropriate staff associations. I am also in touch with the chairman of the independent Police Complaints Authority, who has sent me some general observations in advance of the conclusion of the authority's work on recent incidents involving firearms. In order not to prejudice any criminal or disciplinary proceedings which are pending, or could arise, from those incidents the authority cannot at this stage publish a report on these matters, but it intends to do so.

I am concerned that the review should work quickly but also take account of as wide a range of opinion as possible. To that end I would invite police authorities and any other bodies, organisations or individuals to submit their views in writing to the Home Office by 31 March 1986.

When the review is completed I shall advise the House of its conclusions.

IBA (Levies)

Mr. Parris asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the future of the Independent Broadcasting Authority levies.

Mr. Hurd: In consultation with the Treasury and the IBA, my Department has reviewed the arrangements in the Broadcasting Act 1981 for additional payments by independent television and radio programme contractors (the levies). The review was initiated because of the Government's concern that the high marginal tax rate arising from those arrangements taken together with corporation tax might be a disincentive to efficiency. I have placed in the Library a copy of the report containing the outcome of the review. In considering its recommendations we have also taken account of the 29th Report from the Committee of Public Accounts 1984-85. A Treasury Minute published today sets out the decisions which the Government have now taken. As explained in that minute, we have decided to take an early legislative opportunity to modify the levy provisions along the lines recommended by the review, so that the profits base on which the ITV levy would continue to be calculated includes profits from provision of programmes outside the United Kingdom. This will enable the marginal tax rate to be reduced, so as to encourage efficiency within the ITV companies. However, in order to preserve an incentive to exports, we shall propose a rate of levy on overseas profits at about half the standard rate.

The opportunity will also be taken to include in our legislative proposals a number of minor modifications to the levy arrangements identified by the review. These will include arrangements to permit any balance of the "free slice" of profits (the proportion of profits which attracts a nil rate of levy) which is not utilised against domestic profits to be carried across to overseas profits; and the minimum level of free slice, as now expressed in cash terms, will be reviewed from time to time. It is also proposed to make changes to the provisions governing refunds to the companies from the Consolidated Fund in the case of overpayment; to extend the provisions containing reserve powers to prescribe a company's minimum levy bill in the event of excessive expenditure; and to permit companies to offset trading losses which are relevant for levy purposes against leviable profits in future years to the end of their contracts. After careful consideration, however, we have concluded that it would not be right for this latter provision to have retrospective effect, as contemplated in the review; and by the same token we are not persuaded of the need to modify the accounting arrangements governing preliminary expenditure in the way recommended.

We also propose to implement the recommendation in relation to the radio levy by reducing the rate of levy to zero. The IBA has since concluded that it would not be practicable to make formal arrangements for the additional sums accruing to those companies who would otherwise have paid levy to be redistributed, and the Government accepts that view.

Animal Experiments

Mr. Cohen asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if, in the light of the nature of the research reported in "Behavioural Processes 1983," volume 8, pages 277-287, carried out at University College, Swansea, on mice restrained in perspex tubes, he will revoke the licences issued under the Cruelty to Animals Act to the experimenters concerned; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mellor: No. I am satisfied that these experiments were lawfully carried out and properly conducted in accordance with the terms and conditions of the licences of those responsible for the work.

Dr. Godman asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many animals have been subjected to experiments in Scottish laboratories in each of the past 10 years; and how many of these animals have been deprived of their sight, in one eye or both; where these experiments were conducted; what species of animals were used as experimental subjects; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mellor: The only information which could be provided in the time available is the number of experiments on living animals commenced at registered places in Scotland in the years 1982-84, which were 257,000 in 1982, 262,000 in 1983 and 254,000 in 1984. Experiments involving the deprivation of sight are not separately identified in the information collected centrally.

News International, Wapping

Mr. Cohen asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether vehicle registration numbers of any employees or agents of News International currently employed at Wapping, or National Graphical Association or Society for Graphic and Allied Trades members who are currently in dispute with News International, have been placed in the stolen or suspect vehicle index of the police national computer; and whether there are plans to do so.

Mr. Giles Shaw: No vehicle registration numbers of persons involved in the News International dispute are held on the police national computer by virtue of having been used during that dispute, nor are there any plans to hold such information.

Police Computers

Mr. Cohen asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what records will be kept by the police when personal data is disclosed to them via the non-disclosure provisions of the Data Protection Act; and what written statement will be sent to the data user by the police to show that the disclosure of personal date was by that route.

Mr. Giles Shaw: A working party of the Association of Chief Police Officers is currently considering this and other aspects of the Data Protection Act as it applies to police records with a view to issuing guidance to forces before the provisions of the Act come into force.

Mr. Cohen asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the replacement strategy and plans for the police national computer and the Metropolitan "C" department computer.

Mr. Giles Shaw: The police national computer mainframe hardware will have completed 10 years of continuous service by 1988, but final decisions have not yet been taken as to its replacement. The Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis informs me that he has no immediate plans to replace the Metropolitan police "C" department computer, but that he intends to renew some items of hardware to ensure that the system remains fully operational.

Police Statistics (Reading)

Sir Gerard Vaughan asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will call for a report from the commissioner of police for the Thames Valley as to how many uniformed police were employed in Reading in 1978 and the latest year for which figures are available.

Mr. Giles Shaw: I understand from the chief constable that the total strength of Reading division in the Thames Valley police, including both uniformed officers and CID, was 464 on 31 December 1985, compared with 362 on 31 December 1978.

Immigration Service, Heathrow

Mr. Corbett asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what provision is being made for (a) full-time and (b) part-time interpreters and in which languages in the immigration service at Heathrow airport terminal 4.

Mr. Waddington: The provision of interpretation facilities by the immigration service is currently under review. Until that review is completed, terminal 4 will draw on the pool of eight full-time interpreters at terminal 3, who speak Bengali, Farsi, Gujerati, Hindi, Marathi, Punjabi and Urdu, supplemented by the employment of hourly-paid interpreters in those and other languages, as necessary.

Mr. Corbett asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the establishment (a) requested by the staff side and (b) given for immigration officers by grade at London Heathrow terminal 4.

Mr. Waddington: The approved allocation is for 96 immigration officers and 16 chief immigration officers. This compares with a complement of 100 immigration officers and 16 chief immigration officers suggested by the Immigration Service Union and the Society of Civil and Public Servants (Immigration Branch).

Fire Service

Mr. Sheerman asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he has any plans to seek to modify the existing arrangements and agreements concerning the pay and conditions of the fire service.

Mr. Giles Shaw: These are matters for negotiation between representatives of fire authorities and their employees, on the National Joint Council for Local Authorities' Fire Brigades, on which my right hon. Friend is not represented.

Styal Prison

Mr. Alex Carlile asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement concerning the termination of Mr. James Anderson's appointment as governor of Her Majesty's prison, Styal.

Mr. Mellor: Mr. Anderson's transfer from Her Majesty's prison Styal to Her Majesty's Youth Custody Centre, Hindley was one of a series of routine governor-grade moves made for operational and career reasons.

Mr. Alex Carlile asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what representations the prison department has received from prison staff employed at Her Majesty's prison, Styal, during the period of Mr. James Anderson's employment there as governor; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mellor: Mr. Anderson has held regular meetings with the local branch of the Prison Officers' Association while governor of Styal prison and youth custody centre. The national executive committee of the Prison Officers' Association has also, on two recent occasions, raised matters covering Styal with headquarters and regional officials.

Glen Parva Young Offenders Centre

Mr. Janner asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many young offenders are currently detained in the Glen Parva young offenders centre; what are their ages; and what is the average and maximum period during which such offenders are kept in that centre.

Mr. Mellor: Information about the time spent in a particular establishment on remand or under sentence is not recorded centrally. The population of Glen Parva youth custody centre on 31 December 1985 is given by age in the table. The information available shows the average length of sentence of these 434 young offenders to be about 14 months. The longest sentence being served was 5 years detention under section 53(2) of the Children and Young Persons Act 1933. Remission, parole and time served on remand would reduce the time served under sentence.

Population of Glen Parva yought custody centre on 31 December 1985: by age

Age	Number
15	13
16	50
17	81
18	90
19	89
20	97
21	14
Total	434

Mr. Janner asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what information he has as to the estimated rate of recidivism among inmates released from the Glen Parva young offenders centre.

Mr. Mellor: Reconviction rates for youth custody trainees are not yet available.

Mr. Janner asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many staff are employed at the Glen Parva young offenders centre; what are their categories; and what is the total monthly cost of such staffing.

Mr. Mellor: The total number of staff employed by the Home Office at the Glen Parva youth custody centre and remand centre as at 1 February 1986 was 342, consisting of 253½ prison officer grades, 10 governor grades, 26½ administration grades, two doctors, five psychologists, 14 instructors, two chaplains, six other non-industrial grades and 23 industrial grades. The average monthly salary cost (including overtime, other allowances, and national insurance but excluding accommodation costs) for the current financial year is £420,145.

Mr. Janner asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the total weekly cost and what is the average cost per offender of feeding the inmates at the Glen Parva young offenders centre.

Mr. Mellor: It is estimated that in the financial year 1984-85 the average total weekly cost and the average weekly cost per inmate of feeding the inmates at Glen Parva youth custody centre and remand centre were £6,630 and £10·50 respectively. These figures cover, as well as the cost of the food itself, all other costs, including staff costs, associated with feeding the inmates.

Mr. Janner asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the current routine at the Glen Parva young offenders centre if an inmate wishes to see the doctor; and in what respects that routine has changed since the beginning of 1985.

Mr. Mellor: If an inmate at Glan Parva youth custody centre wishes to see the medical officer he is given an opportunity to do so. Screening procedures were introduced at the centre in October 1984 to enable inmates reporting sick but not seeking to see the medical officer to be assessed by a hospital officer for treatment involving non-prescription medicines.

Mr. Janner asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the estimated cost of keeping an inmate at the Glen Parva young offenders centre in the hospital unit of that centre.

Mr. Mellor: The average weekly cost of keeping a person in Glen Parva youth custody centre and remand centre during the financial year 1984-85 was £234. Information is not available on the cost of keeping a person in particular locations within an establishment.

Interception of Communications Act 1985

Mr. Viggers asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department when the Interception of Communications Act 1985 will be brought into force; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hurd: The provisions of the Interception of Communications Act will come into force on 10 April 1986.

The following have accepted appointment as members of the tribunal under section 7 and schedule 2 to the Act:

The Right hon. The Lord Fraser of Tullybelton—President
Sir Cecil Clothier KCB QC—Vice-President
Mr. David Calcutt QC
Mr. Ivor Guild CBE WS
Mr. Peter Scott QC

The right hon. Lord Justice Lloyd has been appointed commissioner under section 8 of the Act. The right hon. The Lord Bridge of Harwich, who has been judicial monitor of interception arrangements since 1982, will relinquish this appointment when Lord Justice Lloyd takes up his duties.

Police Stations (Lay Visitors)

Mr. Galley asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what advice has been offered to chief constables and police authorities on the establishment of schemes of lay visitors to police stations.

Mr. Hurd: Guidelines for the establishment and organisation of lay visitor schemes have today been issued to chief constables and police authorities in England and Wales. These are based on the procedures devised for the pilot schemes, and have been revised in the light of experience of lay-visiting to date. The guidelines are intended to commend the principle of lay visiting, and to provide a basis for those considering the establishment of schemes, but I have made it clear that they are open to local modification as circumstances demand. I shall welcome an assessment of the guidelines in the light of experience, so that further modifications can be considered where necessary.

Like my predecessors I welcome the principle of lay visitors, first proposed in Lord Scarman's report on the Brixton disorders, as a practical means of developing public confidence in the police treatment of offenders. Their value was especially demonstrated in the aftermath of last autumn's disorders, and I hope that consideration will be given to the establishment of lay visitor panels wherever they might have a part to play in the development of improved police-community relations.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

Teachers' Pay

Mr. Wheeler asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will publish a table to show the salary at 1 April 1985, 1 November 1985, 1 April 1986 and 1 November 1986 for teachers in inner London (a) entering the profession as new graduates, (b) at the top of scale 1, (c) at the mid-point of scale 2, (d) at the bottom of scale 3, (e) at the top of scale 2, (f) at the top of scale 3 and for heads in inner London, (g) of group primary schools and (h) of group 12 secondary schools, if (i) the formal offer of 12 September 1985, (ii) the informal offer of 14 October 1985 or (iii) the agreement of 24 January 1986 were implemented; and, for each of the categories specified, what is the salary at present actually received.

Mr. Chris Patten: The table shows the current salary rates of teachers in inner London, in the categories listed, and what they would have received under the formal offer of 12 September 1985, the informal offer of 14 October 1985 and the provisional agreement of 24 January—so far as this can be determined from the terms of the offers made.

The current salary rated were set on 1 April 1984 and include inner London weighting of £1,038 but exclude other allowances. The rates assume normal incremental progression but do not take account of additional promotions that would be unlocked in the case of the 12 September offer. Nor do they take account of any pay increase from 1 April 1986, which has yet to be negotiated.

Inner London Teachers' Salary rates at 1 April and 1 November 1985, and 1 April and 1 November 1986 if (i) the formal offer of 12 September 1985, (ii) the informal offer of 14 October 1985 or (iii) the agreement of 24 January 1986 were implemented; and the salary at present actually received.

Notes:

1 New entrants assumed to have entered at point 4 of scale 1 on 1 September 1984.

2 Top of scale 1 and top of scale 2 teachers assumed not to be entitled to good honours graduate additions.

3 Mid-point scale 2 taken as point 7.

4 Headteachers assumed to be at their salary maximum throughout.

5 All examples assume assimilation without promotion to the new scales envisaged in the 12 September package.

6 Examples assume that the 14 October informal offer comprised 6.9 per cent on all scales from 1 April 1985 rising to 7·5 per cent on all scales on 31 March 1986.

7 The January agreement consists of a 6·9 per cent. increase on all scales with effect from 1 April 1985 and an additional 1·6 per cent. on all scales from 31 March 1986, calculated on the 31 March 1985 base.

8 The London area allowance has been added in all cases at the rate of £1,038 per annum.
This applies to teachers serving in "the Inner Area" of London which is defined as "the area of the Inner London education authority and of the London boroughs of Barking and Dagenham, Brent, Ealing, Haringey, Merton and Newham".
This rate was set on 1 April 1984.

Assisted Places

Mr. Freud asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether he will list in the Official Report for each local education authority in England for pupils of secondary age (a) the amount spent within that local education authority on assisted places, (b) the numbers of assisted places pupils, (c) the average expenditure per assisted places pupil, (d) the percentage of the local education authority secondary school budget represented by expenditure on the assisted places scheme and (e) the amount spent per manintained pupil, at the latest date for which figures are available.

Mr. Dunn: As regards parts (a) and (e), I refer the hon. Member to the replies given to the hon. Member for Portsmouth, South (Mr. Hancock) on 10 December 1985 — at col. 568 — and the hon. Member for Caernarfon (Mr. Wigley) on 4 February 1986 — at col. 117 — respectively. The rest of the information requested is as follows:

Mr. Freud asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what has been the average percentage fee increase for schools participating in the assisted places scheme for 1985-86.

Mr. Dunn: The figure is 7·4 per cent. over the year to September 1985.

Mr. Freud asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science how many schools participating in the assisted places scheme have been given dispensation from the 60 per cent. requirement for admissions in the academic year 1985-86.

Mr. Dunn: Four.

Mr. Freud asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science how many places on the assisted places scheme remain unfilled in 1985-86; how many of the filled places represent cases where the 60 per cent. requirement has been relaxed in each case for the age groups (a) 11 to 15 years and (b) 16 to 18 years; and what proportion of the total assisted places each figure represents.

Mr. Dunn: Of the 25,193 assisted places available to September 1985, 3,811 were unfilled. Relaxations of the 60 per cent. requirement have resulted in 178 additional filled places, representing 0·7 per cent. of the total places available. A breakdown by age group is not possible.

Mr. Freud asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether he will make a statement on the work currently being done in his Department in respect of education vouchers, the expansion of the assisted places scheme and the reintroduction of direct grant schools or status; and what proportion of the education budget is involved in such proposals.

Sir Keith Joseph: Such questions arise from time to time as part of the Department's work in considering various possibilities for improving school education. No meaningful apportionment of administrative costs can be made

Overseas Students

Mr. Sheerman asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science how many students from (a) overseas and (b) the United States of America are currently studying in British universities and polytechnics (i) in total and (ii) by institutions; and what were the comparable figures for 1979, expressed in figures and as a percentage of all students.

Mr. Walden: I shall reply to the hon. Member as soon as possible.

Mr. Sheerman asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what percentage of British university undergraduate and postgraduate places are filled by students from (a) the United States of America and (b) overseas.

Mr. Walden: In December 1984 the percentages of undergraduates and postgraduates from the United States of America and from all overseas countries studying at British universities were:

	Percentage of students from the USA	all overseas countries
Postgraduates	2	36
Undergraduates	1	7

Sir Russell Johnston asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science how many students from the People's Republic of China are presently studying in the United Kingdom; under what auspices they are here; and how many there are in each basic field of study.

Mr. Walden: In 1984-85, the latest year for which figures are available, the numbers of students from the People's Republic of China studying at universities or public sector institutions in Great Britain were:

	Numbers
Postgraduate students	341
University undergraduate level and first degree students in public sector institutions	43
Other public sector higher education students	6
Non-advanced further education students	20
Total	410

Figures for students in private institutions, for Northern Ireland, and for subject of study are not readily available.

About 95 per cent. of these students received support from schemes of assistance funded by the United Kingdom Government as follows:

	Numbers
Technical Co-operation Training Programme	194
FCO Scholarships and Awards Scheme	34
Overseas Research Students Awards Scheme	133

	Numbers
British Council Fellowships	28
Total	389

Further information on student's sponsorship or source of support is not available.

Secondary Reorganisation

Mr. Freud asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether he will list in the Official Report all the proposals currently before him from local education authorities for secondary school reorganisation, stating the schools involved and the local education authority and the date at which his Department received the proposals.

Mr. Dunn: The table shows all proposals under sections 12 to 15 of the Education Act 1980 affecting the secondary schools which fell to be decided by my right hon. Friend at the end of January. Proposals are received by my right hon. Friend immediately following their publication, after which a period of two months follows in which objections to the proposals may be made.

Mr. Freud asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what is the average length of time taken by his Department to reach a decision on proposals for secondary school reorganisations submitted by local education authorities over the last three years.

Mr. Dunn: I shall reply to the hon. Member as soon as possible.

Governors

Mr. Freud asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science (1) what information he has as to the number of young people aged under 18 years who currently have full governor status on the governing body of educational institutions;

(2) whether he will list in the Official Report those local education authorities where people under the age of 18 years are allowed to be full members of governing bodies of educational institutions, stating in each case the age at which membership is permitted.

Mr. Dunn: This information is not collected by the Department.

Direct Grant Schools

Mr. Greenway asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he has any plans to reintroduce direct grant schools; and if he will make a statement.

Sir Keith Joseph: The Government are considering whether there is scope for a new kind of experimental direct grant school, but is still some way from decisions on this.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

EC (United States Manufacturing Clause)

Mr. Dorrell asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what retaliatory measures he will recommend to his European Economic Community counterparts if the United States manufacturing clause is not allowed to lapse on 1 July.

Mr. Alan Clark: The manufacturing clause, as S601 of the United States Copyright Act 1970 is widely known, in effect prevents the importation into the United States of copyrighted non-dramatic material written in English by United States nationals but printed outside the United States and Canada. In 1984 a GATT panel found that this was a breach of United States international obligations. This finding was unanimously endorsed by GATT members. There is no doubt that the clause seriously hinders the ability of the printing industry in the United Kingdom and in other countries to export to the United States. Preliminary estimates of the trade loss caused to the European Community range between $300 million and $500 million.

Although the clause is due to expire at the end of June, there are proposals before Congress which would re-enact it. The Community has made it clear to the United States that it will be forced to seek GATT authority to take retaliatory action against imports from the United States if a renewal Bill is enacted. The Community is considering this week a formal request to GATT for authority to retaliate in the event of renewal and is examining the scope and detail of possible retaliation measures. Products that will be under consideration include products from the United States paper and tobacco manufacturing industries and certain printed matter.

United States Export Regulations

Mr. Ashdown asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what steps he has taken to seek to relieve ICL plc of the United States re-export licence requirement imposed on that company's exports of computers from the United Kingdom by the United States Government in 1982.

Mr. Pattie: ICL raised various points arising from the extra-territorial nature of United States export controls with officials of this Department in 1982. United Kingdom officials took these up with the United States authorities as appropriate.

Copyright

Mr. Squire asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will detail the organisations and individuals who contributed an overall view against the Government's Green Paper on copyright.

Mr. Pattie: The Green Paper "The Recording and Rental of Audio and Video Copyright Material" (Cmnd. 9445), published in February 1985, proposed the introduction of a levy on blank recording tape. As more than 1,000 responses were received, the details requested could be provided only at disproportionate cost. However, those opposed to a levy included organisations representing consumers, blind people and tape manufacturers, along with a majority of individual respondents.

Vehicles (Consumer Protection)

Mr. Porter asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will introduce legislation to offer statutory protection, similar to that afforded by the Hire Purchase Act 1964, to members of the public who purchase, in good faith, vehicles which are subject to leasing arrangements; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Howard: I have no plans to introduce legislation on these lines. However, the study by Professor Diamond of the law of security over movable property, which I announced in December, will look at all types of security interests in movable property, including those arising from leasing.

Hall Russell Shipbuilders

Mr. Robert Hughes asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will publish in the Official Report the number of bids lodged on Friday 21 February for Hall Russell Shipbuilders, Aberdeen; what were the names of the bidders; and if he will make a statement on the successful bidder.

Mr. Peter Morrison: I shall reply to the hon. Member as soon as possible.

Telephone Network (Pornography)

Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what representations he has received about the use of the public telephone network for transmission of pornographic material; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Pattie: I have received one representation from an hon. Member on behalf of one of his constituents. Section 43 of the Telecommunications Act 1984 prohibits the sending, by means of a public telecommunications system, of any message or matter that is grossly offensive or of an indecent, obscene or menacing character.

Nuclear Waste

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether nuclear waste dumps established by NIREX would be eligible for regional aid if located in the appropriate areas.

Mr. Peter Morrison [pursuant to his reply, 25 February 1986, c. 495]: The Regional Development Grant (Qualifying Activities) Order 1984 (S.I. 1846) specifically excludes disposal of nuclear waste. Such projects are also very unlikely to qualify for regional selective assistance.

SCOTLAND

Lochaber

14. Sir Russell Johnston asked the Secretary of State for Scotland when he next intends to visit Lochaber.

Mr. Rifkind: I have no plans in the immediate future to visit Lochaber.

Rating (Single Householders)

15. Sir Hector Monro asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he has made an assessment of the number of single householders who will benefit by his new rating proposals; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Rifkind: While the proportion will vary from area to area, and I do not have detailed figures, I would expect that over 80 per cent. of all single householders in Scotland would benefit and among them over 85 per cent. of single pensioners.

Teachers' Dispute

16. Mr. McKelvey asked the Secretary of State for Scotland when he next plans to meet officials of the Educational Institute of Scotland to discuss the current teachers' dispute; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Allan Stewart: I refer to the answer given earlier today by my right hon. and learned Friend to the hon. Member for Edinburgh, East (Mr. Strang). My right hon. and learned Friend and I are always willing to meet with any of the teachers' unions, although there are no plans to do so at present.

31. Mr. Tom Clarke asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on the current situation on the teachers' dispute.

34. Mr. Canavan asked the Secretary of State for Scotland whether he will make a statement about the teachers' dispute.

38. Mr. James Hamilton asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement about the latest position of the teachers' dispute.

Mr. Allan Stewart: I refer to the answer given earlier today by my right hon. and learned Friend to the hon. Member for Edinburgh, East (Mr. Strang).

Enterprise Zones

17. Mr. Ernie Ross asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on the performance and administration of the enterprise zones in Scotland.

Mr. Allan Stewart: The Industry Department for Scotland monitors closely the performance of Scotland's three enterprise zones and I am pleased with the progress made there. Clydebank is one of the United Kingdom's most successful zones and one of the largest in employment terms, with 3,000 jobs created since designation. The Invergordon and Tayside zones have been in operation for a shorter period than Clydebank, but good progress has already been made. The administration of individual enterprise zone schemes is the responsibility of the respective zone authorities.

Economic Activity

19. Mr. Hirst asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on the current level of economic activity in Scotland.

Mr. Allan Stewart: Scotland is continuing to share in the growth of the United Kingdom economy. The latest output statistics show that industrial production and construction was 4·5 per cent. higher in the first half of 1985 than a year earlier, and manufacturing output alone was 6 per cent. higher. Although there were signs of slower manufacturing growth in the second half of last year, the latest CBI and Scottish business surveys reported that manufacturers were expecting rising orders and output in the period ahead.

Whisky Industry

20. Mr. Pollock asked the Secretary of State for Scotland whether he plans to meet members of the Scotch Whisky Association to discuss the current state of the industry in Scotland as it affects his responsibilities regarding employment and economic matters in Scotland.

Mr. Rifkind: I have made arrangements to have a discussion with the association's director general in the very near future.

Scottish Development Agency

21. Mr. David Marshall asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will allocate additional resources to the Scottish Development Agency; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Allan Stewart: The agency's gross provision across its range of functions for 1986-87 is expected to be in the region of £136 million which is more than £8 million in excess of its equivalent provision for 1985-86 and £18 million higher than the agency spent in 1984-85. This is a sizeable budget and one which reflects the Government's commitment to the agency's tasks of assisting economic development and evironmental improvement in Scotland.

Health Boards (Houses)

22. Mr. Hugh Brown asked the Secretary of State for Scotland how many houses were owned by health boards in 1980; how many have been sold to the nearest convenient date; what have been the average discounts; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John MacKay: Approximately 2,750; 174 surplus to requirements had been sold by 14 February 1986. The average discount in sales to sitting tenants has been approximately 40 per cent. It remains the Government's policy that boards should offer for sale all staff houses which are not essential to the provision of health care.

Afforestation

23. Mr. Kenneth Carlisle asked the Secretary of State for Scotland how many representations he has received concerning the widespread afforestation in Caithness.

Mr. John MacKay: Representations have been received from the Royal Society for the Protection of Birds and the hon. Member for Caithness and Sutherland (Mr. Maclennan). In addition, nine members of the public have made representations either directly or through their Member of Parliament.

32. Mr. Ron Davies asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what consultations he has had, or plans to have, with the Countryside Commission for Scotland, regarding its recent draft report on forestry policy.

Mr. John MacKay: It would not be appropriate for my right hon. and learned Friend to consult the Countryside Commission for Scotland at this stage on its report, since this is still in draft form and has not been formally drawn to his attention by it.

35. Mr. Maclennan asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if it is his intention to introduce planning controls over forestry.

Mr. John MacKay: My right hon. and learned Friend is not considering the introduction of planning controls over forestry.

37. Mr. John Mark Taylor asked the Secretary of State for Scotland when he next intends to meet the Forestry Commission to discuss broadleaf woodland policy.

Mr. John MacKay: My right hon. and learned Friend has no plans at present to meet the Forestry Commission to discuss this subject. However, as was made clear in the Government's statement of 24 July 1985 on broadleaves policy, we have asked the Forestry Commission to report regularly on the operation and effectiveness of the new measures and we shall be reviewing them after some three years.

"Paying for Local Government"

24. Mr. Henderson asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what assessment he has made of the response by people in Scotland to the publication of the Green Paper, "Paying for Local Government".

Mr. Ancram: I have been extremely gratified by the welcome accorded in Scotland to the proposals for reform contained in the Green Paper "Paying for Local Government". In the last four weeks, they have been the subject of much public debate both in the columns of the press and on the broadcasting media. I have already received the views of a number of people, and I hope that others—including the Scottish local authorities—will take the opportunity to make constructive comments before the consultation period ends on 31 July.

Scottish Development Agency

25. Mr. Ewing asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement about the inquiry he has set up into the performance of the Scottish Development Agency.

Mr. Allan Stewart: The review of the Scottish Development Agency which is now under way is part of the national review programme covering all non-departmental public bodies. The SDA's programmes play a key role in our policies for developing the Scottish economy and improving the environment and I have every confidence that the review will help to ensure that we continue to get the best possible value for money from this expenditure.

Rural Aid Fund

26. Dame Judith Hart asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what response he has now made to the representations of the Convention of Scottish Local Authorities concerning the need for a rural aid fund.

Mr. Rifkind: I refer the right hon. Lady to my reply to her on 27 January, at column 371.

Student Grant

27. Mr. Lambie asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what representations he has received following his recent announcement of a 2 per cent. increase in grants to students in higher education establishments in Scotland.

Mr. Rifkind: Since 16 December 1985 I have received representations about the student grant settlement for 1986-87 in the form of letters or petitions on behalf of about 1,200 students.

Labour Statistics

28. Mr. Millan asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on the latest figures for Scottish unemployment.

Mr. Rifkind: On 9 January 1986 the number of unemployed claimants in Scotland was 371,117. While this was an increase of 17,868 over the preceding month, the seasonally adjusted figure fell by 500. The problem of continued high unemployment is one of my major concerns. A necessary prerequisite to its resolution is continued growth in the economy. The Government's economic policy is designed to achieve this and is succeeding.

Dr. Godman asked the Secretary of State for Scotland how many jobs are estimated by his Department to be available in Greenock and Port Glasgow.

Mr. Allan Stewart: In January of this year there were 223 notified unfilled vacancies in Greenock.

Drunken Driving

29. Mr. Willie W. Hamilton asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on the final assessment of the statistics for drunken driving offences over the Christmas and new year period.

Mr. Ancram: Of 1,428 breath tests taken during the Christmas and new year period, 243 were positive. This compares with 230 positive from 415 tests in 1984-85.

Drunken driving does not occur only during the festive season, and the police have made it clear that they will enforce the law equally rigorously throughout the year.

Electronics and Computer Industry

30. Mr. Norman Hogg asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement about redundancies in the electronics and computer industries in Scotland.

Mr. Allan Stewart: The pace of technological change in the electronics industry inevitably means that some companies will be forced to shed labour as products and processes become outdated while others will increase their employment as new products are developed. This, coupled with the effects of acute world recession in the markets for certain electronics products, notably semiconductors and integrated circuits, has resulted in a higher level of job losses in 1985 than in the past. There are signs, however, that markets are beginning to recover and the medium to longer term prospect is for further growth in the electronics industry in Scotland.

Highlands and Islands (Employment)

33. Mr. Kennedy asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on the employment opportunities within the highlands and islands.

Mr. Allan Stewart: Prospects inevitably vary from one area to another but for most parts of the Highlands and Islands the outlook is for greater employment stability than in the recent past.

Coats Patons Ltd.

36. Mr. Allan Adams asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what assurances about future employment were sought by and given to his Department's officials by Coats Patons Limited in connection with Government assistance for its recent merger with Viyella.

Mr. Allan Stewart: No Government financial assistance has been given to Coats Patons plc in connection with its proposed merger with Vantona Viyella plc. Discussions between departmental officials and companies in merger cases are treated as commercially confidential.

National Union of Mineworkers

39. Mr. Eadie asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will publish in the Official Report the reply he sent to the Scottish area of the National Union of Mineworkers on its request for a meeting with him.

Mr. Allan Stewart: I have arranged for a copy of the reply dated 7 February to be placed in the Library.

Crofters (Fencing Grants)

40. Mr. Donald Stewart asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will restore fencing only grants for crofters.

Mr. Rifkind: Provided there is agricultural justification for the work, grant assistance for fencing, unaccompanied by other works, is available throughout the crofting areas under the crofting counties agricultural grants scheme at the rate of 55 per cent. of the eligible cost.

Cancer Research (Damon Biotech)

Mr. Chope asked the Secretary of State for Scotland how much public money has been paid or promised by the Scottish Office to Damon Biotech for cancer research in the past year; and what proportion of total United Kingdom funding for cancer research this represents.

Mr. John MacKay: No public funds have been offered to Damon Biotech specifically for cancer research. The Government have made an offer of funds to Damon Biotech for research and development into certain process technologies which may have a number of health care applications including the diagnosis and treatment of cancer.

Soil Research Stations

Mr. McQuarrie asked the Secretary of State for Scotland when he will complete the review of the soil research stations in Scotland.

Mr. John MacKay: I refer my hon. Friend to my answer on 13 February to his written question about the proposed transfer of the Macauley Institute for Soil Research from Aberdeen.

White Fronted Geese

Sir Hector Monro asked the Secretary of State for Scotland how many white fronted geese have wintered on Islay in each of the last three years.

Mr. Rifkind: The Nature Conservancy Council carries out a census of white fronted geese twice yearly in the autumn and spring. Its figures for Islay are as follows:

		Number
Autumn	1982	3,501
Spring	1983	3,441
Autumn	1983	4,592
Spring	1984	4,198
Autumn	1984	5,256
Spring	1985	4,715
Autumn	1985	6,200

Capital Expenditure

Mr. Steel asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what plans he has to review the present annuality system of capital expenditure; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Rifkind: I have no plans for any major changes to the system for controlling local authority capital expenditure. The present arrangements modify strict annuality, permitting authorities to enter into commitments for future years and allowing them a considerable measure of end-year flexibility. For non-housing expenditure I issue final allocations for the immediately following year together with provisional allocations for the two years thereafter. In addition, authorities may carry forward up to ten per cent. of any underspend, and anticipate up to ten per cent. from the following year as well as being allowed to transfer up to ten per cent. between programmes. In the case of housing expenditure when issuing final allocations for a particular year, I indicate that authorities may enter into commitments in year 2 provided they do not exceed a proportion, at present seventy per cent., of their allocation for year.

Furthermore, from 1 April authorities will be free to carry forward up to three and a half per cent. of any housing underspend into the following year and this may be increased to ten per cent. at my discretion. They may also vire between the HRA and non-HRA block.

Food Premises (Registration)

Mr. Steel asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will act to introduce mandatory registration of all food premises with the environmental health authorities; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Rifkind: I am considering this question along with the allied question of prior approval of food businesses in the context of the responses to the consultation paper on the review of food legislation.

Milk

Mr. Steel asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will seek powers to require that milk supplied to persons living and working on farms is pasteurised.

Mr. Rifkind: No. Such a requirement would be impossible to enforce. The only effective way of curtailing on-farm consumption of untreated milk is by convincing the dairy farmer and his workers of the increased health risks associated with consumption of untreated milk.

Housing

Mr. Steel asked the Secretary of State for Scotland when he will raise the tolerable standard for Scottish housing in line with the recommendations in his Department's Green Paper.

Mr. Rifkind: The Green Paper "Home Improvements in Scotland — A New Approach" — Cmnd. 9677 — published in December 1985, outlines our proposals for changes to the present improvement grant scheme and views have been invited from interested organisations. The consultation period expires on 7 March 1986.

Any proposed change to the Scottish tolerable standard would require to be considered in the light of the comments received and would require legislation.

Dr. Godman asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what grants have been allocated by his Department to the Inverclyde district council in each of the past five years for housing improvement projects; and what spending constraints have been imposed on Inverclyde district council during the past five years.

Mr. Ancram: I shall reply to the hon. Member as soon as possible.

Mr. Steel asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if his Department will fund a survey of the condition of housing in Scotland similar to those funded for England in 1981 and 1985 by the Department of the Environment; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Rifkind: I am prepared to consider a national house condition survey, but only if I can be persuaded that the results would add significantly to the information that is already available to me and thereby justify the very considerable cost and effort involved. I have yet to be convinced of the validity of that argument.

A national survey with a sample size and structure parallel to that of the 1981 English survey would not yield the level and detail of information required in Scotland. Better use can be made of the available funds by undertaking work on the stock and by targeting surveys to specific areas of the stock where problems have been identified.

I do not believe that a Scottish inquiry, parallel to that carried out in 1985 by the Department of the Environment, is necessary. I already have detailed assessments of the repair and modernisation needs of the local authority stock submitted by local authorities in the form of housing plans and check lists. This year, local authorities have been given consent to spend on their own stock over £50 million more than in the previous year.

Plant Breeding

Mr. John asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will state the cost of plant breeding rights and national list testing in Scotland; and if he will distinguish therein between administrative and operational cost.

Mr. John MacKay: The estimated expenditure to be incurred in Scotland in the financial year 1985-86 is approximately £190,000 for plant breeders' rights testing including administrative expenditure and VAT charges amounting together to some £40,000. For national list testing the figure is approximately £570,000, including administrative expenditure of £10,000.

Expenditure incurred in testing for plant breeders' rights is recovered from the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food.

ASH (Grant-in-Aid)

Dr. Godman asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if the Scottish Office has given grant-in-aid to Action on Smoking and Health; and if any donations have been given in the past four years.

Mr. John MacKay: The Scottish Committee of Action on Smoking and Health has received an annual grant-in-aid from the Scottish Home and Health Department for the past 10 years. Over the past five years the amount of the annual grant from the Department has been as follows:

Financial year	£
1980-81	11,000
1981-82	15,400
1982-83	20,500
1983-84	22,000
1984-85	22,990

Examinations (Markers)

Mr. Campbell asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will state, with reference to markers recruited for Scottish Certificate of Education examinations, in what exceptional circumstances a marker will be excused attendance at a meeting on a Saturday to discuss policy.

Mr. Allan Stewart: The Scottish Examination Board has informed me that it will consider waiving the normal requirement of compulsory attendance at markers' meetings arranged for a Saturday where the marker has a previous specific and unbreakable commitment on the date fixed for the meeting. In any event, every marker receives written instructions and, where a marker is unable to attend a meeting, these are supplemented as required.

Mr. Campbell asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will state the cost in 1985 for advertising for and recruiting markers for the Scottish Certificate of Education examinations (a) in Scotland, (b) in other areas of the United Kingdom and (c) elsewhere.

Mr. Allan Stewart: I have asked the Scottish Examination Board to write to the Member with this information as soon as possible.

Forth Road Bridge

Mr. Henderson asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will meet the chairman of the Forth road bridge joint board to discuss the state of the carriageways of the bridge on Friday 21 February and to seek assurances that gritting and other anti-skid measures will be taken during inclement weather; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ancram: I regret, as I am sure does the Forth Road Bridge Joint Board, the inconvenience caused to bridge users on Friday 21 February. I understand that it was due to wholly unsual circumstances which obstructed the board's normally efficient clearing and gritting arrangements. However, the management of the bridge is entirely a matter for the Forth Road Bridge Joint Board which will, I am sure, take note of the hon. Gentleman's views.

Education (Standard and Higher Grades)

Mr. Corrie asked the Secretary of State for Scotland whether he has yet received representations from the Scottish Examination Board and the Convention of Scottish Local Authorities on the proposals he announced on Tuesday 21 January concerning the implementation of standard grade and the revision of higher grade; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Rifkind: The Convention of Scottish Local Authorities and the Scottish Examination Board have now accepted the proposals I announced on Tuesday 21 January 1986—Vol. 90, Col. 101—in reply to my hon. Friend and have agreed that standard grade and the consequential revision of higher grade should be implemented on that basis. I have now therefore asked the Scottish Examination Board to proceed accordingly.

THE ARTS

Capital Transfer Tax

Mr. Faulds asked the Minister for the Arts whether he will list the objects and property accepted in satisfaction of capital transfer tax since the answer of 2 April 1985, Official Report, columns 577-8; and if, in listing them, he will specify (a) the amount of tax satified in each case, (b) whether any offer of objects carried conditions as to destination, (c) the dates in each case of the recommendations received by him from the Museums and Galleries Commission for acceptance of objects and (d) the total of tax thus satisfied; and whether a press notice will be issued from the Office of Arts and Libraries covering the information given in his reply.

Mr. Luce: Since the answer of 2 April 1985, the Government have accepted the following items in lieu of tax:

Work of art/land	Condition as to allocation	Date recommended by MGC
Photographs associated with the late Marquess Curzon of Kedleston	India Office and Records (British Library)	30.3.84

Work of art/land	Condition as to allocation	Date recommended by MGC
Chattels at Mount Edgcumbe	In situ	9.5.85
Collar chain of a KCMG	—	30.8.85
Land at Pond Wood	—	N/A
Chattels at Hagley Hall	In situ	20.12.85
Land at Coldharbour Common	—	N/A

The total amount of tax satisfied is £505,650. The amount of tax satisfied in individual cases is confidential.

In addition, I have corresponded with the chairman of the Museums and Galleries Commission about a number of other cases, in the majority of which ownership has not yet been transferred formally to the Government. It is therefore not appropriate to give details of these at present. However, I hope to be in a position to make a further announcement shortly, and to issue a press notice including the above information.

Export of Works of Art

Mr. Faulds asked the Minister for the Arts whether he has received from the Reviewing Committee on the Export of Works of Art its report for the year ended 30 June 1985; and whether he anticipates its publication within the time span indicated in the answer of 23 July 1985, Official Report, column 449.

Mr. Luce: No. As my hon. Friend the Member for Bristol, West (Mr. Waldegrave) explained to the hon. Member on 23 July 1985, the aim is to publish the reports of the reviewing Committee on the Export of Works of Art as soon a possible after the end of the period covered. Exceptionally heavy caseloads in two consecutive years resulted in delay in the publication of the 1983-84 report. Publication of the 1984-85 report has similarly been delayed by the heavy caseloads this year. It is hoped that the report will be published no later than June 1986.

CIVIL SERVICE

Youth Training Scheme

Mr. Hancock asked the Minister for the Civil Service if he will publish in the Official Report the number of YTS places by Government Department made available within those Departments on the latest convenient date for which figures are available.

Mr. Luce: On 1 November 1985 the number of approved places on the youth training scheme in Government Departments was as follows:

	Places
Ministry of Defence	875
Departments of the Environment and Transport	30
Home Office	5
Inland Revenue	12
Ordnance Survey	25
Property Services Agency	30
Scottish Office	30
Department of Trade and Industry	39

Places were also available in some non-departmental public bodies.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Inflation

Mr. Robert B. Jones asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether he will publish a table setting out the information he has on the comparative annualised rates of inflation for (a) France, (b) the United States of America, (c) Japan, (d) West Germany and (e) the United Kingdom in (i) October 1974, (ii) May 1979, (c) June 1983 and (d) the most recent available date.

Mr. Ian Stewart: The 12-month increases in consumer price indices are given in the following table.

per cent.

	October 1974	May 1979	June 1983	December 1985
France	14·9	9·7	8·9	4·7
USA	12·2	10·8	2·6	3·8
Japan	26·2	3·1	2·0	1·8
West Germany	7·1	3·7	2·4	1·8
United Kingdom	17·1	10·3	3·7	5·7

Customs and Excise (Heathrow)

Mr. Corbett asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the establishment (a) requested by the staff side and (b) given for Customs and Excise officers by grade at London Heathrow Terminal 4.

Mr. Brooke: The local trade union side requested a total complement of 96, comprising eight higher executive officers, 64 executive officers and 24 clerical officers. The official side considers a total complement of 87, comprising seven higher executive officers, 62 executive officers and 18 clerical officers, appropriate to meet the demands of the work.

Budget Documents

Mr. Tim Smith asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many copies of the Budget documents were printed in 1985; how many were sent to the Vote Office; how many were made available to commercial organisations and at what charge for each; what happened to the remainder; what was the cost to the Exchequer of producing the Budget documents; and what was the total amount recovered from commercial organisations.

Mr. Lawson: I shall let my hon. Friend have a reply as soon as possible.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Departmental Purchasing Policy

Mr. Thurnham asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what his Department's policy is on the purchases of goods and services; how he is monitoring its effectiveness; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: The Foreign and Commonwealth Office seeks value for money in its purchases of goods and services in accordance with Treasury guidelines and is currently implementing recommendations in the 1984 Cabinet Office report on Government purchasing. An official in the management review staff is engaged full-time in co-ordinating and monitoring this work and reports to Ministers.

Caraballeda Declaration

Mr. Dubs asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the recently signed Caraballeda declaration on peace and security in central America.

Mr. Eggar: As my right hon. and learned Friend told the hon. Member for Leeds, West (Mr. Meadowcroft) on 5 February, at column 267, we and our Community partners have publicly welcomed the impetus given to the Contadora negotiations by the Caraballeda declaration and its endorsement by the central American Foreign Ministers in Guatemala city on 14 January.

Occupied Countries

Mr. Adley asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list those countries, or parts of countries, which Her Majesty's Government perceive as de facto occupied.

Mr. Eggar: The international disputes and conflicts which exist around the world vary widely in their nature and are often complicated; it is not therefore practicable to prepare a list of countries, or parts of countries, by reference to a criterion of de facto occupation.

Western European Union

Mr. Murphy asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will arrange for a Government report on each plenary part session of the Assembly of the Western European Union to be laid before Parliament.

Mr. Eggar: I do not think it would be appropriate for us to report to the House on the meetings of the Assembly of the Western European Union, the British members of which are drawn from this House and from another place. Full records of the proceedings of the Western European Union Assembly are published by the Assembly itself and a copy is placed in the Library of the House.

Mr. Murphy asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will arrange for a Government statement on the work of the Western European Union to be presented to Parliament annually.

Mr. Eggar: The annual reports of the Council of the Western European Union to the Assembly (on the Council activities for the period 1 January to 31 December of each year) are published. Copies are placed in the Library of the House. However, I would be happy to adopt the suggestion of my hon. Friend and would propose to make such a statement after the autumn Ministerial meeting of the Western European Union.

Council of Europe

Mr. Murphy asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs (1) if he will arrange for a Government report on each plenary part session of the Parliamentary Assembly of the Council of Europe to be laid before Parliament;

(2) if he will arrange for a Government statement on the work of the Council of Europe to be presented to Parliament annually.

Mr. Eggar: The reports of the debates in the Council of Europe Parliamentary Assembly, prepared by the Council Secretariat, and the reports to the Parliamentary Assembly by the Chairman of the Committee of Ministers give a full account of the work of the Council of Europe and are available in the Library of the House. There is no intention to make additional reports or statements.

TRANSPORT

Spare Wheels

Mr. Conlan asked the Secretary of State for Transport what was the maximum speed, under normal conditions, at which the Transport Road and Research Laboratory tests on non-standard motor car spare wheels were found to be satisfactory.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Tests were conducted under extreme driving conditions at varying speeds to ascertain the car's handling performance. The maximum speed in normal driving conditions was not checked but the handling tests indicated that 50 mph would be safe.

Mr. Conlan asked the Secretary of State for Transport what information has been sent to him by the Automobile Association on the use of non-standard motor car spare wheels, and on the desirability of a handling test to ensure adequate safety.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: I have placed in the Library a copy of the AA's report on this subject dated April 1985. It contains arguments in favour of a handling test. It was not possible to get international agreement to such a test in the discussions leading up to the adoption of ECE regulation 64.

Mr. Conlan asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will now commission an assessment by his Department into the benefits to motorists of the supply of non-standard motor car spare wheels by vehicle manufacturers.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: No. The Department is not responsible for advising consumers on possible costs and benefits associated with different models of car or car equipment.

DVLC

Mr. Porter asked the Secretary of State for Transport if, in the light of the expected increase in computer capacity at the Driver and Vehicle Licensing Centre, he will arrange for the issue of registration documents which include both name and address of the owner as well as the keeper of the vehicle; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Spicer: Computer capacity is not now a serious constraint for the inclusion of information about the owner as well as the keeper of a vehicle on the registration document. It would, however, be very difficult and expensive for my Department clearly to identify the legal owners of all vehicles. In addition such a system would make the process of licensing and registering a vehicle more complicated and time consuming for the ordinary motorist. Advice is shortly to be issued to motorists by the Driver and Vehicle Licensing Centre listing points to check in addition to the registration document when buying a used car.

Motorways (Lighting)

Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the Secretary of State for Transport whether there are any plans to light those stretches of motorway which pass over rivers or streams on the M25 which are currently unlit.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: I have nothing more to add to my replies to my hon. Friend's questions on Tuesday 25 February, at column 502.

Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the Secretary of State for Transport how many miles of the M42 are lit; how many miles are unlit; and how many miles are planned to be lit.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Currently 6 miles are lit, 32 miles are unlit and there are plans to light a further 2 miles.

Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will estimate the cost of lighting (a) the remaining stages of all Britain's motorways, (b) the M25 and (c) the M1; and if he will publish the estimated maintenance charges and cost for each.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: It would cost approximately £110 million, £9 million and £11 million to light the remaining unlit stages of motorways in England, the M25 and the M1 respectively. The related maintenance costs would be approximately £11 million, £0·9 million and £1·1 million respectively.

Costs are at 1985-86 prices.

M25 (Opening Dates)

Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the Secretary of State for Transport what are the expected dates of completion by the contractors and for opening of the remaining sections of the M25 either side of the M1 interchange.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The contract completion dates for the four remaining contracts are:

Michlefield Green-A41-Bedmond Road: 5 October 1986
Bedmond Road-M1/A405 Interchange: 21 September 1986
A405-A6 (The Bell): 2 November 1986
A6 (The Bell)-A1 (South Mimms): 26 October 1986

There is a degree of interdependence between the contracts. They will be opened as soon as practicable after completion.

Heathrow Airport (Passenger Statistics)

Mr. Corbett asked the Secretary of State for Transport what is the expected passenger throughput at London Heathrow terminal 4 each 24 hours; and what estimates he has made of future growth in passengers.

Mr. Michael Spicer: The passenger throughput at terminal 4 Heathrow in each 24-hour period will vary considerably throughout the year. The terminal has been designed to be able to handle 2,000 passengers per hour in each direction. On the pattern of traffic expected to use the terminal its annual capacity is about 8 million passengers. Initially, following the transfer to the terminal of British Airways' long-haul, Paris and Amsterdam services, and KLM's and Air Malta's services, BAA expects the annual passenger throughput to be about 6 million. The estimates of future growth in the number of passengers in the south-east were set out in the White Paper on airports policy (Cmnd. 9542) published in June 1985.

Tyres

Mr. Iain Mills asked the Secretary of State for Transport (1) what procedure he plans for dealing with the responses received to his Department's consultative paper about the revised tread depth regulations; and if he will make a statement;

(2) if he will make a statement on his policy towards the revised tyre tread depth regulations in the light of the evidence on the subject given by the Association of Chief Police Officers to the Transport Committee, a copy of which has been sent to him, and if will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Yesterday I had a meeting with the organisations most involved in this subject. I shall make a statement as soon as I can.

M12 (Woodford-Brentwood)

Mr. McCrindle asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will indicate a time scale for the building of the section of the M12 from Woodford to Brentwood.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: As announced in "National Roads England 1985", the proposal for the M12 has been withdrawn from the national roads programme.

I shall write to my hon. Friend.

Channel Tunnel

Mr. Alex Carlile asked the Secretary of State for Transport how many letters his Department received between 1 January 1985 and 21 January 1986 from members of the public writing to object against the proposed construction of a Channel fixed link.

Mr. David Mitchell: 1,941 for the whole of the United Kingdom.

Flight DA 7045 (Radioactive Cargo)

Mr. Robert Hughes asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will discuss with the Civil Aviation Authority the route of flight DA 7045 from Liverpool to Dounreay on Thursday 20 February carrying radioactive fuel; whether the flight path was logged with and under the control of air traffic controllers at Dyce airport; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ridley: Flight routes are a matter for the aircraft operator and the National Air Traffic Services. NATS has informed me that flight DA 7045 flew from Liverpool to Dounreay in accordance with air traffic control requirements. Because the flight path passed outside the airspace controlled by air traffic controllers at Dyce airport, there was no requirement for the flight to be logged with it or under its control.

M25 (Resurfacing)

Mr. George Gardiner asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will estimate the approximate cost of replacing the present brushed concrete surface of the Reigate-Leatherhead section of the M25 with tarmacadam.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The approximate cost which allows for overlaying with 100 mm of bituminous material, ancillary works and traffic management would be some £3 million at present-day prices. This does not include any assessment of traffic delay costs over the period of the works which would be several months.

There will be no significant noise difference from an asphalt surface with similar skid resistance characteristics.

Aircraft Noise

Mr. Jessel asked the Secretary of State for Transport when he expects to commence consultations on the United Kingdom aircraft noise index study: main report (DR Report 8402); and what form he proposes these consultations should take.

Mr. Michael Spicer: I have today inititated this consultation process.

Following criticism of the noise and number index, which has been used since 1963 as an index of aircraft noise disturbance, a full study was commissioned by the Department of Trade, which then had responsibility for civil aviation matters. The main aim of the study was either to substantiate the NNI or if necessary devise some better index.

The main conclusion reached by the authors of the study report, the directorate of research of the Civil Aviation Authority, is that there appears to be a case for replacing the NNI system of measurement by one based on the 24-hour Leq (equivalent continuous sound level) scale.

As indicated in the White Paper on "Airports Policy" (Cmnd. 9542), the Government are concerned that aircraft noise disturbance is monitored as accurately as possible, and by methods that fairly represent the level of annoyance experienced, and so command public confidence. I would, therefore, like those whom I am formally consulting, and others who may wish to play a part, to let me have their comments by the end of August. These comments will be carefully examined and will be taken into account in the development of future policy. A synopsis of the comments will be made generally available.

I have placed a copy of the study report in the Library of the House.

SOCIAL SERVICES

Drugs (Review)

Mr. Ashley asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) when the Committee on Safety of Medicines will have completed its special review of non-steroidal anti-inflammatory drugs; and if he will place a copy of the completed report when it is available in the Library;

(2) what is the nature of the close surveillance of the non-steroidal anti-inflammatory drugs currently being carried out by the Committee on Safety of Medicines; who is undertaking the work; how it is being done; to what extent the manufacturing companies are involved; and what is the cost of the surveillance.

Mr. Hayhoe: I understand that the committee, assisted by its medical and administrative secretariat, is carrying out a special scrutiny of the adverse reactions and product usage data and of professional literature reports on these products. The secretariat is in touch with manufacturing companies about usage data that might be available. It is not known at present when the review will be completed or how much it will cost, though I am advised that costs will be met from budgeted expenditure for Medicines Act activities. I understand that the committee intends to communicate with the profession in the light of its findings. Copies of material issued by the committee will be placed in the Library.

Life Expectancy

Mr. Michael Forsyth asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will list in the Official Report the expectation of life at age 16 years for men and women in each of the past 30 years.

Mr. Whitney: Expectations of life in England and Wales for each of the past 30 years are available for age 15 but not for age 16. The figures are given in the table.

England and Wales

Year	Expectation of life at age 15
	Males	Females

Familial Hypercholesterolaemia (Tests)

Mr. Kirkwood asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will look into the possibility of introducing automatic tests for familial hypercholesterolaemia as part of the treatment for patients suffering from heart complaints.

Mr. Whitney: All patients with familial hypercholesterolaemia would have a family history of this condition. It is for the clinicians responsible for their treatment to initiate whatever tests they considered appropriate.

Mobility Allowance

Mr. Wigley asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many persons are currently in receipt of mobility allowance; and how these figures compare with corresponding figures for each of the past five years.

Mr. Newton: The information requested, as at February each year, is set out in the following table.

Mobility Allowance
Number of Recipients

Year	Number
1986	410,720
1985	359,150
1984	308,230
1983	259,880
1982	216,520
1981	187,410

Sir Gerard Vaughan asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many people received the mobility allowance in Reading in 1978 and in the latest year for which figures are available.

Mr. Newton: I regret that the information is not available.

Attendance Allowance

Mr. Wigley asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many persons are currently in receipt of attendance allowances (a) on the higher rate and (b) on the lower rate; and how these figures compare with corresponding figures for each of the past five years.

Mr. Newton: The information requested is set out in the following table.

Attendance allowance—number of beneficiaries (estimated)

Year	(a) Higher rate (thousands)	(b) Lower rate (thousands)

Hospital and Community Health Service

Dr. Owen asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will give the most recent estimates for changes in hospital and community health service pay and prices and input volumes for 1985-86.

Mr. Hayhoe: Hospital and community health services' pay and prices are expected to rise by 5·2 per cent. in 1985-86; this estimate will be revised when final information about pay and prices becomes available after the end of the financial year. The figure of 5·2 per cent. compares with the cash increase of 6 per cent. (after allowing for transfers from revenue to capital in 1984-85) provided for in 1985-86. The actual outturn will not be known for some time; a specific uncertainty attaches to the scale of possible tranfers between revenue and capital.

Dr. Owen asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will give the most recent estimates for components of the hospital and community health service programme budget for 1985-86.

Mr. Hayhoe: The Department's programme budget analysis is carried out retrospectively when the necessary activity and cost data become available. On the normal timetable the hospital and community health service programme budget will be compiled in the first quarter of next year.

Drug Abuse

Mr. Best asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will provide figures indicating the amount of Government grant given to agencies working to combat drug abuse for the years 1980 to 1985 inclusive.

Mr. Whitney: The amounts made available to statutory and voluntary organisations by the Department specifically to provide services for drug misusers for the financial years 1980-81—1985-86 are as follows:

1980-81	285,690
1981-82	347,360
1982-83	433,174
1983-84	1,270,702
1984-85	2,386,542
1985-86	*3,602,276

*(Estimated)

In addition, £628,000 was spent in 1984-85 and £1,815,000 is expected to be spent in 1985-86 on the Department's drug misuse prevention campaign.

Alcohol Abuse

Mr. Best asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) if he will provide figures indicating the amount spent by the Health Education Council on the prevention of alcohol abuse during the years 1980 to 1985 inclusive;

(2) if he will provide figures indicating the amount spent by the Health Education Council on the prevention of drug abuse during the years 1980 to 1985 inclusive.

Mr. Whitney: Expenditure has been as follows:

	Alcohol £	Drugs £
1979-80	24,842	—
1980-81	216,534	—
1981-82	194,683	—
1982-83	263,178	—
1983-84	310,671	—
1984-85	217,553	17,031

Mr. Best asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will provide figures indicating the amount of Government grant given to agencies working to combat alcohol abuse for the years 1980 to 1985 inclusive.

Mr. Whitney: The amounts made available to statutory and voluntary organisations by the Department specifically to provide services for alcohol abusers for the financial years in question are as follows:

Year	£
1980-81	1,245,018
1981-82	920,000
1982-83	846,420
1983-84	828,900
1984-85	712,638
1985-86	*812,150

* Estimated figure.

In addition, a grant is made to the Health Education Council from which it undertakes preventive work.

Pensions

Sir Adam Butler asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what is the amount by which the married couple and the single person currently drawing the full, appropriate state pension have changed their standard of living, measured by the percentage increase in pensions over the increase in retail prices, since May 1979.

Mr. Newton: At November 1985, when social security benefits were last increased, a pensioner couple receiving £61·30 had improved their standard of living by some 5 per cent. in real terms—about £3 a week—over the levels at November 1978, the last benefit increase prior to May 1979. A single pensioner receiving £38·30 is about 5·3 per cent.—or over £1·90 a week better off.

Mr. Gordon Brown asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) what would the single pension and married pension be if they had kept pace with the rise in average earnings since 1979; how this compares with the actual level of pensions in 1985-86 and 1986-87; and what would be the first-year and full-year costs of an increase in pension so as to restore the link with earnings (a) net of the cost of indexation and (b) net of the cost of indexation and savings on other benefits as a direct result of restoration of earnings-pension link;

(2) what would be the first-year and full-year cost of increases in the single and married pensions in 1985-86 and 1986-87 by £1, £5, £8 and £10 per week (a) inclusive of the cost of indexation, (b) net of the cost of indexation and (c) net of the cost of indexation and savings in other benefit payments as a direct result of these pension increases.

Mr. Newton: I shall let the hon. Member have replies as soon as possible.

Chiropody

Mr. Andrew Bowden asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many district health authorities provide chiropody services under the National Health Service free of charge to all women between the ages of 60 years and 65 years; and what are the average, longest and shortest, waiting times for chiropody treatment under the National Health Service.

Mr. Hayhoe: I regret that information is not collected centrally in the form requested. However, 41 district health authorities can be identified from statistical returns as providing chiropody services in the community to women aged 60-64 in 1984 and other authorities may also do so. Chiropody treatment is provided as necessary to hospital in-patients. Information on waiting times for chiropody is not collected centrally.

Hospitals (Costs)

Mr. Silvester asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what is the cost of drugs dispensed at the Christie hospital, Manchester, and the Royal Marsden hospital, London, in the last 12 months; and what is the cost of drugs per patient.

Mr. Whitney: I regret we do not hold such detailed information centrally. My hon. Friend may therefore wish to direct his inquiries to the chairmen of the two health authorities involved.

Mr. Silvester asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what is the cost per patient of treatment at Christie hospital, Manchester, and the Royal Marsden hospital, London, in the last 12 months.

Mr. Whitney: Costing returns for 1984-85 submitted by the two health authorities show the following:

	Cost per in patient day £	Cost per in patient case £
Christie Hospital, Manchester	76·73	657·11
Royal Marsden Hospital, London	138·45	1,181·51

RU 486 Abortive Drug

Mr. Campbell-Savours asked the Secretary of State for Social Services whether he will make a statement as to the approval, use, supply and circumstances of distribution in the United Kingdom of RU 486 abortive drug manufactured by Rousel of France.

Mr. Hayhoe: This drug is available in relation to two clinical trials, for which the licensing authority has granted doctor's exemption certificates. One of the trials relates to the use of the drug in abortion. The doctor responsible for the trial has confirmed that it will be conducted in accordance with the requirements of the Abortion Act.

Form F1D

Mr. Weetch asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) whether he will consider redesigning and simplifying the form F1D ;

(2) what is the average length of time taken to process the form F1D from when it is received by the local social security office to its despatch to patient and dentist.

Mr. Major: We are considering how best to redesign and simplify form F1D in connection with the social security review changes.

Statistics are not kept routinely on the average length of time taken by local offices to process this form, so that this information could be obtained only by means of a special exercise, which would be disproportionately expensive. However, a recent survey of 20 offices has shown that 80 per cent. of claims for all agency benefits were processed within three weeks.

Dental Estimates Board

Mr. Weetch asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what is the percentage of estimates received by the Dental Estimates Board for examination and report only during the period October to December 1985 using the new form FP 17E.

Mr. Hayhoe: The following table gives the information requested. All figures are in thousands.

	October 1985	November 1985	December 1985	Total
(a) Number of estimates for examination and report only	746	777	729	2,252
(b) Number of estimates on Form FP 17E	26	232	301	559
(c) Percentage on form FP 17E	3·5	29·9	41·3	24·8

Mr. Weetch asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what was the percentage of periodontal treatments paid by the Dental Estimates Board under items 3*(a)* and 5*(a)* during 1984; and whether this ratio has changed since October 1985.

Mr. Hayhoe: In 1984, 76·6 per cent. of periodontal treatments were approved under item 3*(a)* and 17·6 per cent. under item 5*(a). Information for the period from October 1985 is not yet available, and would not be comparable as the definition of item 5(a)* changed substantially in October 1985.

Oxford Regional Health Authority

Sir Gerard Vaughan asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what was the total net National Health Service expenditure by his Department in the Oxfordshire health region in 1978-79 and in the latest year for which figures are available; and what percentage increase this represents in real terms after taking account of the general level of inflation.

Mr. Hayhoe: The annual accounts of health authorities (including family practitioner committees) in the Oxford health region show total net expenditure of £262·8 million for 1978-79 and £561·4 million for 1984-85. This is an increase in real terms of 20 per cent.

Sir Gerard Vaughan asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many qualified nurses (a) in total and (b) per head of population were employed in the Oxfordshire regional health authority in 1978 and in the latest year for which figures are available.

Mr. Hayhoe: The information requested is given in the table:

Qualified nurses and midwives at 30 September

	1978	1984
*Oxford regional health authority
Whole time equivalent†	8,010	9,870
Ratio per 1,000‡ population	3·5	4·1

Notes:
* Excludes agency nursing and midwifery staff. Excludes student midwives, district nurse students and health visitor students.
† Figures are whole time equivalent rounded to nearest 10.
‡ Ratios have been calculated on unrounded figures.

NHS (Managers)

Sir Gerard Vaughan asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many new National Health Service managers who have recently been appointed have come from outside the National Health Service; and what percentage this represents of all such appointments.

Mr. Hayhoe: I understand health authorities have so far appointed 80 general managers from outside the National Health Service, which represents 12·3 per cent. of the appointments made.

New Hospitals (Berkshire)

Sir Gerard Vaughan asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many new National Health Service hospitals have been opened in Berkshire since May 1979; and how many new National Health Service beds have been made available as a consequence.

Mr. Whitney: The table shows new hospital schemes in Berkshire completed since May 1979 and the number of beds they comprise.

	Number of Beds
Wexham Park Hospital
Unit for Mentally Ill/ Elderly
Mentally Infirm	70
Maternity Unit	110
Paediatric Unit	43
TOTAL	223

Major upgradings have provided a further 55 beds.

Supplementary Benefits Handbook

Mr. Frank Field asked the Secretary of State for Social Services when he expects to publish the November 1985 "Supplementary Benefit Handbook"; and if this will include an up to date guide to the Government's board and lodging policy.

Mr. Major: I refer the hon. Member to my hon. Friend's reply the hon. Member for Birmingham, Hodge Hill (Mr. Davis) on 12 February, at column 496.

Drugs (Parallel Importers)

Mr. Michael Morris asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what action is being taken to establish the sources of product available to parallel importers, and in particular to Stephar Formaceutische Produkten whose registered address in the United Kingdom is Barclays Bank Ltd., Walton, Norfolk.

Mr. Hayhoe: Applicants for parallel import product licences are required to give the name of the European Community member state from which the medicinal product is to be imported, the product name and marketing authorisation reference number in the member state, the name and address of the holder of the marketing authorisation and of the manufacturers covered by that authorisation, the name and address of the European suppliers of the product and information about known movements of the product before it reached those suppliers.

Confirmation of the name and address of the manufacturer (among other things) is sought from the member state.

Any applications received from Stephar Formaceutische Produkten would be dealt with in the same way as applications received from any other parallel importer.

Hospital Waiting Lists

Miss Boothroyd asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what is the number on waiting lists at hospitals in the Sandwell health authority and Dudley health authority for those awaiting X-rays.

Mr. Whitney: I am sorry I cannot give the hon. Member the information she seeks. It is not collected centrally. The hon. Member may wish to write to the chairmen of the Sandwell and Dudley district health authorities, who may be able to provide the information requested.

Dentists (Service Committee Hearings)

Mr. Weetch asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will introduce regulations to allow dentists to be legally represented at service committee hearings; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hayhoe: Legal representation of either party has been avoided at service committee hearings in the interests of informality. Legal advice can be taken before or during a hearing. The parties may be legally represented at oral hearings of appeals. I have no plans to change these arrangements.

Mr. Weetch asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will give the numbers and percentages in relation to the total number of cases where withholdings have taken place at service committee hearings for dentists, in respect of the years 1983, 1984 and 1985; and if he will introduce legislation to allow non-attributable details to be published in the dental press.

Mr. Hayhoe: My right hon. Friend has directed withholdings from dentists as follows:

	1983	1984	1985
Cases investigated	323	421	651
Decision to withhold remuneration	80	145	255
Percentage	25	34	39

Family practitioner committees are aware that when action has been completed on a service committee investigation, a short summary may be issued to the press provided it excludes details from which the parties could be identified.

Teeth (Filling Materials)

Mr. Weetch asked the Secretary of State for Social Services under what circumstances the Dental Estimates Board is authorised to approve the placement of composite or glass ionomer filling materials in the biting surfaces of premolar and molar teeth; if he will make a statement on the fees that can be authorised for such fillings in the posterior teeth; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hayhoe: The board can approve the use of these materials in such circumstances as it sees fit. The fees that can be authorised for their use in posterior teeth are as follows:

Permanent teeth: £6·40 per filling, with a maximum of £9·20 for two or more fillings per tooth and an additional fee of £4·00 if pin or screw retention is used.
Deciduous teeth: £2·80 per tooth.

Supplementary Benefit

Ms. Harman asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will place in the Library figures showing how many people were in receipt of supplementary benefit in each of the years 1979 to 1985; and what percentage change in these figures occurred between 1979 and 1985, in each of the places listed in the letter to him from the hon. Member for Peckham of 29 January.

Mr. Gordon Brown asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what is the first-year and full-year cost of extending the long-term rate of supplementary benefit to the long-term unemployed in 1985-86 and 1986-87 (a) net of the cost of indexation and (b) net of the cost of indexation and savings in other benefits as a direct result of this measure.

Mr. Newton: I shall let the hon. Members have replies as soon as possible.

Dr. Godman asked the Secretary of State for Social Services, pursuant to the answer of 3 February, concerning supplementary benefit claims in Greenock and Port Glasgow, if he will state how much was paid by each office in each year since 1979-80.

Mr. Major: I regret that no information is available about the amount of supplementary benefit paid out each year by individual local offices. Such information could be obtained only by a special exercise which would be disproportionately expensive.

Mr. Sean Hughes asked the Secretary of State for Social Services, pursuant to his reply of 20 February, Official Report, column 317, why information relating to young supplementary benefit claimants in Knowsley is not available.

Mr. Major: The Department's local offices keep figures of supplementary benefit claimants under three headings only—those over pension age, those who are unemployed and those under pension age who are not unemployed.

There is also an annual statistical inquiry based on a sample of cases in local offices which provides more detailed information, including estimated numbers of claimants in different age bands. However, the sample is not large enough to provide reliable estimates of individual local office figures.

Social Security Offices (Staff)

Sir Geoffrey Finsberg asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what is the approximate turnover of staff in grades of clerical assistant and clerical officers, respectively, in social security offices open to the public covering the Hampstead and Highgate constituency, together with maximum and minimum rates of turnover, naming the offices concerned.

Mr. Major: Following is the information for the year ending 31 December 1985.

Turnover is defined as those staff who leave the Department (including those who retire) change offices within the Department or are promoted within an office. The number of staff who leave the Department (including those who retire) is lower. Both sets of figures are set out in the table:

	Number	Per cent.
CLERICAL ASSISTANT
Total turnover	56·5	55·9
Total of leavers	32·5	32·2
Turnover
Maximum rate: Finsbury Park ILO	19	67·9
Minimum rate: Highgate ILO	16·5	47·1
Leavers
Maximum rate: Finsbury Park ILO	11	39·3
Minimum rate: Euston ILO	5	20·8
CLERICAL OFFICER
Total turnover	69·5	24·4

NHS Spectacles

Mr. Carter-Jones asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) if he plans to end the supply of National Health Service glasses through the hospital eye service;

(2) what arrangements he intends to make for patients in the hospital eye service when supplies of National Health Service glasses through the general ophthalmic service end in July.

Mr. Hayhoe: I shall let the hon. Member have a reply as soon as possible.

Mr. Carter-Jones asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what was the forecast cost saving from the changes introduced in April 1985 in the National Health Service supply of spectacles; and what is his estimate of actual savings.

Mr. Hayhoe: The expected savings in a full year in England were estimated at some £14 million. The latest provisional information indicates that the savings may be a little less than expected, but it will not be possible to assess the shortfall, if any, until after the end of the financial year.

Child Benefit

Mr. Gordon Brown asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what is the first-year and full-year cost of increasing child benefit by £1, £3, £5 and £10 per week in 1985-86 and 1986-87 (a) net of the cost of indexation and (b) net of the cost of indexation and savings in other benefits as a direct result of these measures.

Mr. Newton: I shall let the hon. Member have a reply as soon as possible.

Benefits (Indexation)

Mr. Gordon Brown asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what are the full-year and first-year costs of indexing each of (a) the single pension, (b) the married pension, (c) unemployment benefit, (d) child benefit and (e) the long-term rate of supplementary benefit in 1985-86 and 1986-87, both including and excluding savings on other benefits as a direct result of indexation of these benefits.

Mr. Newton: I shall let the hon. Member have a reply as soon as possible.

Unemployment Benefit

Mr. Gordon Brown asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what is the first-year and full-year cost of increasing unemployment benefit by £1 and £5 per week in 1985-86 and 1986-87 (a) net of the cost of indexation and (b) net of the cost of indexation and savings in other benefits as a direct result of these measures.

Mr. Newton: I shall let the hon. Member have a reply as soon as possible.

Mr. Kirkwood asked the Secretary of State for Social Services, according to the most recent available figures, how many claimants are in receipt of unemployment benefit at less than the full rate (a) by sex and marital status and (b) where married, by sex and employment status of spouse.

Mr. Major [pursuant to his reply, 12 February 1986, c. 493-94]: Information on the employment status of a claimant's spouse is not available. The other information requested is given in the table.

Receiving less than full rate unemployment benefit at November 1984

	Three quarter rate	Half rate	*Other	Total
Males
Married	5,500	3,200	17,000	25,700
Other	8,900	5,300	1,400	15,600
Females
Married	7,500	5,000	100	12,600
Other	3,700	2,500	1,000	7,200

* These include cases of overlapping benefits, and persons who do not receive full rate benefit because of eg occupational pensions.

Pensions and Benefits

Mr. Gordon Brown asked the Secretary of State for Social Services by how much will each of (a) the single pension, (b) the married pension, (c) unemployment benefit, (d) child benefit and (e) long-term rate of supplementary benefit in 1985-86 and 1986-87 have to rise to keep pace with prices.

Mr. Newton: I shall let the hon. Member have a reply as soon as possible.

Severe Weather Payments

Mr. Winnick asked the Secretary of State for Social Services to which areas of the United Kingdom the exceptionally severe weather payments have now been authorised; and from what date in each case.

Mr. Newton: I understand that adjudication officers in the following local offices have declared that the weather has been exceptionally severe in their area, although this list may not be complete. Information on the date from which a period of exceptionally severe weather has been declared in each area is not available.

Information for Northern Ireland should be obtained from my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland.

Mr. Winnick asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what publicity is being given to the exceptionally severe weather payments in the areas in which such payments are now authorised.

Mr. Newton: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to the hon. Member for Birkenhead (Mr. Field) on 24 February, at column 470.

Mr. Winnick asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if the exceptionally severe weather payment can be authorised where payment has already been made by the individual of the current fuel bill; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Newton: I refer the hon. Member to the guidance issued by the Chief Adjudication Officer on 6 December 1985, a copy of which is in the Library.

Mr. Winnick asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if the exceptionally severe weather payment is to be given when the individual pays the fuel bill by weekly or monthly stamps; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Newton: Claimants who budget for their fuel bills by purchasing weekly or monthly stamps, and whose fuel bill is then higher than expected because of a period of exceptionally severe weather, are eligible for a single payment towards the extra cost of meeting the bill.

Oswestry Hospital (Casualty Department)

Mr. Meacher asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he has made any decision yet about Shropshire health authority's proposed closure of the Oswestry and district hospital casualty department since he received the proposal in 1983; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hayhoe: This proposal was referred to the Department by the West Midlands regional health authority in January 1985 and I have since received representations from my right hon. Friend the Member for Shropshire, North (Mr. Biffen). Now that the supplementary information requested by the Department has been received, I shall consider the matter carefully.

Abortion

Mr. Hargreaves asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) if he will publish in the Official Report the names of the proprietors and location of those hospitals or other premises which are equipped to perform abortions; and how many beds each unit has;

(2) if he will list in the Official Report those hospitals which are equipped to perform abortions after 20 weeks gestation;

(3) if he will publish in the Official Report a list of the names of representatives from each hospital who met the Minister for Health on 2 August 1985 to discuss late abortion.

Mr. Hayhoe: I assume my hon. Friend is referring to non-NHS hospitals. Information about such hospitals approved under the Abortion Act is as follows:

Benefits

Mr. Meacher asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) what was the number of claimants in receipt of (a) unemployment benefit, (b) supplementary benefit and (c) unemployment benefit and supplementary benefit excluding lone parents, couples with children and pensioners for the latest available year in Scotland;

(2) what was the number of claimants in receipt of (a) unemployment benefit, (b) supplementary benefit and (c) unemployment benefit and supplementary benefit excluding lone parents, couples with children and pensioners for the latest available year in Wales;

(3) what was the number of claimants in receipt of (a) unemployment benefit, (b) supplementary benefit and (c) unemployment benefit and supplementary benefit, excluding lone parents, couples with children and pensioners for the latest available year.

Mr. Major [pursuant to his reply, 10 February, 1986 c. 371]: The information requested is given in the table.

	Great Britain	Scotland	Wales	Latest available date
Unemployment benefit	654,000	85,000	36,000	November 1984
Supplementary benefit	1,630,000	190,000	100,000	December 1983
Unemployment benefit and supplementary benefit*	100,000	10,000	5,000	December 1983

* These figures are included in the overall supplementary benefit figures.

Mr. Meacher asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) what was the number of claimant couples with children in receipt of (a) family income supplement, (b) unemployment benefit, (c) supplementary benefit and (d) unemployment benefit and supplementary benefit for the latest available year in Scotland;

(2) what was the number of claimant couples with children in receipt of (a) family income supplement, (b) unemployment benefit, (c) supplementary benefit and (d) unemployment benefit and supplementary benefit for the latest available year in Wales;

(3) what was the number of claimant couples with children in receipt of (a) family income supplement, (b) unemployment benefit, (c) supplementary benefit and (d) unemployment benefit and supplementary benefit for the latest available year.

Mr. Major [pursuant to his reply, 10 February 1986, c. 371]: The information requested is as follows:

Benefit	Number of claimant couples with children in			Latest available date
	(i) Great Britain	(ii) Scotland	(iii) Wales
Family income supplement	115,000	12,000	8,000	November 1985
Unemployment benefit*	22,200	2,900	1,200	November 1984
Supplementary benefit	395,000	40,000	25,000	December 1983
Unemployment benefit and supplementary benefit†	105,000	10,000	5,000	December 1983

*Figures related solely to claimants in receipt of adult and child dependency additions.
†These figures are included in the overall supplementary benefit figures.

Disabled People (Consultation Papers)

Mr. Wareing asked the Secretary of State for Social Services why copies of his consultation papers on the Disabled Persons (Services, Consultation and Representation) Bill were not sent to the Disablement Income Group, the National League for the Blind, and the Liverpool Association for the Disabled; and if he will now do so.

Mr. Hayhoe [pursuant to his reply, 20 February 1986, c. 316]: As I indicated in my reply to the right hon. Member for Manchester, Wythenshawe on 14 February, at columns 596-97, copies of the Department's consultation paper were sent initially to a number of major national organisations concerned with disability issues. It would not have been practicable to invite comments from all voluntary organisations who might have an interest, but, as I made clear when the document was published, the Department will send a copy on request to any other person or organisation who wishes to have one. The Disablement Income Group has already requested and been sent a copy of the consultation paper, and I am also arranging for copies to be sent to the National League for the Blind and Disabled, and the Liverpool Association for the Disabled and to other organisations which have requested copies.

Dental Charges

Mr. Weetch asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what proportion of the revenue from dental charges was accounted for by dentures in the years 1956, 1964, 1974 and 1984.

Mr. Hayhoe [pursuant to his reply, 20 February 1986, c. 316]: The approximate proportion of the revenue from dental charges in England and Wales accounted for by the provision of dentures in 1956, 1964, 1974 and the financial year 1984-85 is as follows:

Year	per cent.
1956	60
1964	55
1974	30
1984-85	20

Information for the calendar year 1984 is not available.

Residential Care Homes

Mr. Bermingham asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will make a statement about the operation of the powers whereby local authorities can add to benefits payable in respect of disabled people in private and voluntary homes for the elderly.

Mr. Newton [pursuant to his reply, 25 February 1986]: Local authorities have powers, which may be operated at their discretion, to meet for certain claimants in residential care homes any excess of the homes' charges over their supplementary benefit payments. Information on these powers is given in circular LASS L(86) 1, a copy of which is in the Library.

Social Security Reform

Mr. Roy Hughes asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what discussions he has had with student organisations concerning the social security review.

Mr. Newton [pursuant to his reply, 25 February 1986]: The National Union of Students submitted written evidence to the review of social security last year. I met representatives of the NUS last week to discuss the relevant aspects of the White Paper on the "Reform of Social Security" (Cmnd. 9691), and the specific proposals which are currently the subject of consultation with the Social Security Advisory Committee and the local authority associations.

Alzheimer's Disease

Mr. Ron Brown asked the Secretary of State for Social Services, pursuant to the answer of 14 February, Official Report, column 595, if any of the research into Alzheimer's disease referred to will deal with a possible correlation between the disease and aluminium levels in water.

Mr. Walden: I have been asked to reply.

Yes. The Medical Research Council, which receives its grant-in-aid through the Department, has recently initiated epidemiological studies on the possible correlation between Alzheimer's disease and aluminium levels in water.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

United States (Export Regulations)

Mr. Ashdown asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what steps he has taken to investigate the impact on United Kingdom high technology exports of the attempted imposition of United States export regulations by the United States subsidiary companies.

Mr. Pattie: The United Kingdom remains firmly opposed to extraterritorial United States re-export controls and to the implied claim of the United States to jurisdiction in the United Kingdom. It is not possible to measure the impact of the imposition of such controls by United States subsidiaries. Companies with difficulties should approach the Department for advice.

Mr. Ashdown asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what steps he has taken to investigate the attempts by United States Government officials to audit and examine the books of United Kingdom computer and electronics companies; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Pattie: The Government are considering a request from the United States authorities for agreement to United States officials visiting a number of United Kingdom companies in connection with United States distribution licence regulations introduced last year. The United States authorities recognise that no such visits may take place without prior approval.

Crown Immunity

Mr. Ashley asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will list the categories, and the numbers within them, of institutions, for which he is responsible, in respect of which exemptions are claimed from (a) food hygiene legislation and (b) health and safety legislation on the grounds of Crown immunity; and if he will make it his policy to plan to remove the immunity for the relevant institutions.

Mr. Butcher: Crown immunity from prosecution under food hygiene legislation and health and safety legislation applies to the following establishments — premises for which my right hon. Friend is responsible.

Category	Number
Central departmental offices	24
Regional or local offices	140
Storage buildings	26
Research establishments and laboratories	9

These figures include premises where Crown immunity for food hygiene legislation would apply, but where food sales or preparation are not at present carried out.

Our policy on Crown immunity is to consider every case on its merits. If we have evidence of inadequate standards in particular circumstances I shall consider, with colleagues, how best to deal with these circumstances. This may, as in the case of hospital catering, lead to a reappraisal of Crown immunity.

Copyright

Mr. Nicholas Winterton asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry (1) if he will list those consumer organisations from which he has received representations concerning the recent discussion document on the recording and rental of audio and video copyright material;

(2) whether he has received any representations from the National Consumer Council concerning the discussion document on the record and rental of audio and video copyright material; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Pattie: The National Consumer Council, the Consumers Association and the Consumers in the European Community Group have responded to the Green Paper "The Recording and Rental of Audio and Video Copyright Material" (Cmnd. 9445). The Government's conclusions on the matters raised in this Green Paper will be announced in a White Paper which is now in an advanced state of preparation.

Innovation and Technology (Promotion)

Mr. Soames asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what steps his Department is taking to promote and encourage innovation and technology.

Mr. Pattie: A range of measures are operated by my Department to promote, encourage and support research and development, innovation and the spread and application of up-to-date technology. The major points are as follows.

The business and technical advisory services help small and medium firms benefit from consultancy advice on technical problems, quality and design and the exploitation of new technology.

The support for innovation scheme introduced in May 1982 offers financial support for research and development projects leading to new products and processes. £790 million has been offered to support over 6,500 projects.

Support for national regional investment includes grants for selected capital investment projects including the production or design of advanced microelectronics, fibre optic and opto-electronic components, and for the acquisition of CAD systems for the design of integrated circuits.

My Department supports collaborative R and D. A notable example is the Alvey programme, a five-year programme of collaborative research in advanced information technology.

Assistance is provided to civil aircraft and aero-engine R and D and to support the space programme.

My Department includes four industrial research establishments, the National Physical Laboratory, the National Engineering Laboratory, Warren Spring Laboratory and the Laboratory of the Government Chemist.

My Department actively promotes international R and D programmes such as ESPRIT and EUREKA in order that British firms secure the benefits of participation.

In all, this year my Department's expenditure on scientific and technological assistance and support for investment in innovation is expected to be about £440 million.

Iron Foundries (Modernisation)

Mr. Corbett asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what Government assistance is available to independently owned iron founders towards the cost of modernisation.

Mr. Peter Morrison: My Department offers a variety of forms of assistance under its support for business schemes. Most of these are applicable to independently owned iron founders. I shall be writing to the hon. Gentleman with details.

Distillers Company (Bid)

Dr. McDonald asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he plans to refer to the Monopolies and Mergers Commission the revised bid by Guinness for Distillers in the light of the proposed reduction in Guinness's share of the future whisky market; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Howard: The Minister for Information Technology will make his decision in the light of advice from the Director General of Fair Trading.

Manufactured Exports

Dr. Owen asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what the United Kingdom's share of world manufactured exports was in 1985, in 1979 and 1960.

Mr. Butcher: Data for the main manufacturing countries, which account for around two thirds of world exports of manufactures, are more up to date than figures for all countries. This information is in the table.

United Kingdom share of main manufacturing countries Exports of manufactures†*

	Per cent.‡
1960	16·5
1979	9·1
1985 Jan to Sept	‖7·9

Notes:

British Telecom (Flotation)

Mr. Blair asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if his Department has received the Director of Public Prosecution's report on dealings by individuals in the Heron Corporation and Harris Queensway in British Telecom shares at the time of flotation; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Pattie: The Director of Public Prosecutions has referred to my Department a report by the police on certain dealings in BT shares and this is being studied.

Hall Russell Shipbuilders

Mr. Robert Hughes asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will publish in the Official Report the number of bids lodged on Friday 21 February for Hall Russell, Shipbuilders, Aberdeen; what were the names of the bidders; and if he will make a statement on the successful bidder.

Mr. Peter Morrison [pursuant to his reply, 26 February 1986, c. 583]: While the names of bidders is commercially confidential information, I can confirm that three bids were received. I can only announce the name of a successful bidder when I have given my consent to British Shipbuilders to sell the yard.

PRIME MINISTER

Channel Tunnel

Q97. Mr. Teddy Taylor asked the Prime Minister if she ascertained from President Mitterrand at her meeting on 12 February whether his Government share the view of Her Majesty's Government that the funding of the Channel tunnel should be entirely from private investments; and if she will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: Both Governments are fully agreed that the Channel tunnel should be constructed without recourse to public money or Government commercial guarantee.

Westland plc

Q131. Mr. Dalyell asked the Prime Minister if, in the light of Sir Robert Armstrong's statement in evidence to the Defence Committee on 5 February, she will now seek to correct the version of her reply to a question from the hon. Member for Woking (Mr. Onslow) recorded in the Official Report of 23 January, at column 455, in so far as it indicates to which aspect of her involvement in the Westland affair the giving of her consent was intended to refer; and if she will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: I have nothing to add to the full account which I gave to the House in my statement on 23 January at columns 449-460 and in the debate on 27 January at columns 651-658.

As to my reply to the hon. Member for Woking (Mr. Onslow), I refer the hon. Member to my remarks in the debate on 27 January at column 682.

British Leyland

Q143. Mr. Ashton asked the Prime Minister if she will now pay a visit to a British Leyland factory to meet the work force.

The Prime Minister: I have at present no plans to do so.

Anglo-Irish Agreement

Q144. Sir John Biggs-Davison asked the Prime Minister what discussions she has had with leaders of Northern Ireland parties since she signed the Anglo-Irish agreement; and whether she will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: I met the leader of the Alliance party on 22 November last year, a delegation from the Assembly led by the Speaker on 25 November, and the leaders of the Ulster Unionist party and the Democratic Unionist party on 25 February. Later today I shall meet the leader of the Social Democratic and Labour party. I have listened to and recognise the concerns of party leaders about the Anglo-Irish agreement. I made it clear on 25 February to the Unionist party leaders that while the Government is committed to implementing the agreement we would like to establish new arrangements for enabling Unionists to make their views known to us on affairs in Northern Ireland. I have also proposed consultations on the Northern Ireland Assembly and about arrangements for handling Northern Ireland business in Parliament at Westminster. The Unionist leaders have proposed a round table conference on devolution in Northern Ireland, which we have agreed to consider positively.

It was agreed that both sides would reflect on these suggestions and meet again shortly. Meanwhile, I shall be seeing leaders of the other constitutional parties.

Engagements

Mr. Amess asked the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 27 February.

Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 27 February.

Mr. Leigh asked the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 27 February.

Mr. Greenway asked the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 27 February.

Mr. Yeo asked the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 27 February.

The Prime Minister: This morning I presided at a meeting of the Cabinet and had meetings with ministerial colleagues and others. In addition to my duties in this House I shall be having further meetings later today.

Principal Civil Service Pension Scheme

Mr. Meacher asked the Prime Minister whether the Government intend to make any further changes in the principal Civil Service pension scheme; and if she will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: Yes. Two minor improvements to the injury benefits provisions are being implemented. A number of issues are under consideration in consultation with the trade unions. Like other employers with occupational schemes, the Government will be considering the implications for the principal Civil Service pension scheme of the current Social Security Bill.

Scottish Universities (Funding)

Mr. Dalyell asked the Prime Minister if she will make a statement on co-ordination between the Department of Education and Science and the Scottish Office on Her Majesty's Government's policy towards proposals by the Scottish Tertiary Education Advisory Council for the future funding of universities in Scotland.

The Prime Minister: There is close co-ordination between the Department of Education and Science and the Scottish Office on higher education policy, and this has been maintained at all stages during the Scottish Tertiary Education Advisory Council's strategy review and since its report was published. Decisions on the future funding arrangements for the Scottish universities will be made in due course.

EMPLOYMENT

News International Printing Plant, Wapping

Mr. Leighton asked the Paymaster General how many industrial injuries there have been at the News International, Wapping, newspaper printing plant.

Mr. Trippier: Since the start of production at the plant on 25 January, one accident causing personal injury has been reported to the Health and Safety Executive as required by the Notification of Accidents and Dangerous Occurrences Regulations 1980.

Crown Immunity

Mr. Ashley asked the Paymaster General if he will list the categories, and the numbers within them, of institutions, for which the Secretary of State for Employment is responsible, for which exemptions are claimed from (a) food hygiene legislation and (b) health and safety legislation on the grounds of Crown immunity; and if he will make it his policy to plan to remove the immunity for the relevant institutions.

Mr. Trippier: Crown Immunity from prosecution under food hygiene legislation and health and safety legislation applies to the following institutions/premises for which we are responsible:

Category	Number
Central departmental offices	28
Regional, area or local offices	2,477
Skillcentres and Employment Rehabilitation centres	97
Laboratories	3
Storage Buildings/Warehouses	2

These figures include premises where Crown immunity for food hygiene legislation would apply, but where food sales or preparation are not at present carried out.

There is a difference between food hygiene legislation and heath and safety legislation. Whereas the Food Hygiene Regulations do not apply on Crown premises, the Health and Safety at Work Act, for example, does so apply. the Crown is subject to notices similar in purpose to those issued to other bodies under the Act and under which specified improvements can be required to be made. The Crown is, of course, immune from prosecution under either set of provisions.

Our policy on Crown immunity is to consider every case on its own merits. If we have evidence of inadequate standards in particular circumstances I shall consider, with colleagues, how best to deal with these circumstances. This may, as in the case of hospital catering, lead to a reappraisal of Crown immunity.

Unregistered Workplaces

Mr. Litherland asked the Paymaster General how many man hours have been devoted to seeking out small unregistered workplaces; and how many have been identified in 1985.

Mr. Trippier: Figures for the whole of 1985 are not available. In the period 1 April to 29 September 1985, it is estimated that factory inspectors spent 19,000 man hours seeking out and inspecting 9,184 previously unregistered premises.

Magnox Stations

Mr. D. E. Thomas asked the Paymaster General how many (a) routine visits and (b) visits in relation to specific incidents have been made to Magnox nuclear power stations by the nuclear installations inspectorate of the Health and Safety Executive in each year since 1974; and how many investigations of incidents undertaken by the inspectorate have been published.

Mr. Trippier: The number of routing visits to Magnox nuclear power stations by the nuclear installations inspectorate for each year since 1974 is as follows:

Year	Number
1974	174
1975	187
1976	222
1977	241
1978	214
1979	190
1980	184
1981	177
1982	165
1983	197
1984	173
1985	142

Information on the numbers of visits in response to specific incidents is not readily available and could only be obtained at disproportionate cost.

Tourist Boards

Mr. Rowe asked the Paymaster General whether he has reached a conclusion on the recent recommendation by the Trade and Industry Committee for a new statutory structure of tourist boards.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: In its report on tourism, published on 15 January, the Select Committee on Trade and Industry recommended that the British Tourist Authority, the English tourist board, the Scottish tourist board and the Wales tourist board should be abolished, that the status of the Northern Ireland tourist board should be down-graded, and that responsibility for the development of tourism, both domestically and overseas, should pass to a new statutory body called the British tourist board, supported by a statutory regional structure.

The Government will be making a formal response to the Select Committee's report, which contains a wide range of other recommendations about the promotion of tourism, in due course. However, the Government are aware of the damaging effect of uncertainty on the existing tourist boards, which have already undergone considerable reorganisation in recent years, as well as on the industry which engages in joint promotional work with them.

I have therefore consulted my right hon. Friends the Secretaries of State for Scotland, Wales and Northern Ireland about the Select Committee's proposals for an alternative to current statutory arrangements. We have concluded that, in the interests of the effective promotion of tourism within the United Kingdom, we should maintain the existing structure of the statutory tourist boards and ministerial responsibility for them and to concentrate on continuing to improve the liaison and co-operation between the boards.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Legal Process (Review)

22. Mr. Corbyn asked the Attorney-General if a review of the legal process in Northern Ireland has been initiated.

The Attorney-General: The Lord Chancellor is conducting a review of the current practice of using juries in personal injury actions and the Northern Ireland court service is considering the results of the civil justice review in England and Wales to consider whether any of these might be applied to the Province.

Crown Immunity

Mr. Ashley asked the Attorney-General if he will list the categories, and the numbers within them, of institutions, for which he or the Lord Chancellor is responsible, in respect of which exemptions are claimed from (a) food hygiene legislation and (b) health and safety legislation on the grounds of Crown immunity, and if he will make it his policy to plan to remove the immunity for the relevant institutions.

The Attorney-General: I have no such responsibility. The Lord Chancellor's Department is responsible for the following premises to which Crown immunity from prosecution under food hygiene legislation and health and safety legislation applies.

Category	Number
Court Buildings	411
Central departmental offices	13
Regional or local offices	96
Other premises	26

These figures include premises where Crown immunity for food hygiene legislation would apply, but where food sales or preparation are not at present carried out.

The Lord Chancellor's policy on Crown immunity is to consider every case on its merits and to apply standards consistent with the regulations. If he had evidence of inadequate standards in particular circumstances, he would consider, with colleagues, how best to deal with these cirsumstances.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT

Falkland Islands

Mr. D. E. Thomas asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what has been the Government's expenditure on civilian projects in the Falkland Islands each year since 1979.

Mr. Raison: For the financial year 1979-80 to 1984-85 (the last for which figures are available) expenditure was as follows:

	£ million
1979-80	1·1
1980-81	1·0
1981-82	1·0
1982-83	10·4
1983-84	6·1
1984-85	7·0

ENERGY

NCB (Enterprise) Ltd.

Mrs. Clwyd asked the Secretary of State for Energy if he will make available the corporate plan of NCB (Enterprise) Ltd.; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Hunt: This is a matter for the National Coal Board and I am asking the chairman to write to the hon. Member.

Mrs. Clwyd asked the Secretary of State for Energy how many ex-miners have found full-time employment via NCB (Enterprise) Ltd.

Mr. David Hunt: At the end of January 1986 NBC (Enterprise) Ltd. had assisted in the creation of 4,412 job prospects, providing employment opportunities for ex-NBC employees and for mining communities generally. 305 job opportunities have been created directly as a result of projects set up by former NCB employees.

Renewable Energy

Mr. Speller asked the Secretary of State for Energy if he will make it his policy to support with research grants the installation of multiple small wind energy collectors as well as of the single large collectors; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Hunt: Small wind turbines are now commercially available and it is therefore not appropriate for my Department to contribute towards the installation costs of such "wind farms". Proposals for the monitoring of wind farms would be considered sympathetically.

Oil Statistics

Mr. Deakins asked the Secretary of State for Energy what proportion of total world oil production was represented by United Kingdom oil production in 1985; and how this figure has changed since 1980.

Mr. Buchanan-Smith: In 1985 United Kingdom oil production represented 4·5 per cent. of world oil production; in 1980 this proportion was 2·5 per cent.

Crown Immunity

Mr. Ashley asked the Secretary of State for Energy if he will list the categories, and the numbers within them, of institutions, for which he is responsible, for which exemptions are claimed from (a) food hygiene legislation and (b) health and safety legislation on the grounds of Crown immunity; and if he will make it his policy to plan to remove the immunity for the relevant institutions.

Mr. Peter Walker: Crown immunity from prosecution under food hygiene legislation and health and safety legislation applies to the following institutions-premises for which I am responsible:

Category	Number
Central departmental offices	1
Gas and Oil Measurement Branch specialised building	1
Storage buildings	2

In addition to these installations, I am responsible for the Government oil pipeline and storage system which is managed by the Oil and Pipelines Agency. This comprises over 1,000 miles of pipeline with 23 active storage facilities and 24 sites in varying stages of disposal.

These figures include premises where Crown immunity for food hygiene legislation would apply, but where food sales or preparation are not at present carried out.

Our policy on Crown immunity is to consider every case on its merits. If we have evidence of inadequate standards in particular circumstances, I shall consider, with colleagues, how best to deal with these circumstances.

Nuclear Installations Inspectorate (Letter)

Mr. Ashdown asked the Secretary of State for Energy when the hon. Member for Yeovil can expect to receive a reply to the letter dated 16 January which he sent to the chief inspector of the nuclear installations inspectorate.

Mr. Goodlad: I understand that the chief inspector of the nuclear installations inspectorate replied to the hon. Member on 21 February 1986.

Sellafield

Mr. Ashdown asked the Secretary of State for Energy if he will indicate the area from which nuclear installations inspectorate inspectors are being withdrawn in order to be deployed to Sellafield; and if he will indicate the effect this will have on the completion of the 20-year safety reviews on certain nuclear power stations.

Mr. Goodlad: I am informed by the NII that the team which will undertake the review of safety at Sellafield will be drawn mainly from branch 3 of the inspectorate, which normally carries out some of the routine inspection functions and safety assessment work related to new plants built at Sellafield. The Sellafield review will not have any effect on the completion of the long-term safety reviews of Magnox stations.

Trawsfynydd (Incident)

Mr. D. E. Thomas asked the Secretary of State for Energy what was the nature of the incident which occured at Trawsfynydd nuclear power station at about 8 a.m. on 21 February; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Goodlad: I am advised by the Central Electricity Generating Board that it was a minor incident. I have asked the Board's chairman to give the hon. Member a full description of it.

Magnox Stations

Mr. D. E. Thomas asked the Secretary of State for Energy how many nuclear incidents at Magnox nuclear power stations have been reported to his Department since 1974; and how many of these incidents have resulted in the declaring of a site alert.

Mr. Goodlad: Between 1974 and July 1982, 65 incidents involving Magnox nuclear power stations were reported to my Department. Between July 1982 and the present time, seven incidents have been reported. Most of the incidents were of a minor or trivial nature. Only on two occasions was a "site alert" declared.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Anglo-Irish Agreement

15. Mr. Maclennan asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what steps he proposes to take to implement article 12 of the Anglo-Irish agreement.

Mr. Scott: As my right hon. Friend the Lord Privy Seal indicated to the House on 17 February, consideration of the matter continues.

19. Sir John Biggs-Davison asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement about the workings of the Anglo-Irish agreement.

Mr. Scott: I would refer my hon. Friend to the reply my right hon. Friend gave to a question by the hon. Member for the Isle of Wight earlier today.

Mr. Parry asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what effect the Anglo-Irish agreement has had on the security situation in the Province.

Mr. Scott: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave to a question by the hon. Member for Sheffield, Hillsborough (Mr. Flannery) earlier today.

Tourism (Accommodation Grants)

16. Mr. David Atkinson asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on how tourism in Northern Ireland will benefit from the reopening of the accommodation grant scheme.

Dr. Boyson: The re-opening of the accommodation grants scheme offers an incentive to owners of tourist accommodation to improve their facilities so that the Province can compete successfully in the international tourist market.

Political Institutions

17. Mr. Michael McNair-Wilson asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what political institutions he is considering to enable the leaders of the political parties in the Province to play a part in its government.

Mr. Tom King: My right hon. Friend the Prime Minister and I made it clear to Unionist leaders on 25 February that the Government wished to talk to the political parties about new arrangements to enable them to play a part in the administration of Northern Ireland. We continue to believe that a widely acceptable devolved government would be the best way of doing so.

Kilroot Power Station

18. Mr. Cash asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on the progress being made on the conversion of Kilroot power station as announced in the House by his predecessor on 22 May 1985.

Dr. Boyson: Work on the conversion of the station has now begun and one of the two generating sets was taken out of service in January. The main contract, valued at some £40 million, for the conversion of the station's boilers, has been agreed with Northern Engineering Industries; and most of the remaining contracts will be let during the course of 1986. The conversion project, which is estimated to cost £112 million at outturn prices, is scheduled to be completed by mid 1989.

Terrorism

20. Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many people have been killed by terrorist action in Northern Ireland in each of the past five years; and, of these numbers, how many were members of the Royal Ulster Constabulary.

Mr. Scott: The information is as follows:

Year	Total Numbers of Deaths	Number of RUC Deaths
1981	84	21
1982	85	12
1983	66	18
1984	53	9
1985	49	23

Deaths caused by the security forces in incidents initiated by terrorist action are not included.

Enterprise Ulster

21. Mr. Hume asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what are the Government's plans for the future of Enterprise Ulster.

Dr. Boyson: The future of Enterprise Ulster is under review in consultation with the board of Enterprise Ulster and other interested parties. No decisions have yet been taken.

Security Statistics

Mr. McNamara asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland whether the security statistics for 1985 are now available, together with details of persons charged with terrorist-type offences and convictions for scheduled offences for the year; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Tom King [pursuant to his reply, 3 February 1986, c. 76]: Yes, the statistics together with those since 1971 are as follows:

Crown Immunity

Mr. Ashley asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will list the categories, and the numbers within them, of institutions, for which he is responsible, for which exemptions are claimed from (a) food hygiene legislation and (b) health and safety legislation on the grounds of Crown immunity; and if he will make it his policy to plan to remove the immunity for the relevant institutions.

Mr. Tom King: Crown immunity from prosecution under food hygiene legislation and health and safety legislation applies to the following institutions for which I am responsible:

Category	Number
Departmental Government Offices	450
Storage buildings	2
Hospitals	86
Other health premises	480
Prisons	7
Training and recruitment establishments	22
Research institutions and laboratories	22

These figures include premises where Crown immunity for food hygiene legislation would apply, but where food sales or preparation are not at present carried out.

Our policy on Crown immunity is to consider every case on its meritts. If we have evidence of inadequate standards in particular circumstances, I shall consider, with colleagues, how best to deal with these circumstances, and this may include a re-appraisal of Crown immunity. It is my intention that Northern Ireland will take similar action to England and Wales in relation to the removal of Crown immunity under the Food Act from health service premises.

There is a difference between food hygiene legislation and health and safety legislation. Whereas the Food Hygiene Regulations do not apply on Crown premises, the Health and Safety at Work (Northern Ireland) Order 1978, for example, does so apply. The Crown is subject to notices similar in purpose to those issued to other bodies under the order and under which specified improvements can be required to be made. The Crown is, of course, immune from prosecution under either set of provisions.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Farming Methods

Sir Richard Body asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list the grants now available for farmers for purposes of improving the environment or using alternative sources of energy.

Mr. Jopling: The grants available under the agriculture improvement scheme are as follows:

Description	Rate of grant
	Basic per cent.	LFA per cent.
Bracken control (other than soil cultivation)	15	30
Dykes—using materials traditional in the locality	30	60
Heather burning—or regenerating by cutting	15	30
Hedges	30	60
Manure stores for poultry (not integral with poultry house)	15	30
Shelter belts (with 50 per cent. or more of broadleaved trees)	30	60
Shelter belts (other)	15	30
Solar heating	15	30
Thermal insulation—agricultural use	15	30

Description	Rate of grant Basic per cent.	LFA per cent.
Walls—using materials traditional in the locality	30	60
Waste disposal (agricultural effluents and waste)	30	60
Wind/water powered pumps and generators	15	30

Purchasing Policy

Mr. Thurnham asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is his policy on the purchases of goods and services for his Department; how he is monitoring its effectiveness; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Jopling: My Department is progressively adopting a more cost-effective purchasing stragegy, based on continuing studies by the internal team and commercial adviser to which I referred in my reply to my hon. Friend of 14 March 1985 at columns 266-7. A full-time professional director of purchasing and supply is now being recruited; organisational and procedural changes designed to raise and sustain purchasing performance are being made; and monitoring techniques are being developed for the purpose of assessing progress towards the April 1987 value for money target prescribed in the Management and Personnel Office report entitled "Government Purchasing".

Crown Immunity

Mr. Ashley asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list the categories, and the numbers within them, of institutions, for which he is responsible, for which exemptions are claimed from (a) food hygiene legislation and (b) health and safety legislation on the grounds of Crown immunity; and if he will make it his policy to plan to remove the immunity for the relevant institutions.

Mr. Jopling: Crown immunity from prosecution under food hygiene legislation and health and safety legislation applies to the following institutions for which I am responsible:

Category by major use	Number
Central departmental offices	13
Regional or local offices	153
Storage buildings	123
Research institutions and laboratories	44

These figures include premises where Crown immunity for food hygiene legislation would apply but where food sales or preparation are not at present carried out.

Our policy on Crown immunity is to consider every case on its merits. If we have evidence of inadequate standards in particular circumstances I shall consider, with colleagues, how best to deal with these circumstances.

EC (Food Sales)

Mr. Teddy Taylor asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what recent special sales of surplus food and wine have been agreed by the management committee of the EEC; and if he will specify the amounts of food and wine and the sale prices, respectively, expressed in pence per pound.

Mr. Gummer: I will reply to my hon. Friend as soon as possible.

Agricultural Development and Advisory Service

Mr. Nicholls asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, pursuant to his reply to the hon. Member for Gillingham (Mr. Couchman) of 7 November 1985, Official Report, column 6, if he is now able to announce further details of the reduction expected in Agricultural Development and Advisory Service posts by the spring of 1987.

Mr. Jopling: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales and I believe that economies and improvements in the efficiency of ADAS are possible which will lead to savings of about 370 ADAS posts and some 80 non-ADAS posts, as foreshadowed in my statement of 7 November. It is envisaged that ADAS posts will be distributed as follows: agriculture service, 107; agricultural science service, 80; land and water service, 37; and the state veterinary service, at most 141. The figure for the veterinary service includes the result of two recent efficiency and organisational studies covering the veterinary investigation service and the organisation of the service at divisional level, which account together for 56 posts. The balance is subject to possible downward adjustment following reassessment of the revenue from certain schemes. Further details for each service have been placed in the Library of the House.

These economies cannot be achieved without redundancies, but every effort will be made to deal sympathetically with the problems of those who are displaced.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

Secondary Schools (Plymouth)

Mr. Fisher asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science when he expects to announce his decision on the proposals submitted by Devon county council for the reorganisation of secondary schools in Plymouth.

Mr. Dunn: My right hon. Friend rejected these proposals on 25 February.

Mr. Fisher asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what representations he has received about the proposals submitted to him by Devon county council for the reorganisation of secondary schools in Plymouth.

Mr. Dunn: My right hon. Friend received two delegations, one from parents and governors of Whitleigh school and the other from the county council, and also met the right hon. Member for Plymouth, Devonport (Dr. Owen), 11 Statutory and 77 non-Statutory proposals were forwarded to him by the Devon local education authority.

Pupils (Achievements)

Mr. Watts asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what information is available to him to compare the achievements of pupils, and the cost of education, in selective and non-selective systems.

Mr. Dunn: Some information on the relative achievements of pupils in selective and non-selective schools is available from research studies, including research into examination results for individual local education authorities published by the Department in "Statistical Bulletin 13/84". Following his announcement in the House on 14 November 1984, at column 697, my right hon. Friend is considering proposals for wider ranging research into the factors affecting performance in schools. Information on costs in individual schools or school systems is not available centrally.

Reading University

Sir Gerard Vaughan asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what level of funding was provided for Reading university by the University Grants Committee between 1978-79 and the last year for which figures are available.

Mr. Walden: The total funding provided by the University Grants Committee to Reading university in the financial years 1978-79 to 1984-85 was as follows. The figures include recurrent, capital and equipment and furniture grant.

1978-79	10,185,279
1979-80	12,225,290
1980-81	15,998,929
1981-82	17,194,224
1982-83	20,309,964
1983-84	21,858,900
1984-85	22,144,510

The figures are not comparable from year to year because of various changes in funding arrangements most notably adjustments made to reflect changes in the level of the home undergraduate tuition fee; provision for redundancy and restructuring costs and the progressive withdrawal from 1980-81 of the subsidy for overseas students.

Sixth Form Education

Mr. Greenway asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what information he has as to the number of pupils in sixth forms at independent schools; what percentage this is of the total number of pupils in sixth forms; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Dunn: In January 1985 there were 66,084 pupils aged 16 years and over in independent schools in England. This represents 17·5 per cent. of all pupils aged 16 and over in maintained secondary and independent schools.

Crown Immunity

Mr. Ashley asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will list the categories, and the numbers within them, of institutions, for which he is responsible, for which exemptions are claimed from (a) food hygiene legislation and (b) health and safety legislation on the grounds of Crown immunity; and if he will make it his policy to plan to remove the immunity for the relevant institutions.

Sir Keith Joseph: Crown immunity from prosecution under food hygiene legislation and health and safety legislation applies to the following premises for which I am responsible:

Category	Number
Central departmental offices	2
Regional and local offices	46

These figures include premises where Crown immunity for food hygiene legislation would apply, but where food sales or preparation are not at present carried out.

Our policy on Crown immunity is to consider every case on its merits. If we have evidence of inadequate standards in particular circumstances, I will consider, with colleagues, how best to deal with these circumstances. This may, as in the case of hospital catering, lead to a reappraisal of Crown immunity.

Teachers' Unions (Membership)

Sir Geoffrey Finsberg asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will give the latest figures available to him for the membership of the National Union of Teachers and the Professional Association of Teachers, respectively, and indicate how many seats on the Burnham committee each of these bodies has.

Sir Keith Joseph: The gross membership of the National Union of Teachers and the Professional Association of Techers in December 1984 (the latest date for which I have figures for both unions) was 258,440 and 27,722 respectively. I have no later figure for the NUT, but I understand that the PAT's current gross membership is about 42,000. The NUT has 13 seats and the PAT one seat on the Burnham primary and secondary committee.

Teachers (Convictions)

Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science how his Department tackles the problem arising from teachers convicted or charged with (a) sexual offences and (b) other offences against young persons.

Mr. Chris Patten: The Education (Teachers) Regulations 1982 (S.I. 1982/106) empower my right hon. Friend to bar or restrict the employment as teachers or workers with young people of persons determined by him to be unsuitable for such employment on grounds of their misconduct (whether or not evidenced by a conviction of a criminal offence). The procedures for dealing with such cases are described in the Department's "Administrative Memorandum 3/82", a copy of which is in the Library.

Schoolchildren (Bussing and Fare Arrangements)

Mr. Freud asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science (1) whether he will list his powers in respect of the bussing and fare arrangements of schoolchildren within and between local education authorities;

(2) what representations he has received in respect of the fare and bussing arrangements of children within and between local education authorities over the last year;

(3) what advice has been given by his Department to local education authorities in respect of their bussing and fare arrangements within and between local education authorities;

(4) if he will seek powers to co-ordinate policies in respect of bussing and fares for children travelling to school within and between local education authorities; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Dunn: No such representations or advice have been received or given. My right hon. Friend has certain powers under section 55(1) of the Education Act 1944 and section 31 of the Education Act 1980, which may be relevant to the hon. Member's questions. My right hon. Friend does not intend to seek the powers suggested by the hon. Member.

GCSE

Mr. Freud asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether he will make a statement on the proposed merit and distinction awards for general certificate of secondary education candidates.

Mr. Chris Patten: My right hon. Friend announced on 14 November last year, at column 269, in reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Norwich, North (Mr. Thompson) that we intend to bring forward for consultation revised proposals for GCSE distinction and merit certificates and that it will therefore not be practicable for these to be introduced in 1988, the first year in which GCSE certificates will be awarded.

Mr. Freud asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science when he expects the proposed grade-related criteria for the general certificate of secondary education to be introduced.

Mr. Chris Patten: The Secondary Examinations Council will be considering the responses to the draft grade criteria proposals in 10 subjects which it sent out for consultation in October last year. My right hon. Friend expects the Secondary Examinations Council to advise him on when it might be practicable to introduce grade criteria in particular subjects.

Mr. Freud asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science how many schools have not yet received specimen examination papers for the general certificate of secondary education; and when he expects all schools to have received such papers.

Mr. Chris Patten: This information is not available to the Department. Draft GCSE syllabuses in many subjects have been available for some months. The Secondary Examinations Council announced on 18 February that 76 GCSE syllabuses had been approved and that it was on course to approve all syllabuses for which it was responsible by 30 April 1986. Other syllabuses fall to be approved by the GCSE examining groups, which will be concerned to make all approved syllabuses available to schools as quickly as possible.

Students (Statistics)

Mr. Frank Field asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science how many students, other than those following teacher training courses, were in (a) church colleges and (b) other higher education colleges and polytechnics for each year since 1975.

Mr. Walden: The numbers of all year enrolments for 1978-1984 are given in the table. Corresponding data for the years 1975, 1976 and 1977 are not readily available in this form.

Students on Non-Teacher Training Courses: England

1983	16,000	341,800
1984	16,000	349,100

Capital Expenditure

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will list in the Official Report the size of bids made by each local authority for capital expenditure in each of the last five years, together with the amounts finally granted, expressed at (a) outturn prices, (b) 1984-85 prices and (c) the percentage relationship of bid to allocation.

Mr. Dunn: This information could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

University Grants Committee

Mr. Dalyell asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science (1) what are the terms of reference of the review by Lord Croham of the University Grants Committee; when its report is expected to be completed; if it will be published; and if he will make a statement;

(2) if he has any plans to strengthen the role and powers of the University Grants Committee; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Walden: The terms of reference of the review of the UGC, as originally announced on 25 July last, at column 641, are:

> To review, within the context of expected developments in higher education, the University Grants Committee's constitutional position and role in relation to the Government and to the universities, its membership, its internal structure and working methods, and its secretariat.

Since then, as my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Scotland announced on 9 December last, at columns 460-61, the review committee has also been asked to consider, in relation to its existing terms of reference, the implications of adopting the recommendations of the Scottish Tertiary Education Advisory Council (Cmnd. 9676) concerning the planning and funding of higher education in Scotland having regard in particular to the concern expressed in the STEAC report that continued access by the Scottish universities to a United Kingdom based peer review system would be desirable.

The committee has been asked to report in the autumn of 1986. The committee's report will be published. I am sending the hon. Member a copy of a letter from my right hon. Friend to the chairman of the committee, Lord Croham, which was published on 17 September last.

My right hon. Friends will consider the role and functions of the UGC in the light of the report of the review committee when it is available.

TRANSPORT

Commissioners of Irish Lights

Mr. John David Taylor asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list the names of the commissioners of Irish Lights and identify which come from Northern Ireland, Great Britain and the Republic of Ireland respectively.

Mr. Ridley: I understand that the commissioners are:

L. D. G. Collen, BA, MAI, FIEI
V. A. Cooke, OBE, MA, FIMechE, DL
H. P. Coveney, FRICS, TD
The Hon. T. R. V. Dixon, MBE, DL
J. Gore-Grimes, BA, LLB
P. H. Greer, MAI, FIEE, FIEI
J. H. Guinness (Chairman)
J. P. Jameson
Rt. Hon. Lord Mayor Ald. J. Tunney TD
M. W. S. Maclaran, BA
M. Manning, TD
Rt. Hon. The Earl of Meath
Commodore L. S. Moloney
M. O'Halloran
M. A. O'Neill
Richie Ryan, MEP
J. Stafford
T. Sheppard
R. R. Stewart, MA
Captain A. C. Tupper, DSC, RN (Vice-Chairman)

I do not appoint the commissioners. I do not have the information as to which country they "come from"—which is itself an imprecise question.

Air Services (Liberalisation)

Mr. Cockeram asked the Secretary of State for Transport what initiatives his Department is taking to seek to liberalise air services on international long-haul routes and particularly routes to the Far East.

Mr. Michael Spicer: The Government's policy was set out in the White Paper "Airline Competition Policy", which my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State presented to Parliament in October 1984. In accordance with this policy my Department is seeking to liberalise air services wherever possible—where foreign competition is fair and Britain's interests are not prejudiced.

Lockheed Aircraft Co.

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Secretary of State for Transport whether he has held discussions with representatives of the Lockheed Aircraft Company about industrial development on any airport in Britain by that company.

Mr. Michael Spicer: No.

Vehicles (Construction and Use Regulations)

Mr. Thornton asked the Secretary of State for Transport whether vehicles which have an EEC type approval certificate are required to conform with United Kingdom construction and use regulations.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: There is no European Community type approval scheme for complete motor vehicles. Directives specify requirements for individual vehicles systems or components. Vehicles having systems or components which are certified as complying with the requirements of a directive are exempt, as far as those systems or components are concerned, from comparable construction requirements in the Motor Vehicles (Construction and Use) Regulations 1978. Vehicle users are not, however, exempt from the obligation to ensure that their vehicles are maintained in good and efficient working order.

Roads (London)

Mr. Stuart Holland asked the Secretary of State for Transport when he intends to publish the consultants' reports on road improvement to London's major road network, including the south circular and the link between Shepherd's Bush and Cheyne walk.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Consultants are carrying out assessment studies for us on the traffic related problems in four traffic corridors of London. I hope to be able to publish their reports later this year as a first step towards considering what measures would be appropriate. Work is also proceeding on the examination of a possible relief road for the Earls Court one-way system. It is too early to say when this might produce results.

Mr. Stuart Holland asked the Secretary of State for Transport whether his Department has asked for road improvements for cyclists and pedestrians to be included in London boroughs' current transport and TPP submissions.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Our forthcoming circular to local authorities about their transport policies and programme submissions will, like last year's circular, encourage them to continue to provide facilities for cyclists and to enhance pedestrian safety.

Mr. Stuart Holland asked the Secretary of State for Transport whether his Department's cost-benefit analysis for road improvements will be extended to include assessment of accident savings to pedestrians and cyclists.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The accident rates, severities and costs used in the Department's cost-benefit analysis for road improvements already include pedestrian and cyclist casualties. The assessment of the benefits of switching traffic from a road through a built-up area to a bypass include any benefits arising from reduced pedestrian and cyclist casualties.

Cycle Schemes

Mr. Stuart Holland asked the Secretary of State for Transport whether his Department will be willing to take over the funding of cycle schemes designed by the Greater London council cycle project team.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: No. It will be for boroughs to decide what is appropriate in their areas.

Mr. Stuart Holland asked the Secretary of State for Transport what plans his Department has for replacing the work of the Greater London council's cycle project team.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: London boroughs are already responsible for road safety in their areas. That will apply to the roads they take over from the GLC on 1 April. The Department will continue to provide information, help and advice to local authorities in developing practical measures to help cyclists.

Mr. Stuart Holland asked the Secretary of State for Transport whether he will make separate funds available for cycle schemes on major and minor roads of an innovatory and non-innovatory nature.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Special funds are already available from the Department for suitable innovatory cycle schemes. Purely local schemes are the responsibility of the local highway authorities along with their other traffic and road safety measures and funded in the same way.

Channel Tunnel

Mr. Speed asked the Secretary of State for Transport if it is intended that pedal cycles, motor cycles and three wheel powered vehicles will be carried on the Channel tunnel shuttle trains at reduced fares.

Mr. David Mitchell: It is for the Channel Tunnel Group—France-Manche to decide on tariff levels and on the categories of vehicle to be carried by the shuttle trains.

Railways (Manchester)

Mr. Arnold asked the Secretary of State for Transport what proposals he has received from the British Railways board for the discontinuance of railway passenger services in the Greater Manchester area in the last 12 months; and what response he has made in each case.

Mr. David Mitchell: None.

Autocrime

Mr. Brandon-Bravo asked the Secretary of State for Transport what measures are proposed to help combat the international trade in stolen vehicles.

Mr. Michael Spicer: My Department has recently concluded an agreement with the registration authorities of the Federal Republic of Germany for the bilateral exchange of information about used vehicles which are imported or exported between the two countries.

From 1 March, motorists with West German registered vehicles seeking to registr them in Britain will need to surrender their West German registration documents. These will be cancelled and returned to the Federal Republic for checks to identify stolen vehicles and forged documents. A similar scheme will be introduced from the same date for British registered vehicles entering West Germany.

These arrangements will not only help to limit the movement of stolen vehicles between the two countries, but will improve the accuracy of the records held at the Driver and Vehicle Licensing Centre.

Negotiations with other European countries for similar agreements are now in hand and I shall be making further announcements in due course.

Crown Immunity

Mr. Ashley asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list the categories, and numbers within them, of institutions, for which he is responsible, in respect of which exemptions are claimed from (a) food hygiene legislation and (b) health and safety legislation on the grounds of Crown immunity; and if he will make it his policy to plan to remove the immunity for the relevant institutions.

Mr. Ridley: Crown immunity from prosecution under food hygiene legislation and health and safety legislation applies to the following institutions-premises for which I am responsible.

Category	Number
Headquarters London offices	10
Regional and local offices	710
Storage buildings	25
Training establishments	1
Research establishments	4
Coastguard lookout posts/cottages	625
	1,375

These figures include premises where Crown immunity for food hygiene legislation would apply but where food sales or preparation are not at present carried out.

I have no plans for changing the situation.

WALES

Welsh Water Authority

Mr. Wigley asked the Secretary of State for Wales what account he took of future capital expenditure financed from revenues of the Welsh water authority in determining the authority's external financing limit for 1986-87.

Mr. Mark Robinson: In determining the Welsh water authority's external financing limit for 1986-87 my right hon. Friend took full account of the authority's proposed capital expenditure plans and the internal resources available to fund them.

Labour Statistics

Mr. Barry Jones asked the Secretary of State for Wales what is the number of people in Wales (a) under the age of 30 years, (b) under the age of 40 years and (c) over the age of 40 years who have been unemployed for one year or more.

Mr. Nicholas Edwards: In January 1985 there were 32,399 people in Wales under 30 years of age who had been unemployed for over 52 weeks. The corresponding figures for those aged over 30 but less than 40, and those aged 40 and over, were 17,197 and 28,418 respectively.

Crown Immunity

Mr. Ashley asked the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the categories, and numbers within them, of institutions, for which he is responsible, in respect of which exemptions are claimed (a) food hygiene legislation and (b) health and safety legislation on the grounds of Crown immunity; and if he will make it his policy to plan to remove the immunity for the relevant institutions.

Mr. Nicholas Edwards: Crown immunity from prosecution under food hygiene legislation and health and safety legislation applies to the following institutions-premises for which I am responsible.

Category	Number
Central departmental offices	1
Regional or local offices	44
Storage buildings	6
Hospitals and other health premises	*175
Research institutions and laboratories†	5

* Approximate
† Not forming part of institutions included above

These figures include premises where Crown immunity from food hygiene legislation would apply but where food sales or preparation are not at present carried out. It would be possible to identify such premises separately only at disproportionate cost.

The right hon. Gentleman will be aware of Government plans to legislate to remove Crown immunity under the Food Hygiene Regulations from health authorities. Our policy on Crown immunity is to consider every case on its merits. If we have evidence of inadequate standards in particular circumstances, I shall consider, with colleagues, how best to deal with these circumstances.

Homesteading

Mr. Steen asked the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement as to the number of units homesteaded in Wales in each of the last five years.

Mr. Mark Robinson: Although homesteading is one of the housing options available in Wales, local authorities have not applied for any such schemes during the last five years.

Trawsfynydd Power Station

Mr. D. E. Thomas asked the Secretary of State for Wales (1) what radioactive substances were discharged into the atmosphere from Trawsfynydd nuclear power station on 21 February;

(2) what were the environmental consequences of the incident at Trawsfynydd nuclear power station on 21 February; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mark Robinson: It is estimated that 15 tonnes of carbon dioxide were released containing small amounts of sulphur 35, tritium, manganese 56 and cobolt 60.

Apart from one speck of contaminated material found during monitoring off site, samples taken to date reveal no unusual activity. Further sampling off site continues.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Crown Immunity

Mr. Ashley asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list the categories, and the numbers within them, of institutions, for which he is responsible, for which exemptions are claimed from (a) food hygiene legislation and (b) health and safety legislation on the grounds of Crown immunity; and if he will make it his policy to plan to remove the immunity for the relevant institutions.

Mr. Eggar: Crown immunity from prosecution under food hygiene legislation and health and safety legislation applies to the following institutions-premises for which my right hon. and learned Friend is responsible:

Category	Number
Central departmental offices	19
Regional and local offices	14
Storage buildings	2
Research institutions	9
Training establishments	1

These figures include premises where Crown immunity from food hygiene legislation would apply, but where food sales or preparation are not at present carried out.

Our policy on Crown immunity is to consider every case on its own merits. If we have evidence of inadequate standards in particular circumstances, we shall consider, with colleagues, how best to deal with these circumstances.

Paraguay

Mr. Wallace asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will give the programme for the Paraguayan Foreign Minister's visit to Britain from 4 to 7 March.

Mr. Eggar: I shall arrange for a copy of the programme, which will be printed shortly, to be sent to the hon. Member as soon as it is available.

BBC External Services

Mr. Hanley asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what action the Government have taken on the Report of the review of the BBC external services which was published on 4 February 1985.

Mr. Eggar: We have had intensive discussions with the BBC since the report was published in February 1985. A wide measure of agreement has been reached with the BBC on the report's recommendations, including agreement on the central proposal for multi-annual funding. The Government believe that the report provides a firm foundation for the future development of the external services and that implementation of the report's recommendations, on which considerable progress has already been made, will lead to real improvements in the efficiency and economy with which the external services are run.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Chief Police Officers

Mr. Soley asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his reply of 10 February, Official Report, column 314, how many times he met the presidents of the Association of Chief Police Officers between March 1984 and March 1985.

Mr. Giles Shaw: A precise record is not available, but it is thought that my right hon. and learned Friend the then Home Secretary may have met the two chief constables who were successively president of ACPO between 10 and 20 times during the year in question.

Police Complaints Procedure

Mr. Pike asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what entitlement a complainant under the police complaints procedure has to see the report of the police on the substance of his or her complaint.

Mr. Giles Shaw: Complainants are informed of the outcome of an investigation of a complaint — for example, whether or not criminal or disciplinary charges have been preferred. In cases where the investigation has been supervised by the Police Complaints Authority the authority is required, where practicable, to send the complainant a copy of its statement indicating whether or not it is satisfied with the conduct of the investigation and of any respects in which it is not so satisfied. There is no entitlement for complainants to be shown the report itself of the police investigation into their complaint, and the courts have accepted the importance of protecting the confidentiality of information offered in the course of such an inquiry.

Animals (Experiments)

Mr. Thurnham asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what has been the trend in LD50 tests as a percentage of all acute toxicity tests since 1977; and if it remains his policy that LD50 tests will continue to be monitored closely.

Mr. Mellor: Information on the numbers of LD50 tests carried out is not available as LD50 tests are not identified separately from other acute toxicity tests in the current returns on statistics of experiments performed on living animals. However, the total number of acute toxicity tests has fallen by nearly 30 per cent. between 1977 and 1984, and it is likely that the number of LD50 tests fell at an even faster rate. Scientific opinion is moving in the direction of even further reductions in the number of LD50 tests, and the Government encourage their replacement by other forms of toxicity test wherever possible. It remains the policy of my right hon. Friend to monitor closely the use of animals in acute toxicity testing. It is our intention that the new statistical return we shall introduce to reflect the new system of controls in the Animals (Scientific Procedures) Bill will identify LD50 tests separately. The project licensing system proposed under the Bill will substantially extend my right hon. Friend's control over the number of these tests.

Police Establishments

Mr. Coombs asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what are the establishments and actual strengths of each police force in England and Wales at the latest available dates; and if he will express both as proportions of the population of each country.

Mr. Giles Shaw: The information is as follows:

Police Force	Authorised Establishment on 31 December 1985	Strength on 31 December 1985	Population of force area (Mid-1984)	Population per officer Based on Establishment	Based on Strength

Prison Officers

Mr. Tom Cox asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department why his Department is again looking into the possibilities of alternative shift patterns for prison officers; when his Department last looked at this matter; and what was the outcome of that review.

Mr. Mellor: The Prison Department is looking into the possibilities of alternative shift patterns because it believes that the present systems do not lead to the most effective and efficient deployment of prison officers. A draft common working agreement between the Prison Department and the Prison Officers Association was finalised in November 1982 after a lengthy period of negotiation. In 1984 the department concluded, after local consultations about its application at each Prison Department establishment, that the draft agreement did not meet the requirements of the prison service for the best possible use of its staff.

Police Establishments

Mr. Coombs asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what are the figures for the authorised establishment of the Wiltshire constabulary for the years 1983 to 1986; what was the actual strength of the force in each year; and if he will express both figures as a proportion of the population of the county.

Mr. Giles Shaw: The information is as follows:

Wiltshire Constabulary

On 31 December	Authorised Establishment	Strength	Population of force area	Population per officer Based on Establishment	Based on Strength
1983	1,042	1,030	528,000	507	513
1984	1,042	1,029	532,000	511	517
1985	1,045	1,028	536,000	513	521

Prisoners (Bail)

Mr. Tom Cox asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many prisoners sent to prison on remand, have been granted bail after having been in prison for less than 48 hours, one week, two weeks, three weeks and four weeks in 1985.

Mr. Mellor: The information requested is not recorded centrally.

Prisons (Race Relations Officers)

Mr. Tom Cox asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the number of race relations liaison officers employed in prisons in the United Kingdom; what training they are given, and by whom; and if their employment in this position is full-time.

Mr. Mellor: All prison service establishments in England and Wales have designated at least one member of staff as race relations liaison officer. Formal training is provided in a specialist residential course of two weeks' duration run by the prison service college. There are no full-time liaison officer posts.

Prisoners (Money)

Mr. Tom Cox asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the policy of his Department as to the transfer of money belonging to a prisoner when a prisoner is moved to another prison; and what is the average time that it takes for such money to be transferred.

Mr. Mellor: Any money due to an inmate who is being transferred is normally forwarded to the new establishment, usually by first-class post, on the day of transfer. No central record is kept of the time taken to transfer such moneys and this information could be obtained only at disproportionate cost. If the hon. Member has a particular case in mind, I would be glad to look into it.

Prisons (Paper Work)

Mr. Tom Cox asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what action is being taken by his Department to reduce the amount of duplicated paper work in prisons.

Mr. Mellor: All staff concerned have been encouraged to make a special and conscious effort to reduce the demand for photocopying to the minimum necessary for the effective discharge of business. If the hon. Member has any particular matter in mind I shall be glad to look into it.

Immigration

Mr. Cohen asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether it is his intention to expand the categories of persons eligible for settlement listed in paragraph 133 of the immigration rules to include further categories; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waddington: We have no such intention at present, but we have undertaken to consider an amendment to add to the categories listed in paragraph 133 of the immigration rules when a suitable opportunity arises.

Mr. Cohen asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many persons in each of the categories listed in paragraph 133 (a) to (f) of the immigration rules have been refused settlement in each of the last 10 years, showing for each category the grounds for refusal.

Mr. Waddington: Such information could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Janner asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many stops were effected in immigration cases by Members of the House of Lords in the last five years for which figures are available.

Mr. Waddington: Relevant information is available only for Heathrow, terminal 3 and refers to those cases where removal is deferred following refusal of leave to enter. This information is as follows:

	Number
1981	66
1982	54
1983	60
1984	38
1985	25

Mr. Janner asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what discussions his Department had with representatives of immigration officers or their unions prior to or during the preparation of the draft guidelines on the handling of representations by Members in immigration cases.

Mr. Waddington: I met members of the executive committee of the Immigration Service Union at their request on 17 October 1985. They expressed concern at the increase in operational pressures which had occurred last year, including the increase in the number of cases attracting representations from right hon. and hon. Members. Officials of the Home Office have also had meetings with representatives both of the Immigration Service Union and the Society of Civil and Public Servants (Immigration Branch), which also represents some immigration officers, when the increase in the number of cases attracting representations was also discussed.

Both unions were sent copies of the draft guidelines after they had been placed in the Library on 11 February; neither was consulted about the draft guidelines before that date.

Crown Immunity

Mr. Kirkwood asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he has any plans to abolish Crown immunity in prison hospitals.

Mr. Mellor: No.

Mr. Ashley asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the categories, and the numbers within them, of institutions, for which he is responsible, for which exemptions are claimed from (a) food hygiene legislation and (b) health and safety legislation on the grounds of Crown immunity; and if he will make it his policy to plan to remove the immunity for the relevant institutions.

Mr. Mellor: Crown immunity from prosecution under food hygiene legislation and health and safety legislation applies to the following institutions for which we are responsible:

	Number
Central departmental offices	11
Regional offices	147
Storage buildings	39
Prisons	121
Training and recruitment establishments	15
Research institutions and laboratories	12

Our policy on Crown immunity is to consider each category of institution on its own merits. If we have evidence of inadequate standards in particular circumstances, we shall consider how best to deal with them.

Metropolitan Police (Civilian Personnel)

Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many civilians are employed in police control rooms in the Metropolitan area; what grades and rates of pay apply to those on operational duties; and what similar information he has for other police forces.

Mr. Giles Shaw: I understand that there are 51 civilians employed in Metropolitan police control rooms —31 clerical officers, 12 specialist teleprinter operators and eight wireless telegraphists. Their rates of pay are as follows:

Clerical Officer
Junior scale £3,149 (age 16)—£4,371 (age 20)
Main scale £4,800—£6,293

Specialist Teleprinter Operator
Junior scale £3,274 (age 16)—£4,970 (age 21)
Main scale £5,384—£7,077

Wireless Telegraphist
£6,431—£8,018

Each grade receives in addition a 20 per cent. shift disturbance allowance and, where appropriate, London weighting allowance.

Comparable information for other police forces in England and Wales is not readily available centrally and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost. The employment of police civilians on particular duties is a matter for decision locally following consultations between the police authority, the chief officer of police and the staff associations. The pay and conditions of service of police civilians in these forces are negotiated in the national joint council for local authorities' administrative, professional, technical and clerical services, in which central Government have no locus.

Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the total number of civilians employed in the Metropolitan police; if he will give a breakdown between main functions; and what similar information he has for other police forces.

Mr. Giles Shaw: On 31 December 1985 there were 12,680 full-time and 917 part-time members of the Metropolitan police civil staff. The civil staff who operate in support of the police encompass a wide range of disciplines, specialisms and skills. They include administrative, professional, technical, clerical and industrial staff.

On 31 December 1985 there were 23,457 full-time and 5,197 part-time civilian staff in police forces outside the Metropolitan police in England and Wales. The range of work on which they are employed is similar to that in the Metropolitan police.

Appendix 7 to the annual published report of Her Majesty's Chief Inspector of Constabulary shows the numbers of full-time and part-time civilian staff in the categories clerical, technical and domestic, in each police force in England and Wales other than the Metropolitan police.

News International Plant, Wapping

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will call for a report from the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis as to whether officers from the special patrol group have been deployed during the present police operation at the News International plant in Wapping.

Mr. Giles Shaw: I understand from the Commissioner that officers of the special patrol group were deployed at Wapping on 13 and 15 February.

Housing (Fire Escapes)

Mr. Hayward asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he expects to pubish national guidance on means of escape from fire in houses in multiple occupation.

Mr. Hurd: In conjunction with the Department of the Environment and the Welsh Office, my Department has prepared draft guidance setting out a national advisory standard for means of escape from fire and related fire safety measures in certain houses in multiple occupation to aid consultation between housing and fire authorities required under housing legislation. Copies of the draft guide, on which written comments are invited by 11 April 1986 are being sent to the local authority associations and to other interested bodies and individuals. Copies have also been placed in the Library. Further copies can be obtained on request in writing from the Home Office Fire and Emergency Planning Department, Room 916, 50 Queen Anne's Gate, London SW1H 9AT. Subject to the outcome of the consultation exercise, my right. hon. Friends and I hope to be able to publish the final version of the guide during 1986.

SCOTLAND

Mr. Ashley asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the categories; and the numbers within them, of institutions, for which he is responsible, for which exemptions are claimed from (a) food hygiene legislation and (b) health and safety legislation on the grounds of Crown immunity; and if he will make it his policy to plan to remove the immunity for the relevant institutions.

Mr. John MacKay: Crown immunity from prosecution under food hygiene legislation and health and safety legislation applies to the following institutions—premises for which my right hon. and learned Friend is responsible:

	Number
Central departmental offices	142
Hospitals and other health premises	500
Courts	52
Penal establishments	20
Training establishments	2
Research institutions and laboratories	8
Historic Buildings and Monuments	332
Colleges of education and central institutions	20
Museum, gallery, library, botanic garden and civil defence premises	7

These figures include premises where Crown immunity for food hygiene legislation would apply, but where food sales or preparation are not at present carried out.

Our policy on Crown immunity is to consider every case on its merits. If we have evidence of inadequate standards in particular circumstances, my right hon. and learned Friend will consider, with colleagues, how best to deal with these circumstances. In the case of hospital catering, my right hon. and learned Friend has recently announced the proposed removal of Crown immunity.

Scottish Universities (Funding)

Mr. Dalyell asked the Secretary of State for Scotland which organisations and individuals he proposes to consult on the recommendations of the Scottish tertiary education advisory committee for the future funding of Scottish universities; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Allan Stewart: The answer given by my right hon. Friend the Member for Ayr (Mr. Younger) to my hon. Friend the Member for Cunninghame, North (Mr. Corrie) on Monday 9 December 1985, at column 460, contained an open invitation to interested parties to submit comments on the Scottish Tertiary Education Advisory Council's report by Thursday 27 March 1986. In addition, the Scottish Education Department wrote on Tuesday 10 December to the following organisations:

Mr. Dalyell asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what mechanism is proposed for the consideration of representations about the recommendations of the Scottish Tertiary Education Advisory Council in relation to the future funding of Scottish universities; by what date such representations need to be submitted in order to be taken into account in any decisions reached on the subject; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Allan Stewart: Decisions on the recommendations of the Scottish Tertiary Education Advisory Council in relation to the future arrangements for the funding of Scottish universities will be taken by my right hon. and learned Friend in consultation with his Cabinet colleagues. Comments on the recommendations have been sought by Tuesday 27 March 1986.

Mr. Dalyell asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he has solicited or proposes to solicit the views of Scottish universities about the recommendations of the Scottish Tertiary Education Advisory Council in relation to the future funding of Scottish universities; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Allan Stewart: The Scottish universities have been consulted on the recommendations of the Scottish Tertiary Education Advisory Council and my right hon. and learned Friend and I await their response with interest.

Housing

Dr. Godman asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what grants have been allocated by his Department to the Inverclyde district council in each of the past five years for housing improvement projects: and what spending constraints have been imposed on Inverclyde district council during the past five years.

Mr. Ancram [pursuant to his reply, 26 February 1986, c. 590]: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave him on 28 January. The amounts spent on the improvement of the council's own housing stock and on improvement and repairs grants to the private sector are dependent on the council's own priorities for expenditure within the HRA and non-HRA capital expenditure blocks respectively. The Government contribute towards the costs incurred by local authorities in giving private sector improvement and repairs grants. The amounts so contributed in the case of Inverclyde district council during the past five years were as follows:

	Improvement	Repairs	Total
1981-82	256,446	25,868	282,314
1982-83	327,774	89,092	416,866
1983-84	470,573	617,257	1,087,830
1984-85	690,415	383,605	1,074,020
1985-86	629,163	651,460	1,280,623
	2,374,371	1,767,282	4,141,653

DEFENCE

Royal Marines

Mr. Beith asked the Secretary of State for Defence what is the current minimum height requirement for recruitment to the Royal Marines.

Mr. Lee: The minimum height requirement for Royal Marine officers is 165 centimetres and for Royal Marine other ranks varies from 154·9 centimetres to 165·1 centimetres according to the branch and whether or not the junior entry is involved. Full details for officers and ranks are published in career regulations which are available at careers information offices.

Science Studentships

Mr. Dalyell asked the Secretary of State for Defence what Scottish secondary educational qualifications are required for those seeking science studentships funded by his Department.

Mr. Lee: The MOD student scientist scheme provides pre-recruitment sponsorship of undergraduates who may, on graduation, be appointed as Civil Servants in the science class. In Scotland, the minimum secondary educational qualifications required for such sponsorships are three higher Scottish certificates of education in relevant subjects.

Crown Immunity

Mr. Ashley asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the categories, and the numbers within them, of institutions, for which he is responsible, for which exemptions are claimed from (a) food hygiene legislation and (b) health and safety legislation on the grounds of Crown immunity; and if he will make it his policy to plan to remove the immunity for the relevant institutions.

Mr. Lee: Crown immunity from prosecution under food legislation and health and safety legislation applies to the following MOD institutions-premises:

Category	Number
Headquarters departmental offices	23
Other office locations	44
Military locations (which may in some cases contain several establishments)	*1,000
Hospitals	8
Rehabilitation centres	1
Dockyards	2
Factories	2
Research and development establishments†	7

* Approximate.
† But buildings and satellites are spread over 45 locations.

These figures include premises where Crown immunity for food hygiene legislation would apply but where food sales or preparation are not at present carried out. It is MOD policy that catering establishments on its premises should meet the hygiene standards laid down in the regulations and to this end there is a stringent system of in-house inspections to ensure that standards are met. The MOD is not exempt from the Health and Safety At Work etc Act 1974, although it is immune from prosecution under that Act. It is MOD policy to ensure compliance with the legislation and to achieve standards at least as high as those required by law. However, certain exemptions from inspection under the Act are sometimes obtained on the grounds of operational necessity and national security. If I have evidence of inadequate standards in particular circumstances I shall certainly consider how best to deal with them.

Ulster Defence Regiment

Mr. McNamara asked the Secretary of State for Defence (1) whether (a) full-time or (b) part-time members of the Ulster Defence Regiment are permitted to be members of the Ulster clubs;

(2) whether (a) full-time and (b) part-time members of the Ulster Defence Regiment are permitted also to be members of the Orange Order;

(3) whether (a) full-time or (b) part-time members of the Ulster Defence Regiment are permitted also to be members of the Ulster Defence Association.

Mr. Lee: In the same way as other members of the armed forces, all UDR personnel are required to observe the restrictions on political activity laid down in Queen's Regulations and the UDR regulations. These preclude taking an active part in the affairs of any political organisation or party. Members are also required to avoid involvement in any activity which could bring the regiment into disrepute.

Mr. McNamara asked the Secretary of State for Defence whether he will publish in the Official Report the procedures followed by his Department following a complaint by a member of the public against a member or members of the Ulster Defence Regiment in the performance of their duties.

Mr. Lee: The procedure for investigating complaints from members of the public concerning the behaviour of any member of Her Majesty's forces in Northern Ireland including the UDR, is described in a recently produced information leaflet which is widely available from RUC stations and Army units. A copy of this leaflet has been placed in the Library.

Mr. McNamara asked the Secretary of State for Defence how many complaints his Department received of conduct of members of the Ulster Defence Regiment by battalion operating area, indicating which area, for each of the last five years, and indicating how many led to disciplinary action against the member of the Ulster Defence Regiment involved and what action was taken.

Mr. Lee: The information is not available in the form requested. However, available records show that in 1985 the number of complaints received against UDR personnel accused of misconduct of a non-criminal nature, broken down into individual battalions, was as follows:

	Number of Complaints
1/9 UDR	3
2 UDR	1
3 UDR	8
4 UDR	13
5 UDR	0
6 UDR	1
7/10 UDR	9
8 UDR	2
11 UDR	4

ENVIRONMENT

"Competition in the Provision of Local Services"

Mr. Franks asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what plans he has to bring forward legislation following consultation on the White Paper "Competition in the Provision of Local Services".

Mrs. Rumbold: It remains the Government's intention to extend compulsory competition and separate accounting to a wider range of local authority services as soon as a legislative opportunity becomes available.

Manchester (Rate Support Grant)

Mr. Silvester asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the rate support grant paid or to be paid to Manchester in each of the years from 1976-77 to 1986-87, inclusive, in real terms.

Mrs. Rumbold: The rate support grant figures for the metropolitan district of Manchester are shown below in constant 1984-85 prices:

	£ million 1984-85 prices
(1) 1976-77 to 1980-81
1976-77	183·4
1977-78	176·4
1978-79	179·4
1979-80	171·0
1980-81	168·8
(2) 1981-82 to 1986-87
1981-82	134·3
1982-83	108·2
1983-84	105·8
1984-85	96·0
1985-86	93·8
1986-87	*98·7

* Settlement estimate.

The figures for 1976-77 to 1980-81 are not comparable with those for 1981-82 to 1986-87 because:

(i) they comprise the needs, resources and domestic elements whereas from 1981-82 onwards the figures comprise block grant and domestic rate relief grant;

(ii) grant in support of services provided by metropolitan county councils was paid to the districts up to 1980-81 and to the counties thereafter.

The 1986-87 figure includes block grant in respect of responsibilities inherited from the Greater Manchester metropolitan county council.

The figures for 1976-77 to 1982-83 are final entitlements; for 1983-84 and 1984-85, domestic rate relief grant entitlements are final but block grant entitlements are provisional; for 1985-86 and 1986-87 block grant entitlements are based respectively on the council's budget and the expenditure estimate used for the rate support grant settlement, and domestic rate relief grant entitlements are also provisional.

The figures have been expressed in constant prices by using the GDP deflator.

Special Development Orders

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Secretary of State for the Environment how many special development orders have been granted in the five years to January; and how many of these were given in respect of public limited companies.

Mr. Tracey: Since January 1981, eight special development orders have been made in England. Unless a planning permission provides otherwise, it runs with the land. None of the permissions granted by these orders is confined to specified public limited companies.

Council House Building

Mr. Thornton asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list for each London borough (a) the total starts and completions of council dwellings between 1979 and 1984, (b) the total sales of council dwellings between 1979 and 1984 and (c) the recorded levels of homelessness in each borough in 1979 and 1984.

Sir George Young: The numbers of house building starts and completions reported by each of the London boroughs for 1979 appear in issue 59 of "London Housing Statistics", for the years 1980 to 1983 in issue 73 and for 1984 in issue 74. Reported numbers of households accepted as homeless during 1979 are in issue 54 and during 1984 in issues 72 and 74. Copies of these publications are in the Library.

Following are the total sales of council dwellings reported by authorities in London for the period April 1979 to March 1985:

Total sales of council dwellings in London April 1979 to March 1985

Royal Parks (Motor Vehicles)

Sir John Biggs-Davison asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will state the numbers of motor vehicles and motor cycles officially used in royal parks and for what purposes; and how their numbers and functions compare with those of 1966 and 1976.

Mr. Tracey: Figures are not available for years before 1976. The numbers of official motor vehicles and motor cycles used in the royal parks in 1976 and 1986 are set out below, together with their broad functions. The figures do not include the Metropolitan police vehicles used for policing Hyde park.

	1976	1986
Parks vehicles
Estate cars/cars for management staff	9	15
Small vans for carriage of personnel and small tools	16	9
Lorries for carriage of large loads/machinery	17	23

Rate Support Grant

Mr. Michael Morris asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if, in the light of the change in rate support grant for Northamptonshire, he will state his Department's calculation of the percentage increase in rates they would produce, on the assumption that the county council budgets to spend at a level which maximises its rate support grant.

Mrs. Rumbold: If all authorities spend at the level assumed in the RSG settlement, the rate in the pound Northamptonshire are assumed for grant purposes to raise from ratepayers increases by 2·5 per cent. over the 1985-86 county precept. To maximise their block grant entitlement, Northamptonshire would need to reduce expenditure until grant allocation equalled expenditure. For 1986-87 this would mean spending at about £127 million.

Mr. Snape asked the Secretary of State for the Environment why he has refused to meet a delegation from the metropolitan borough of Sandwell to discuss the rate support grant allocation for 1985-86, as requested by the hon. Member for West Bromwich, East.

Mrs. Rumbold: As the hon. Gentleman knows, I should be glad to meet a delegation from the metropolitan borough of Sandwell on my right hon. Friend's behalf.

Crown Immunity

Mr. Ashley asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the categories, and the numbers within them, of institutions, for which he is responsible, in respect of which exemptions are claimed from (a) food hygiene legislation and (b) health and safety legislation on the grounds of Crown immunity; and if he will make it his policy to plan to remove the immunity for the relevant institutions.

Sir George Young: Crown immunity from prosecution under food hygiene legislation and health and safety legislation applies to the following institutions/premises for which my right hon. Friend is responsible.

Category	Number of Department/ Environment (other than PSA)	PSA
Central departmental offices	8	13
Regional or local offices	98	225
Storage buildings	3	32
Training and recruitment establishments	*1	—
Research establishments and laboratories	6	—

* (Serves PSA as well).

These figures include premises where Crown immunity for food hygiene legislation would apply but where food sales or preparation are not at present carried out.

The Property Services Agency has responsibilities not only as an occupant of buildings but as provider and manager of accommodation for Government. It must ensure that the buildings it makes available to its clients for occupation meet statutory requirements. Once the buildings are in use responsibility is shared between the agency, the occupying departments and their staff. In the case of leased buildings the landlord may also have some responsibility.

Government policy on Crown immunity is to consider every case on its merits. If my right hon. Friend has evidence of inadequate standards in particular circumstances, where he has responsibility, he will consider, with colleagues, how best to deal with the situation.

Subsidence (Wednesbury)

Miss Boothroyd asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what financial resources he will make available to Sandwell metropolitan council to assist those householders in Wednesbury whose homes are being affected by subsidence caused by abandoned limestone mines; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Tracey: A variety of possible remedial measures for the Cowpasture mine, Wednesbury, are currently being considered by the expert panel appointed to advise the Secretary of State for the Environment on black country limestone matters. Consideration is being given to the most appropriate and cost effective solution to the problem commensurate with land use and property protection considerations, including privately owned housing.

My right hon. Friend cannot yet say what solution will be adopted. The advisory panel will be reporting to him on this issue shortly and he will give full and careful consideration to their recommendations.

However, financial assistance to householders whose property may be affected by subsidence, is a matter more appropriate to the insurance market which exists to cover such eventualities. In the meantime, the Department continues to fund approved ongoing monitoring of the old mines and further investigation works and urgent remedial works in the area through the derelict land grant programme.

Over £4 million has already been approved by the Department for monitoring, investigation and remedial works in the black country as a whole. Resources of £5 million earmarked for schemes in 1986-87 are significantly higher than the allocation of £3·1 million for 1985-86.

Dog Licences

Mr. Patrick McNair-Wilson asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish details of the amount of tax collected from dog licences for the years 1980, 1981, 1982, 1983, 1984 and 1985, respectively.

Mrs. Rumbold: This information is only available for financial years. The revenue raised from licences issued through post offices in England and Wales in each of the past six years is:

	£000
1979-80	1,012
1980-81	1,001
1981-82	939
1982-83	907
1983-84	867
1984-85	948

Homesteading

Mr. Steen asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement as to the number of units homesteaded in England in each of the years 1978 to 1982.

Sir George Young: The number of disposals by local authorities and new towns in England notified to us under homesteading schemes in 1980-81 was 1,440, and 1,720 in 1981-82. Figures are not available for earlier years.

Tower Wharf

Mr. Stuart Holland asked the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he will allow cycle access to Tower wharf during all hours of opening for a trial period of six months.

Mr. Tracey: No. Tower wharf is very heavily used by local residents and tourists, and cycling is therefore prohibited. Permission for cyclists to push or carry their cycles through this essentially pedestrian area is therefore restricted to those who are able to establish a particular case for regular access. I do not think it would be right to extend this, even for a trial period.

Regent's Park

Mr. Stuart Holland asked the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he will allow cycle access to Regent's park during all hours of opening for a trial period of six months.

Mr. Tracey: Cycle access is already available to Regent's park via the outer circle, which is a park road from which trade vehicles are excluded.

Anti-fouling Paint

Mr. Steen asked the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) what steps he is taking to advise chandlers and other sailing shops as to anti-fouling paint legislation; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what steps the Government is taking to see that anti-fouling paint is not available for purchase in shops throughout the United Kingdom.

Mrs. Rumbold: The Control of Pollution (Anti-fouling Paint) Regulations 1985 came into force on 13 January 1986. The regulations limit the use of organotin compounds in anti-fouling paints supplied through retail outlets. Paint manufacturers in the United Kingdom have undertaken to supply, for retail sale, only paints which comply with the regulations.

Extensive consultation on the nature and content of the regulations took place during 1985. The large volume of correspondence arising from the consultation, and the publicity given to the subject, suggest that it is unlikely that any significant body of paint retailers remains ignorant of the actions proposed and subsequently taken by the Government. Copies of the regulations were sent to the associations representing the paint manufacturers and their customers well before the regulations came into force. Earlier this month the Department also wrote to associations representing the paint manufacturers and retail suppliers reminding them of the desirability of informing their members and customers about the requirements of the regulations.

The Department, jointly with the Welsh Office, will shortly issue a circular to local authorities in England and Wales giving guidance on the enforcement of the regulations. The local authority associations have agreed that Trading Standards Officers will monitor compliance and, where appropriate, will collect evidence which might be used in prosecutions. Similar arrangements are being made in Scotland and in Northern Ireland.

A list of paints which manufacturers have indicated comply with the regulations is set out below and will be included in the circular. Samples of the paints on this list will be checked by the laboratory of the Government Chemist. The list will be updated as necessary. Full publicity will be given to the arrangements set out in the circular and, in particular, to the list of paints.

The Government's aim is that no manufacturer, distributor, supplier or user of anti-fouling paints should be able reasonably to claim ignorance of the controls now in force.

Local Government Reform

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) when he expects to have completed his consideration of the application for consent to a grant to the Tower Hamlets training forum for which the Greater London council applied on 16 January;

(2) when he expects to have completed his consideration of the application for consent to a grant to the disability resource team for an information exercise for which the Greater London council applied on 17 December;

(3) when he expects to have completed his consideration of the Greater London council's application for consent to a grant to the north Lewisham law centre welfare rights unit for which the Greater London council applied on 30 October 1985;

(4) when he expects to have completed his consideration of the Greater London council's application for consent to a grant to the Brent federation of tenants and residents associations for which the Greater London council applied on 25 August 1985.

Mr. Tracey: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given to him on Tuesday 21 January at column 141.

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Environment when he expects to have completed his consideration of the Greater London council's application for consent to a grant to the Wandsworth community forum for which the Greater London council applied on 27 August 1985.

Mr. Richard Tracey: Consent was given on 27 November 1985.

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what criteria he applies in considering applications by the Greater London council for consents under the Local Government (Interim Provisions) Act 1984.

Mr. Tracey: Each application for my right hon. Friend's consent under the provisions of the Local Government (Interim Provisions) Act 1984 is considered on its merits in the light of all relevant considerations.

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what information he sought from outside bodies before reaching decisions on the four consents sought by the Greater London council under the Local Government (Interim Provisions) Act 1984 to which the answer of 17 February, Official Report, column 36, relates.

Mr. Tracey: None.

Water Industry

Mr. Denis Howell asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what will be the effect on any EEC loan provision of the privatisation programme of the water industry.

Mr. John Patten: None. Privatised water authorities will be able to borrow from the European Investment Bank to finance projects in assisted areas, as they do now.

Mr. Denis Howell asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will state the total debt of the regional water authorities and for each individual authority.

Mr. John Patten: The total debt of each water authority at 31 March 1985 was as follows:

Authority	Outstanding debt £m
Anglian	838
Northumbrian	407
North West	851
Severn Trent	787
Southern	321
South West	140
Thames	385
Wessex	226
Yorkshire	507
English WAs	4,462
Welsh	422
England and Wales	4,884

Mr. Denis Howell asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will state which EEC regulations on water pollution are currently in force in Great Britain; and what is the effect of each such regulation.

Mr. John Patten: The following EEC directives relating to the pollution of surface and underground waters are in force in the United Kingdom:

(1) Directives 73/404, 73/405, 82/242 and 82/243 concerning detergents. The effect is to require a minimum level of biodegradibility for certain types of detergent.

(2) Directive 75/440 on the quality of surface water intended for the abstraction of drinking water. This ensures that surface water that is abstracted for use as drinking water reaches certain standards and is given adequate treatment before being put into public supply.

(3) Directive 79/869 on the sampling of surface water for drinking. This supplements Directive 75/440 by recommending methods of measurement and sampling frequencies.

(4) Directive 78/659 provides for quality objectives to be set for fresh waters in order to support fish life.

(5) Directive 79/923 seeks to ensure a suitable environment for shellfish growth.

(6) Directive 76/160 requires that the quality of bathing water is to be raised over time, or maintained, so as to meet specified quality standards.

(7) Directive 76/464 sets a framework of controls for the discharge of particularly dangerous substances to surface water. To it are annexed two lists of substances. List I includes the more dangerous, for which controls are implemented by separate 'daughter' directives. So far daughter directives are in force for cadmium (83/513), mercury (82/176) and (84/156) and hexachlorocyclohexane (84/491). For controlling the potentially less dangerous substances in List II, national pollution reduction programmes are required and have been established by the United Kingdom for copper, zinc, lead, chromium, nickel and arsenic.

(8) Directive 80/68 regulates the discharge of dangerous substances to underground sources of water.

(9) Directives 78/176 and 83/29 (Amendment) mainly aim to prevent and progressively reduce pollution caused by waste from the titanium dioxide industry. Directive 82/883 lays down steps to be taken to monitor environments affected by wastes from the industry.

Mr. Hardy asked the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) if he will list current and proposed recreational activities at Anglian water authority's Pitsford, Grafham Water and Rutland Water reservoirs; and if he will describe the measures taken by the authority to integrate these activities with the nature conservation interest of these reservoirs given their sites of special scientific interest status;

(2) if he will list those operations proposed by the Anglian water authority at Pitsford Reservoir and Rutland Water of which notice has been given to the Nature Conservancy Council as required by section 28 of the Wildlife and Countryside Act; and if he will detail the response of the Nature Conservancy Council in respect of each notice so received.

Mr. John Patten: I will write to the hon. Member.

Water Industry

Mr. Denis Howell asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if the Government plan to publish a consultation paper on pension schemes in the event of privatisation for those employed by water authorities in England and Wales.

Mr. John Patten: I shall answer this question shortly.

Washington Development Corporation

Mr. Boyes asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the names of the people appointed to the Washington development corporation, the names or organisations proposing them, their previous lengths of service and their salaries; and if he intends to appoint any others to the board.

Mr. Tracey: The following have recently been re-appointed to the board of the Washington development corporation:

Name	Length of service (years)
Professor W. G. McClelland (chairman)	8½
Mr. F. M. Osborn (deputy chairman)	17
Mr. D. R. C. Kelly	2
Councillor J. Walker	7

At his own request, Mr. S. Waring retires from the board on 31 March after five years service. My right hon. Friend has also recently appointed Councillor J. D. S. Brown to the board for the first time. He and Councillor Walker represent Sunderland borough council on the board. Salaries from 1 March 1986 are £14,324 (chairman), £6,466 (deputy chairman) and £2,920 (member).

My right hon. Friend is currently considering whether to make up to three further appointments to the board.

South-East Regional Strategic Guidance

Mr. Evennett asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he is now in a position to update the regional strategic guidance issued to planning authorities in the south-east in August 1980.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: My right hon. Friend the Member for Wanstead and Woodford (Mr. Jenkin) informed my hon. Friend the Member for Gravesham (Mr. Brinton) of the steps being taken to update regional strategic guidance for the south-east in his reply of 27 July 1984. I have today written to Lord Sandford, chairman of the London and south-east regional planning conference, and to hon. Members for constituencies in the south-east seeking views on a draft letter of regional strategic guidance. I have also published the draft for wider public consultation and invited comments by 18 April. A copy has been placed in the Library.

Urban Aid

Mr. Hancock asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will now formally notify Portsmouth city council of its entitlement to submit a bid for urban aid; and if he will make a statement.

Sir George Young [pursuant to his answer, 25 February 1986, c. 490]: Portsmouth was not among the local authorities invited to bid for new approvals under the traditional urban programme in 1986-87. The bidding round closed in November 1985. The list of invited authorities will be revised for 1987-88. The practice of inviting selected authorities to bid was introduced in order to underline the Department's intention to concentrate resources on the most needy areas, and to reduce the fruitless work involved in the preparation and assessment of bids which were unlikely to succeed.

Cornish Houses

Mr. Corbett asked the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he will provide extra funding to local authorities wishing to purchase Cornish houses in the ownership of the National Coal Board and which have been designated under the housing Defects Act 1984.

Mr. Tracey: I shall answer this question shortly.

Historic Building and Monuments Commission for England

Dr. Cunningham asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he is satisfied with the arrangements at the Historic Buildings and Monuments Commission for England for ensuring that public funds are properly accounted for and spent; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: I am satisfied that an effective framework exists within which the commission manages public funds and that these procedures will detect any early signs of weakness in financial control. Indeed, they apparently have. I am of course concerned about such weaknesses. The commission has been asked for a full report on its financial procedures. An interim report by the commission's chief executive to the permanent secretary of my Department is already being studied. We will consider what further action needs to be taken in the light of those reports.

CIVIL SERVICE

Crown Immunity

Mr. Ashley asked the Minister for the Civil Service if he will list the categories, and the numbers within them, of institutions, for which he is responsible, in respect of which examinations are claimed from (a) food hygiene legislation and (b) health and safety legislation on the grounds of Crown immunity; and if he will make it his policy to plan to remove the immunity for the relevant institutions.

Mr. Luce: Crown immunity from prosecution under food hygiene legislation and health and safety legislation applies to the following institutions and premises for which I am responsible:

Category	Number
Central departmental offices	10
Regional or local offices or other buildings	14
Training and recruitments establishments	4

These figures include premises where Crown immunity for food hygiene legislation would apply but where food sales or preparation are not at present carried out.

Our policy on Crown immunity is to consider every case on its own merits. If we have evidence of inadequate standards in particular circumstances I shall consider, with colleagues, how best to deal with these circumstances.

Mr. Ashley asked the Minister for the Civil Service if he will list the categories, and the numbers within them, of institutions, for which the Lord President of the Council is responsible, in respect of which exemptions are claimed from (a) food hygiene legislation and (b) health and safety legislation on the grounds of Crown immunity; and if he will make it his policy to plan to remove the immunity for the relevant institutions.

Mr. Luce: Crown immunity from prosecution under food hygiene legislation and health and safety legislation applies to the following institutions and premises for which the Lord President of the Council has some responsibility.

Category	Number
Central departmental office	1

Our policy on Crown immunity is to consider every case on its own merits. If we have evidence of inadequate standards in particular circumstances I shall consider, with colleagues, how best to deal with these circumstances.

SOCIAL SERVICES

Housing Benefit

Mr. Deakins asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what is the average payment of housing benefit to pensioners receiving supplementary benefit; how much of this is attributable to rates; and by how much this average payment will be reduced as a result of recipients having to meet 20 per cent. of their rates bill out of basic income.

Mr. Major: It is estimated that the average payment of housing benefit to pensioners receiving supplementary benefit was about £15 a week in May 1985, the latest date for which information is available. About £4·80 of this was attributable to domestic rates after non-dependant deductions. It is estimated that this figure would be of the order of £1 lower if 20 per cent. of recipients' domestic rates bills were ineligible for benefit.

Ministerial Visits

Mr. Wigley asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will list in the Official Report those institutions, hospitals, special schools or training centres dealing with persons suffering mental handicap or illness visited by Ministers of his Department between 1 September 1985 and the present time, indicating which Ministers undertook each visit, respectively, and the purpose of the visit.

Mr. Whitney: The following table lists visits from 1 September 1985 by myself and Ministerial colleagues to facilities for people with mental handicap or mental illness. As well as launching and opening projects where specified, the purpose of all the visits was to learn about services provided or proposed, and to meet people involved.

Minister for Social Security and the Disabled
(MR. TONY NEWTON)

23 October 1985
Papworth Lodge, Papworth Everard, Cambridgeshire.
(Sheltered workshop, for people with mental and physical handicaps.)

6 February 1986
White Lodge, Chertsey, Surrey.
(Spastics Society residential house for people with mental and physical handicaps.)

Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State (Health)
(MR. RAY WHITNEY)

18 November 1985
Goodmayes Hospital, Goodmayes, Essex.
(Mental illness.)

13 December 1985
Larchwood, Bracknell, Berkshire.
(Resource unit, mental handicap.)

23 January 1986
Harmston Hall Mental Handicap Hospital, Harmston, nr. Lincoln.

29 January 1986
Opening of Hill House social Education Centre, Wandsworth.
(Mental handicap.)

Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State (Lords)
THE BARONESS TRUMPINGTON

9 September 1985
Staincliffe General Hospital, Dewsbury, Yorkshire.
(Inspection of site for proposed psychiatric/child assessment facility.)

31 October 1985
Wensley Close, Greenwich
(Opening of residential unit of mentally handicapped children.)

22 November 1985
Fulbourne Hospital (Mental illness), Ida Darwin Hospital, Cambridge.
(Mental handicap.)

3 December 1985
Harperbury Hospital, Hertfordshire.
(Launch of Save the Children Fund's "Playtrack" project.)

8 January 1986
Rampton Hospital, Retford, Nottinghamshire.
(For psychiatric patients requiring special security.)

15 January 1986
The Retreat Hospital, St. Column Major, Cornwall.
(Mental handicap.)

15 January 1986
Carn Brea House, Redruth, Cornwall.
(Mental handicap.)

22 January 1986
Manor House Hospital, Aylesbury, Buckinghamshire.
(Mental handicap.)

NHS (Land Sales)

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what capital sums have been yielded by individual health authorities resulting from the sale of National Health Service land formerly accommodating large hospitals for the mentally ill and the mentally handicapped during the last 12 months.

Mr. Whitney: I regret that separate information in respect of sales of mental illness and mental handicap hospitals is not collected centrally.

NHS (Property Deals)

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what property deals for redeveloping surplus hospital land and accommodation have been concluded by health authorities with private contractors during the last 12 months.

Mr. Whitney: I regret that information on sales of surplus National Health Service land for redevelopment is not collected centrally.

Kidney Transplant

Mr. Speller asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if, in his publicity for the kidney donor scheme, he will indicate those diseases a history of which is currently considered to make a cadaver kidney unsuitable for transplantation; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Whitney: While there are a number of conditions which would make kidneys unsuitable for transplantation, the decision on the suitability of an individual potential donor is a clinical one for the doctors concerned. I do not believe, therefore, that publicising the diseases, a history of which would make a kidney unsuitable for donation, would be particularly helpful. Moreover much publicity is for organ donation in general, rather than kidney donation in particular, and contra-indications would vary according to the organ concerned.

Mr. Speller asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what guidance is given by his Chief Medical Officer as to those diseases, a history of which is a contra-indication for the use of the victim's cadaver kidney for transplantation; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Whitney: Guidance has been provided for health service staff in the code of practice governing the removal of cadaveric organs for transplantation issued by the Department in February 1983, a copy of which has been placed in the Library. Section III of that document lists conditions which may render cadaver kidneys unsuitable for transplantation. The Chief Medical Officer has recently advised that, in addition, patients infected with HTLV III antibodies should not be organ donors.

Crown Immunity

Mr. Ashley asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will list the categories, and the numbers within them, of institutions, for which he is responsible, for which exemptions are claimed from (a) food hygiene legislation and (b) health and safety legislation on the grounds of Crown immunity; and if he will make it his policy to plan to remove the immunity for the relevant institutions.

Mr. Hayhoe: Crown immunity from prosecution under food legislation and health and safety legislation applies to the following institutions/premises for which the Secretary of State is responsible:

Category	Number
1. Central Departmental Offices	37
2. Regional and local offices	541
3. Storage buildings	4
4. Hospitals and other health premises	*2,750
5. Training establishments	7
6. Research institutions and laboratories (not forming part of an institution included in category 4)	58
7. Other Departmental premises	177

* Approximate.

These figures include premises where Crown immunity for food legislation would apply but where food sales or preparation are not at present carried out.

The right hon. Member will be aware of the Government's plans to legislate to remove Crown immunity under the food hygiene legislation from health authorities. There are no similar plans with respect to health and safety at work legislation.

The policy on Crown immunity is to consider every case on its own merits. If there is evidence of inadequate standards in particular circumstances I shall consider with colleagues how best to deal with these circumstances. This may, as in the case of hospital catering, lead to a re-appraisal of Crown immunity.

Supplementary Benefit

Ms. Harman asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many people received supplementary benefit in Watford in (a) 1979 and (b) 1983; and what percentage change that represents.

Mr. Major: In December 1980 (the earliest figures available) 6,378 people were receiving supplementary benefit from the Department's office in Watford. In December 1983 that figure had risen by 45 per cent. to 9,263.
(Source 100 per cent. count of live cases.)

Students Benefits

Mr. Meadowcroft asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what research has been carried out by him into the effects of his proposals to remove students' eligibility to claim housing, supplementary and unemployment benefits; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Newton: The current proposals affecting students' entitlement to benefits are designed to tackle some of the least appropriate and most wasteful aspects of the present arrangements. They will result in a more rational and straightforward system which will be considerably easier to administer. So far as students themselves are concerned, some three-quarters of the total of half a million will be affected, with about 140,000 gaining the full value of the proposed increase of £36 in the grant. For the remaining 275,000, the net effect will vary depending on their individual circumstances: most are likely to have some reduction in their combined grant and social security entitlement, compared with their position under the current arrangements. The proposals do not affect entitlement to supplementary benefit or unemployment benefit in the long vacation and do not exclude students in privately rented accommodation from housing benefit in term times or short vacations, or in long vacations if they remain in the accommodation.

Obstetrics and Gynaecology

Dr. McDonald asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will publish in the Official Report the number and proportion of hospital appointments in the associate specialist grade in obstetrics and gynaecology.

Mr. Hayhoe: At 30 September 1985 in England there were 35 associate specialists in obstetrics and gynaecology —1·1 per cent. of all doctors in the specialty and 4·1 per cent. of all medical associate specialists.

Dr. McDonald asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if his Department plans to phase out the associate specialist grade in obstetrics and gynaecology; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hayhoe: No.

Drugs (Licensing and Franchising)

Mr. Michael McNair-Wilson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services whether the standards used by the Committee on Safety of Medicines in assessing the possibilities of licensing and franchising new drugs including their special effectiveness are the same as those used by the Advisory Committee on National Health Service Medicines in deciding whether such drugs should be available on prescription.

Mr. Hayhoe: No. The Committee on Safety of Medicines advises on the safety, quality and efficacy of medicinal products. The Advisory Committee on National Health Service Drugs considers need and cost in recommending whether medicinal products in certain therapeutic categories should be available on National Health Service prescription.

Acute Hospitals

Dr. McDonald asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if his Department has any guidelines for the optimum size of an acute hospital, including the number of beds, mix of specialties and activities, and for a minimum size for a viable acute hospital; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Whitney: We have not issued formal guidance of this nature on the size or functions of acute hospitals. We expect health authorities to plan for the efficient and cost effective provision of services taking full account of local needs and priorities, available resources including existing provision, health building notes and cost allowances, and the views of the medical profession and the public.

Maternity Services

Dr. McDonald asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if his Department has issued any guidelines on the centralisation of maternity services on to one site in each health district, and on the provision of a special care baby unit in conjunction with maternity units; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Whitney: General guidelines on the siting of maternity and neonatal units were contained in the second and third reports of the maternity services advisory committee, which have been commended to health authorities for action; and also in the recent draft guidance on the planning and design of new maternity departments at district general hospitals, which has been issued for consultation.

Dr. McDonald asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) how many district health authorities provide maternity services from (a) more than one site and (b) only one site;

(2) if he will publish in the Official Report (i) the total number of maternity units in England and Wales and (ii) the number of maternity units which include a special care baby unit.

Mr. Whitney: I shall let the hon. Member have the available information as soon as possible.

Waiting Lists

Dr. McDonald asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will provide details of the waiting lists in the Basildon and Thurrock district health authority area in (i) gynaecology, (ii) orthopaedic and (iii) ear, nose and throat; and if he will state how these compare with the regional averages.

Mr. Whitney: I shall let the hon. Member have the available information as soon as possible.

National Insurance Contributions

Dr. Owen asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what the increase in employers' total national insurance payments has been between 1979-80 and 1986-87 (a) in cash terms and (b) in real terms.

Mr. Major: Employers' national insurance payments show a drop in real terms between 1979-80 and 1986-87 of nearly 22 per cent. Figures for Great Britain, based on 1985-86 prices, are as follows:

	Cash terms £ million	Real terms £ million
1979-80	9,832	15,908
*1986-87	12,851	12,446

* Estimate.

The 1979-80 figures include the national insurance surcharge (abolished in 1984-85); the 1986-87 figures exclude amounts recovered for statutory sick pay (introduced in 1983-84). Both figures include payments for the national health service element and the employment protection allocation.

Vaccines

Mr. Meacher asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what steps he is taking to increase the uptake of vaccines for babies and children in England, with particular reference to the north-western region.

Mr. Whitney: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to the hon. Member for Eccles (Mr. Carter-Jones) on 16 December 1985 at column 79. If the hon. Member wishes to make inquiries about particular regional health authorities, he should approach the chairmen of the authorities concerned.

World Health Organisation

Mr. Michael Brown asked the Secretary of State for Social Services when his Department last met with representatives from the World Health Organisation; and what subjects were discussed.

Mr. Whitney: Officials of this Department have frequent contacts with officials of the World Health Organisation. Recent meetings have included discussions on WHO's proposed programme budget for Europe in 1988-89 and on the conference of Ministers of Health on narcotics and psychotropic drug misuse which the United Kingdom is hosting next month.

Mr. Michael Brown asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many civil servants in his Department liaise with the World Health Organisation.

Mr. Whitney: Five officials in the Department have direct responsibility for liaison with the World Health Organisation and, as many aspects of the Department's business relate to WHO interests, there are also frequent contacts at all levels between Departmental officials and officials of the WHO.

Mr. Michael Brown asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what grants his Department makes available to the World Health Organisation; what proportion has been spent on anti-smoking campaigns; and if he will produce figures for the last five years.

Mr. Whitney: The United Kingdom's assessed contribution of US$21·5 million to the World Health Organisation's overall budget of some $980 million in the biennium 1984-85 was met from the Department's vote. It is not possible to say what proportion of this is spent on anti-smoking activities, but expenditure by the World Health Organisation on its global smoking and health programme in 1984-85 from both regular budget and voluntary contributions amounted to some $690,000.

"Helping the Community to Care"

Mr. Rowe asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how much money was originally allocated to the scheme entitled "Helping the Community to Care"; when it was first established; what terms as regards maximum size of annual payments, the number and nature of projects funded from the scheme and the length of the scheme's planned existence were made; and what proportion of the scheme's money was actually spent in 1984-85 and is likely to be spent in 1985-86.

Mr. Whitney: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Social Services announced on 5 July 1984 that he was making £10·5 million available over three years for this programme and that arrangements for funding projects would be worked out in detail with the voluntary bodies concerned. Details of expenditure on each of the dozen elements in the programme are not yet available. For information about the content of these 12 elements, expenditure in 1984-85 and expected expenditure in 1985-86 I refer my hon. Friend to my reply to the right hon. Member for Stoke-on-Trent, South (Mr. Ashley) on 27 January, at columns 397-98.

Single Payments

Mr. Meacher asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will give for the most recent month for which information is available, (a) the number of single payment awards as a rate per 1,000 claimants; and (b) the average single payment to (i) persons under pension age not required to register for work, (ii) persons under pension age required to register for work and (iii) persons over pension age, for each social security office.

Mr. Major [pursuant to his reply, 10 February 1986, c. 365]: I have arranged for this information to be placed in the Library.

Disabled People (Representations)

Mr. Cohen asked the Secretary of State for Social Services why he has not sent NETWORK, the legal advisory service for disabled people, the consultation paper on the Disabled Persons (Services Consultation and Representation) Bill; if he will now do so; and if he will allow an extension beyond 4 March for the submission of their comments.

Mr. Hayhoe [pursuant to his reply, 24 February 1986, c. 471]: I refer the hon. Member to my replies to the right hon. Member for Manchester, Wythenshawe (Mr. Morris) on 14 February at columns 596-97 and to the hon. Member for Liverpool, West Derby (Mr. Wareing) on 26 February. I have arranged for a copy of the consultation paper to be sent to NETWORK. Comments on the consultation paper have been asked for by 4 March so that it may be possible for them to be taken into account in amendments to be tabled in advance of the Bill's Report stage on 11 April. There may be opportunities for comments received after that date to be reflected at a later stage.

Retirement Age

Mr. Nicholls asked the Secretary of State for Social Services whether he now has any proposals to introduce a common retirement age for men and women; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Newton [pursuant to his reply, 25 February 1986, c. 540]: In the Government's Green Paper on "Reform of Social Security" (Cmnd. 9518) we made it clear that our preference was for a flexible age of retirement between defined limits rather than a rigid single age for both men and women. We believe that such flexibility is important to increase individual freedom of choice. As the White Paper on reform of social security noted, consultation on the Green Paper produced no useful suggestions on how the substantial initial costs of this development could be met.

We are continuing to consider how best to achieve our objectives in this area.

Hospitals (Thames Regions)

Mr. Pavitt asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will publish in the Official Report a table showing the hospitals within the four Thames regions which still retain accident and emergency units, together with the number of times in the last three months when they have been placed on a treat and transfer basis.

Mr. Whitney [pursuant to his reply, 25 February 1986, c. 542]: Details of NHS hospitals within the four Thames regional health authority areas which recorded accident and emergency activity during 1984, the latest year for which information is available, are listed in the table.

I am sorry I cannot give the hon. Member the remaining information he seeks. It is not collected centrally.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Domestic Security Devices

Mr. Pawsey asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the estimated yield of value added tax on domestic security devices; and if he will make it his policy to abolish value added tax on such devices.

Mr. Brooke: There is no information available on which to base an estimate, nor any reason to single out the purchase or installation of domestic security devices for relief from value added tax.

EC Budget

Mr. Deakins asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer in what respects the 1986 EEC budget adopted by the European Assembly differed from the budget approved by the EEC Council with regard to income.

Mr. Brooke: The additional expenditure contained in the adopted budget for 1986, some 629 mecu (£385 million) was to be financed by larger VAT contributions from member states. Within the 1·4 per cent. VAT ceiling, the amount of VAT own resources at the uniform rate was increased in the adopted budget to 20,658,083,453 ecu.

Crown Immunity

Mr. Ashley asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list the categories, and the numbers within them, of institutions, for which he is responsible, in respect of which exemptions are claimed from (a) food hygiene legislation and (b) health and safety legislation on the grounds of Crown immunity; and if he will make it his policy to plan to remove the immunity for the relevant institutions.

Mr. Lawson: Crown immunity from prosecution under food hygiene legislation and health and safety legislation applies to the following institutions/premises for which I am ministerially responsible:

Category	Number
Central departmental offices	64
Regional or local offices	*1,475
Storage buildings	128
Factories	7
Training and recruitment establishments	1

* Approximate

These figures include premises where Crown immunity for food hygiene legislation would apply but where food sales or preparation are not at present carried out.

The Treasury's policy on Crown immunity is to consider every case on its own merits. If there is evidence of inadequate standards in particular circumstances I shall consider, with colleagues, how best to deal with those circumstances.

Enterprise

Mr. Soames asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what steps he is taking to create a favourable climate for enterprise.

Mr. MacGregor: The prime objective of the Governments macro-economic policy is to lay a firm foundation for sustained economic growth, by reducing inflation and by pursuing micro economic policies designed to improve the operation of the supply side of the economy and to create an environment in which enterprise can flourish. Measures include privatisation and the removal of obstacles to the free functioning of markets, the reduction and simplification of taxes to reduce distortions and improve incentives and various measures to ease rigidities in the labour market.

Oil Taxation (Corporate Sector)

Dr. Owen asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) what the increase in the total oil taxation in the corporate sector has been between 1979-80 and 1985-86 (a) in cash terms and (b) in real terms;

(2) what the increase in the non-oil taxation in the corporate sector has been between 1979-80 and 1985-86 (a) in cash terms and (b) in real terms.

Mr. Lawson: I shall let the right hon. Member have a reply as soon as possible.

Gross National Product

Dr. Owen asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will publish a table ranking those 20 countries in the world with the highest gross national product per capita.

Mr. Lawson: The following figures, calculated by the World Bank, are taken from the World Development Report 1985.

Country	GNP per capita Dollars 1983
1. United Arab Emirates	22,870
2. Kuwait	17,880
3. Switzerland	16,290
4. United States	14,110
5. Norway	14,020
6. Sweden	12,470
7. Canada	12,310
8. Saudi Arabia	12,230
9. Denmark	11,570
10. Australia	11,490
11. Germany, Federal Republic	11,430
12. Finland	10,740
13. France	10,500
14. Japan	10,120
15. Netherlands	9,890
16. Austria	9,250
17. United Kingdom	9,200
18. Belgium	9,150
19. Libya	8,480
20. New Zealand	7,730

Taxation

Dr. McDonald asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether, in the manner of the answer given on 14 February 1985, Official Report, column 288, he will publish an updated table on direct revenue effects for 1985-86.

Mr. Moore [pursuant to his reply, 13 February 1986, c.540]: The table shows the additional yield in respec of 1985-86 from the specified taxes if 1978-79 rates, allowances and rate bands (after indexation to 1985-86 levels) were substituted for 1985-86 rates, allowances and rate bands.

Additional yield from reverting to 1978-79 tax structure on 1985-86 tax base	£ million

Income tax		6,200
of which:
Investment Income Surcharge	740
Rates and thresholds above the basic rate (excluding investment income surcharge)	1,285
Capital transfer tax		70
Capital gains tax		550

In each case, the 1985-86 tax base is taken as given. It is not possible to determine to what extent changes in the taxes between 1978-79 and 1985-86 may have affected levels of income and transfers and disposals of capital.

The figures for capital transfer tax and capital gains tax are on a different basis from those in the previous reply. The present basis corresponds to that adopted for income tax.

EUROPEAN COMMUNITY

Council of Ministers

Mr. Fallon asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will publish in the Official Report a statement of forthcoming business in the European Community Council of Ministers.

Mrs. Chalker: The usual forecast was deposited in the House today. At present nine formal meetings and one informal meeting of the Council are scheduled for March 1986.

On 3 March the Industry Council will discuss a paper on the Community's approach to improving the competitiveness of industry; and steel trade problems caused by the accession of Spain and Portugal to the Community.

The Council may discuss the EC-non-energy raw materials exploration loans scheme; the next shipbuilding directive; raw materials for biotechnology; progress on a new mechanism on starch and sugar; and the transfer of technology.

On 4 March there will be a special meeting of the African Caribbean Pacific-EEC Council to discuss the guaranteed price for ACP sugar exports to the Community under the sugar protocol to the Lomé convention.

The Environment Council will meet on 6 March to consider the draft directive on large combustion plants intended to lay down reductions in emissions of sulphur dioxide, oxides of nitrogen and dust from all existing large combustion plants; a draft directive on sulphur content of gas oil, which would reduce the maximum permitted sulphur content of gas oil placed on the market within the Community from 1 July 1987; a draft directive on the use of sewage sludge on agricultural land and the new water directive intended to carry forward the existing 1976 directive.

The Council will also discuss the European Year of the Environment.

On 10 March the Economic and Finance Council will discuss a mandate for the Community for the forthcoming negotiations in the OECD consensus group on further improvements in transparency and discipline in the use of tied aid credits for developing countries. The Council will also consider the budget reference framework for 1987; international debt issues; points arising from the European Court of Auditors annual report for 1984; and the Commission's quarterly review of the economic situation in the Community. The Council may also consider a report from the working party on fiscal harmonisation.

The Foreign Affairs Council will meet on 10-11 March. It will continue discussion of the draft mandate for the negotiations on the future of the multi-fibre arrangement. It will also discuss EC-Japan relations and preparations for a new round of multilateral trade negotiations.

The main items on the agenda for the Transport Council on 14 March will be further consideration of the Commission proposals on aviation and shipping. The Council will also consider transitional measures to ensure that the agreed target date of 1992 for the abolition of quantitative restrictions on intra-Community road haulage is met.

The Fisheries Council on 18 March is to consider the 1986 guide prices for certain species and amendments to the technical conservation regulation though these items have yet to be confirmed.

The Agriculture Council is expected to meet on 24-25 March 1986 to consider the 1986 price proposals, the milk outgoers scheme; and agricultural structures.

On 18 March the Internal Market Council will consider a report from the Commission on progress under the new approach to standards, including certification. A proposal on simple pressure vessels and a background paper on consumer safety are likely to be discussed. The Council will consider a Commission proposal concerning a work programme for creating a common information market; the draft directive on powered industrial trucks; and a proposal to make minor technical amendments to the directive on the range of nominal quantities and nominal capacities permitted for certain prepackaged products. The Council may discuss the proposed commercial agents directive which seeks to regulate the relationship between agents and their principles.

The Energy Council will meet on 20 March. It will discuss the effects of lower oil prices; a draft decision on coal state aids and associated social measures. It will also discuss a proposed ERDF community programme on energy, known as VALOREN.

The Council will also discuss Commission papers on solid fuels and on a proposed package of measures to promote the exploitation of new and renewable energy sources.

ENERGY

Nuclear Power

Mr. Teddy Taylor asked the Secretary of State for Energy if he will make a statement setting out Her Majesty's Government's assessment of the advantages and disadvantages of the current nuclear power provision; and if he intends to expand the provision of nuclear power.

Mr. Goodlad: A total of 20 per cent. of the electricity available from the United Kingdom public supply system was generated by nuclear power in 1985. Our nuclear power stations have proved themselves as reliable base load generating capacity. The security of supply which they have provided has been in contrast to the disruptions in the supply of other fuels in recent years.

Many of our nuclear stations have been in service for more than 20 years and on current estimates are expected to reach the end of their useful lives in the 1990s. The Government believe that it is prudent, in the face of uncertainties over supplies and prices of energy, for the country to have available a range of supply options. Nuclear power stations have the potential to produce electricity more cheaply than other fuels provided they can be built to time and cost. The Government therefore see an important and necessary role for nuclear power in the years ahead. The proportion of electricity generated is expected to rise to about 25 per cent. by the turn of the decade. The contribution for new nuclear capacity will depend on decisions yet to be taken, including that on Sizewell B.

Electricity Consumption

Mr. Michael Morris asked the Secretary of State for Energy how many industrial sites in the United Kingdom have a consumption of 100 million units of electricity.

Mr. Goodlad: I am informed that at present there are 70 industrial sites supplied by the electricity supply industry in England and Wales whose consumption exceeds 100 million kWh per annum. No account has been taken of any privately generated electricity. The situation in Scotland and Northern Ireland is a matter for the Secretary of State for Scotland and the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland respectively.

Wylfa and Trawsfynydd Power Stations

Mr. Best asked the Secretary of State for Energy (1) if he will state the dates on which the operational lives of Wylfa and Trawsfynydd nuclear power stations have been extended and for what reasons; what is the present assessment of the end of their operational lives; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what changes in safety criteria have accompanied each of the extensions of the operational lives of the Wylfa and Trawsfynydd nuclear power stations; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Goodlad: The Central Electricity Generating Board is responsible under statute, subject to compliance with the terms of the licence from the nuclear installations inspectorate, for determining the safe operating life of these stations. I have asked the chairman to write to my hon. Friend.

Nuclear Reprocessing

Mr. Clay asked the Secretary of State for Energy (1) what is the value of nuclear reprocessing business carried out by BNFL for each of the past five years;

(2) what is the value of nuclear reprocessing carried out for export for each of the past five years;

(3) for which countries, and for what value, nuclear reprocessing has been carried out by British Nuclear Fuels Limited for each of the past five years.

Mr. Goodlad: BNFL's income from reprocessing both in total and under its exports contracts was as follows:

	£ million
	Total	Exports
1981	190	80
1982	270	130
1983	260	120
1984	320	140
1985	450	210

These sums include transport costs, met by customers, and advance payments for future reprocessing.

BNFL has contracts with customers in the following countries:

Canada
Italy
Japan
Netherlands
Spain
Sweden
Switzerland
West Germany

The value of its business with each is commercial in confidence.

Neighbourhood Energy Action

Mr. Rost asked the Secretary of State for Energy what is his Department's funding for Neighbourhood Energy Action in the current financial year; and what is the proposed grant for 1987-88.

Mr. David Hunt: My Department has made grants to Neighbourhood Energy Action for 1985-86 totalling £185,764. The level of grant for 1986-87 is now under consideration. Funding for subsequent years will be considered in the light of the development of insulation projects.

Mr. Rost asked the Secretary of State for Energy what progress his Department is making towards an agreed national programme with the Manpower Services commission for the expansion of Neighbourhood Energy Action projects to insulate the homes of low-income families; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Hunt: My Department's energy efficiency office has agreed with the Manpower Services Commission an initiative within the community programme to promote the expansion of insulation projects. A promotional leaflet, describing the initiative, jointly prepared by the energy efficiency office, the Manpower Services Commission and Neighbourhood Energy Action, is being distributed through local Manpower Services Commission offices.

Mr. Rost asked the Secretary of State for Energy if he is satisfied with the contribution made by Neighbourhood Energy Action in insulating homes of low-income families; how many local schemes have to date been established; how many are planned for 1986-87; and what is the estimated number of homes that have been insulated under these schemes.

Mr. Peter Walker: Yes. I recently launched the 222nd insulation project in the programme co-ordinated by Neighbourhood Energy Action. My Department has now issued a total of 460 seedcorn grants for project preparation, and 268 grants for project start-up. I would expect that around 400 projects will be operating by the end of 1986-87. To date, over 130,000 homes have been insulated by the projects.

GLC (Lorry Ban)

Mr. Gerald Bowden asked the Secretary of State for Transport whether the Greater London council night-time and weekend lorry ban order, which exempts trunk roads, has been drafted to apply equally to all London trunk roads after 1 April.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: I am advised that the effect of the GLC's order as drafted is the same for all trunk roads, exempting them from the ban, irrespective of the date on which they become trunk roads.

Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the Secretary of State for Transport what information is available to his Department on the effect on lorry traffic on the roads in London for which he will be responsible from 1 April of the Greater London council lorry ban introduced on 31 January; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: I understand that the GLC has so far issued some 20,000 exemption permits allowing lorries to travel to destinations anywhere in London during the hours of the ban, and that no application for a permit has been refused. Before the ban came into operation, the M25 has already reduced lorry mileage in London by over 20 per cent., bringing daytime as well as night time benefits. Heavy lorries coming into London at night on the Archway road dropped by over 50 per cent. to 189 after the north-east section of the M25 was opened.

Some other roads for which the Department will assume responsibility are not heavily used by lorries at night. To illustrate, counts in October 1985 showed only two to three dozen heavy goods vehicles using the south circular between midnight and 6 am.

A605 (Inspector's Report)

Mr. William Powell asked the Secretary of State for Transport when he expects to receive the report of the inspector who conducted the inquiry into the A605 Higham Ferrers to Thrapston road.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The A605 Higham Ferrers—Thrapston Improvement is a principal road scheme for which Northamptonshire county council is the highway authority. A public inquiry into the orders for the scheme was held on 2 to 10 July 1985. The inspector's report was received by the Secretary of State for Transport on 8 October 1985. It is hoped that a decision whether or not to confirm the orders will be made by early April.

Boeing 747

Mr. Deakins asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will specify the precise nature of the repairs in the internal structure of Boeing 747 aircraft currently being carried out as a result of the discovery of cracks.

Mr. Michael Spicer: The Civil Aviation Authority has informed me that all the cracks found in the course of the inspections required for Boeing 747 aircraft are in the fuselage frames. Repair schemes follow normal practice for structural repairs on aircraft and are designed according to standard procedures, but Boeing advice is sought if required. The precise nature of the repairs will depend upon the position and size of the crack. They may take the form of a "doubler" patch riveted over the crack or, in some cases, the cracked segment of the frame may be removed and a new segment spliced into place. The work is monitored by engineers of the Civil Aviation Authority.

M25 (Lighting)

Mr. Speed asked the Secretary of State for Transport what proportion of the M25 motorway is illuminated; and what further lighting schemes are planned.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Nearly 42 per cent. is currently lit. Lighting is planned to be provided for junctions numbered 3, 6, 11, 21, 21A and the remainder of junction number 23. The need for further lighting will be kept under review.

Mr. Lawrence asked the Secretary of State for Transport whether he has any plans to light all the access and egress roads to the M25 for which he has responsibility; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: There are plans to light junctions numbered 3, 6, 11, 15, 21, 21A and the remainder of junction number 23. There are no current proposals to light any other roads in the immediate vicinity of the M25 for which the Department is responsible. The need for further lighting will be kept under review.

Highways (Road Humps) Regulations 1983

Ms. Harman asked the Secretary of State for Transport in what ways he proposes to amend the Highways (Road Humps) Regulations 1983; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The existing regulations specify the circumstances in which road humps may be constructed, the nature, dimensions, location and spacing of the humps, and requirements as to the placement of traffic signs. We are still considering detailed changes to those provisions in preparation for consultation with representative organisations. I shall arrange for the hon. Member to receive a copy of the consultation document in due course.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

Departmental Policy

Mr. Soames asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make a statement on the objectives of his Department's policies for the rest of this Parliament.

Sir Keith Joseph: My Department's principal objectives for Education are to improve standards throughout the education service and to use more effectively the substantial resources available. In schools the aim is to pursue the objectives set out in the White Paper "Better Schools" (Cmnd. 9469). In particular I shall continue, in consultation with those concerned in the education service and outside it, to seek greater clarity about the objectives and content of the curriculum with a view to promoting understanding and skills as well as knowledge, strengthening the practical and technical elements of the curriculum, and fostering the application of what is learnt to real problems and situations; to reform the examinations system and improve assessment in particular through the introduction of the GCSE; to improve the quality of teaching, with more rigorous and applied teacher training (including in-service training) and through the appraisal of teacher performance, more effective selection of teachers, and the reform of the teachers' pay structure and conditions of service; and to reform the management of schools to give parents more responsibility and influence. After the enactment of the Education Bill now before Parliament, I intend to make a start with the implementation of its provisions for school government and in-service training of teachers.

In the youth service field the objective is to develop policies for meeting the widely varying needs of young people through the work of the recently established National Advisory Council for the youth service and in other ways. In non-advanced further education, the aim remains to increase the responsiveness of the service to the needs of employers while providing a sound education for young people and encouraging improved use of resources. In the short term key objectives will be to assess and take appropriate action on the current review of vocational qualifications and to complete a joint study with the local authority associations on efficiency.

We are aiming to raise quality and standards in higher education and, while preserving the full breadth of higher education provision, to make it more responsive to the needs of the economy. We intend to maintain the availability of opportunity to study in higher education for those able to benefit, and to pursue value for money, including a more selective approach to the funding of research.

In science, the Department's aim is to maintain and enhance the strength and quality of the science base in higher education and the research councils. Consonant with this, the objectives are: to encourage greater concentration and selectivity of research activities; closer and better working with industry and commerce; more funding from private sector sources; better management yielding greater value for money; increased flexibility enabling faster response to new scientific opportunities; to keep under review the balance between international and national scientific endeavours; and thereby to strengthen the knowledge and skills of the United Kingdom in science and technology, and improve the efficiency, competitiveness and innovative capacity of the United Kingdom economy.

Computer Technology

Mr. Alton asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what studies his Department has conducted into the possible roles of advanced computer technology in higher education.

Mr. Walden: Two major studies have been undertaken on the potential for the use of advanced computer technology in higher education. A working party on future facilities for advanced research computing considered the likely needs for advanced research computing and the various options open to the university and research council community for acquiring, operating and providing access to the necessary services. The working party was chaired by Professor A. J. Forty of the university of Warwick and reported to the Advisory Board for the Research Councils, the Computer Board for Universities and Research Councils, and the University Grants Committee.

A second working party, under the chairmanship of Miss D. A. Nelson, then director of the computer centre at Hatfield polytechnic, considered the type and level of computing facilities that should be provided for teaching in universities and the services that should be provided by computing centres to support teaching facilities. It reported to the Computer Board for Universities and Research Councils.

Mr. Alton asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what steps he is taking to seek to ensure that British universities are able to gather the resources to finance projects to explore the potential uses of advanced computer technology in the university curriculum; what study he has made in this context of project Athena at the Massachusetts Institute of Technology; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Walden: Project Athena is one of a number of overseas university activities that have been taken into account in formulating programmes to develop the use of advanced computer technology for teaching in United Kingdom universities. An important aspect of the project is the use of student work stations, connected by a local area network covering the campus at Massachusetts Institute of Technology, to enhance traditional teaching methods across a wide range of subjects. This is also the aim of a series of "pump-priming" teaching projects supported through the University Grants Committee and the Computer Board for Universities and Research Councils. Over 100 of these pilot projects are now in operation at a total cost of £7.5 million, including special funding of £1·5 million made available by my right hon. Friend.

Another important objective of project Athena is to design systems that will allow computers built by different manufacturers to communicate freely. This activity is paralleled in the United Kingdom by the support of a Joint Academic Network (JANET) which enables computer systems at university, polytechnic and Research Council sites to talk to each other regardless of machine type or geographical location. This allows the cost-effective sharing of expensive resources. The Department, on the advice of the Computer Board, provides capital and recurrent support totalling £3 million a year for the operation of JANET. In addition my right hon. Friend has made available special funding of £5 million over three years to enhance the scope and speed of the network.

Teacher Training

Mr. Frank Field asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will list for the last 30 years the number of students undertaking teacher training courses; and if he will detail the number and proportion in each year of students in church training colleges.

Mr. Chris Patten: The available information is shown in the table. Enrolment figures before 1978 do not identify students in church colleges separately.

Sixth Form Education

Mr. Greenway asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what were the costs per pupil of sixth form education in each local education authority in the latest year for which figures are available; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Dunn: It is not possible to identify separately the costs of sixth form education in each local education authority.

A-Level Passes

Mr. Greenway asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what information he has as to how many A-level passes were achieved in independent schools in 1985; what percentage this was of the total number of such passes; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Dunn: The numbers of A-level passes attained by English school leavers* from maintained and independent schools in 1983-84 were:

	Number (000s)	Percentage
Independent schools	81·0	24·3
Maintained schools	252·6	75·7
All schools	333·6	100·0

A further 50,200 A-level passes were achieved in 1983-84 by young people at FE establishments†.

Schools (Hampshire)

Mr. Hancock asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what information he has as to the number of schools in Hampshire built before 1914.

Mr. Dunn: Information on the number of schools in Hampshire built before 1914 is not held by my Department.

Save British Science Campaign

Mr. Dalyell asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make a statement on his meeting with representatives of the Save British Science Campaign on Monday 17 February.

Mr. Walden: My right hon. Friend and I met Professor Lamb, Dr. Mulvey and Dr. Leggett representing the Save British Science Campaign on 17 February. My right hon. Friend welcomed the emergence of Save British Science as a voice of the scientific community. There was agreement about the desirability of some increase in support for science both from public funds and from industry, but my right hon. Friend pointed out that a convincing case needed to be made in terms of economic benefit.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Syria (Political Prisoners)

Mr. Bidwell asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if, when he meets the Syrian Foreign Affairs Minister in London, he will raise with him cases concerning political prisoners in Syria held without charge or trial.

Mr. Renton: My right hon. and learned Friend will have very much in mind when he sees Mr. Shara' the strong feelings in this country about human rights issues, including human rights in Syria, but he does not intend to raise specific cases unless there is a particular reason to do so.

Mr. Raoul Wallenberg

Mr. Bendall asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will place in the Library copies of any correspondence between his Department and the Government of the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics regarding the case of Mr. Raoul Wallenberg, together with replies received; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Renton We have no record of any correspondence between the Foreign and Commonwealth Office and the Soviet authorities on the case of Raoul Wallenberg. This matter has, however, been raised directly with Soviet Ministers on a number of occasions. Regrettably, the Soviet side has had nothing to add to its position as stated in its note handed to the Swedish ambassador in Moscow in 1957.

Arab Boycott (Documentation)

Mr. Deakins asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what consideration was given to the potential impact on United Kingdom trade with Arab countries when Her Majesty's Government decided not to co-operate in Arab boycott documentation; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Renton The authentication service was little used and we considered that its withdrawal was unlikely to impair trade with Arab countries, to which we continue to attach great importance.

Soviet Jewry

Mr. Janner asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list the Soviet Jews refused permission to emigrate from the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics on whose behalf Her Majesty's Government have made representations to the Government to the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics; and what were the dates on which such representations were (a) made and (b) replied to.

Mr. Renton The following Soviet Jewish cases were raised during 1985 with the Soviet authorities at ministerial or official level:

Anatoly Shcharansky—May, July, August
Alexandr Kholmiansky—February, May
Roald Zelichenok—July, August
Iosif Begun—May
Ida Nudel—May

All five individuals have applied for, and been refused, permission to emigrate to Israel. They were also the victims of other serious forms of deprivation of liberty and harassment. In all cases, our representations were met either with no response, or with the answer that these cases had been dealt with in accordance with Soviet law. The cases of a few Soviet Jews having family links with the United Kingdom and seeking to come here have also been raised among bilateral personal cases. In the interests of those concerned, however, we do not normally make details of these public.

WALES

Sellafield

Mr. Best asked the Secretary of State for Wales what discussions he has had about the effect on Wales of the recent discharges of radioactive waste from Sellafield; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mark Robinson: As my hon. Friend the Minister for Environment, Countryside and Local Government assured the House on 19 February, the Welsh Office is in close liaison with the DOE and the MAFF, and with other bodies, in discussions about the environmental aspects of radioactive waste discharges, including those from Sellafield. In addition, the Welsh Office has an assessor on the Radioactive Waste Management Advisory Committee and on the Committee on Medical Aspects of Radiation in the Community.

Housing Repairs

Mr. Gwilym Jones asked the Secretary of State for Wales (1) if he will publish in the Official Report a summary of the tenders notified for the repair of former council houses in Wales under the Housing Defects Act showing (a) location, (b) type of design, (c) total cost, (d) planning and building regulation fees, (e) design costs, *(f)*supervision costs, (g) value added tax and (h) net cost for works;

(2) if he will publish in the Official Report a summary of the costs notified for the repair of former council homes in Wales under the Housing Defects Act showing (a) location, (b) type of design, (c) total cost and (d) costs for necessary temporary accommodation; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mark Robinson: This information is not collected by the Department.

Labour Statistics

Mr. Wigley asked the Secretary of State for Wales what have been the statistical projections for Wales used by his Department between 1979 and now concerning changes in (a) the total number of economically active people, (b) the number of employees in employment and (c) the number of self-employed persons, showing if possible the changes in these projections at approximately 12-monthly intervals.

Mr. Nicholas Edwards: Of the three sectors mentioned, statistical projections are used by the Welsh Office in relation to the economically active. Projections of this group are prepared by the Department of Employment and appeared in the following editions of the Employment Gazette:

February 1986 — (Regional Labour Force Outlook to 1991).
April 1984—(Regional Labour Force Outlook to 1991).
November 1981 — (Regional Labour Force Outlook to 1986).
September 1978 (Regional Civilian Labour Force Projections).

Woolaway Homes

Mr. Ron Davies asked the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list by district council area the location of Woolaway type homes eligible for refurbishment under the Housing Defects Act.

Mr. Mark Robinson: According to information provided by district councils, there are Woolaway houses in the private sector, which originated in the public sector, in the following districts: Cardiff; Cynon Valley; Islwyn; Ogwr; Rhymney Valley; Taff Ely; and Vale of Glamorgan.

Mr. Ron Davies asked the Secretary of State for Wales (1) what information he has as to why no Woolaway homes in the private sector have been refurbished;

(2) what information he has as to the costs likely to be incurred by Woolaway home owners for the refurbishment of their homes; and if he will make a statement;

(3) what steps he is taking to determine whether the cost limit available under the Housing Defects Act for the refurbishment of Woolaway type homes is adequate.

Mr. Mark Robinson: One of the conditions for owners receiving assistance by way of reinstatement grant under the Housing Defects Act 1984 is that after reinstatement the dwelling should be likely to be mortgageable. No repair system for Woolaway homes which would be generally acceptable to lending institutions has up to now been available. I understand that PRC Homes Ltd. is likely to license such a system very shortly and has received a further four systems for consideration.

Once approved systems become available we will be monitoring the costs or reinstatement to see if the eligible expense limit is appropriate as it applies to Woolaway houses.

Mr. Ron Davies asked the Secretary of State for Wales what provison exists for owner-occupiers who have bought Woolaway type homes from local authorities to resell to that authority if they are unable to achieve refurbishment within the cost limits allowed; and what financial provision is made to those local authorities for such repurchase.

Mr. Mark Robinson: We are prepaed to prescribe a higher eligible expense limit should it prove necessary. Should it not prove practicable to repair Woolaway houses at reasonable cost, owner-occupiers will automatically become entitled to assistance by way of repurchase under section 3(2) of the Housing Defects Act; however I expect practicable repair methods to be available soon. We have made special allocations to housing authorities in Wales to meet in full their reasonable estimates of their commitments under the Housing Defects Act in 1986-87.

Mr. Ron Davies asked the Secretary of State for Wales whether the PRC homes standard, applicable to all other property types specified in the Housing defects Act, will apply to the refurbishment of Woolaway type homes.

Mr. Mark Robinson: Yes. One of the conditions for owners receiving assistance by way of reinstatment grant under the Housing Defects Act 1984 is that after reinstatement the dwelling should be likely to be mortgageable. Building socieities so far have been generally unwilling to lend on any dwelling designated under the Housing Defects Act 1984 unless it is reinstated by means of a scheme licensed by PRC Homes Ltd.

Mr. Ron Davies asked the Secretary of State for Wales pursuant to the answer of 19 February, Official Report, column 167, if he will place in the Library copies of the representations he has received concerning Woolaway homes.

Mr. Mark Robinson: No. All the representations were unsolicited letters from private individuals and it would be inappropriate to make them available without permission from the individuals concerned.

Housing (Refurbishment)

Mr. Ron Davies asked the Secretary of State for Wales (1) if he will list the total number of completions by local authorities in Wales of refurbishment under the Housing Defects Act, stating by local authorities the minimum, maximum and average cost of such refurbishment;

(2) if he will list, by district council area, the number of completions, by type, of homes under the housing Defects Act, and the number of refurbishments currently under way.

Mr. Mark Robinson: The information is taken from provisional returns provided by district councils and gives the position at December 1985.

One completed reinstatement grant has been paid under the terms of the Housing Defects Act 1984. The grant was paid by Monmouth district council and was for £12,257. The numbers and amounts of grants approved but not completed is as follows:

District Council	Number of grants approved	Amount of grant approved £
Delyn	11	128,281
Newport	11	113,618
Rhymney Valley	2	23,063
Taff Ely	1	14,000

Information on the types of dwellings involved is not yet available.

Mr. Ron Davies asked the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list those homes, by type, eligible for refurbishment under the Housing Defects Act, other than Woolaway type, and other than single-storey, where all external walls have to be treated or where an inner lining can be maintained.

Mr. Mark Robinson: It is necessary to treat all external walls in reinstating every type of dwelling designated under the Housing Defects Act 1984. In some or all of the following types, the lining can be maintained: Airey, Cornish Unit, Dorran, Myton, Newland, Orlit, Stent, Unity, Wates and Woolaway.

Biomass International, Clwyd

Mr. Barry Jones asked the Secretary of State for Wales how much Welsh Development Agency cash has been made available and in what form to Biomass International, Clwyd.

Mr. Nicholas Edwards: The Welsh Development Agency made finance available to Biomass International Limited in the form of £400,000 for cumulative redeemable preference shares and £16,666 for ordinary shares.

Mr. Barry Jones asked the Secretary of State for Wales how much Welsh Office moneys, including selective financial assistance, has been given to Biomass International, Clwyd.

Mr. Nicholas Edwards: The only financial assistance offered by the Welsh Office to this company has been regional selective assistance. This took the form of a job creation grant not exceeding £608,000 offered to Biomass Ltd, which traded as Biomass International, in respect of a project to provide 76 jobs at Deeside.

With this type of assistance, the amount of grant paid is related directly to the number of jobs actually provided. Only one part-payment of grant was made, against the jobs which had been created by October 1985.

DEFENCE

Telephone Security

Mr. Robert Atkins asked the Secretary of State for Defence what plans he has for improving telephone security in his Department.

Mr. Younger: The risk of interception by hostile intelligence services of official telephone calls, including those made on the Government telephone network, is growing continually. My Department's security regulations contain explicit instructions warning against the discussion of classified information on the telephone, but I have decided that further action is required to ensure that those instructions are complied with. My Department will therefore be undertaking a number of telephone monitoring exercises over the next few months. These will be strictly confined to certain internal Ministry of Defence telephone lines, and calls on the public network will not be monitored.

Departmental Policy

Mr. Soames asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the objectives of his Department's policies for the rest of this Parliament.

Mr. Younger: The main objective of British defence policy is the maintenance of national security and peace with freedom and justice. We aim to achieve this by continuing to play a full and active part in the North Atlantic Alliance so as to contribute to collective deterrence against aggression; and by promoting peace and stability elsewhere in the world. We intend to continue to enhance the capability of the United Kingdom's Armed Forces; encourage the achievement of verifiable arms control agreements; play a full part in organisations for European defence co-operation; pursue efficiency and value for money in defence expenditure, including the promotion of competition and international collaboration in equipment procurement; and rationalise and further contract-out support activities in order to release more resources for the front line.

Science Studentships

Mr. Dalyell asked the Secretary of State for Defence when he will reply to the letters of 24 January and 11 February from Professor B. G. Gowenlock, head of the department of chemistry, Heriot Watt university, concerning science studentships funded by his Department.

Mr. Lee: A reply was sent by an official to Professor Gowenlock on 14 February.

Ulster Defence Regiment

Mr. McNamara asked the Secretary of State for Defence on how many occasions and on which occasions units of the Ulster Defence Regiment have been forced to fire upon motor cars which have deliberately driven at members of the Ulster Defence Regiment.

Mr. Stanley: I shall write to the hon. Member.

Nuclear Waste

Mr. Michael McNair-Wilson asked the Secretary of State for Defence which sites belonging to his Department are to be used for exploratory work in treating nuclear waste pursuant to the statement by the Secretary of State for the Environment on 25 February.

Mr. Lee: My right hon. Friend the Member for Mole Valley (Mr. Baker), in his statement on 25 February, when referring to deep disposal sites, mentioned that the nuclear industry was seeking ways of improving the conditioning of intermediate level wastes. Staff at the Atomic Weapons Research Esablishments at Aldermaston are collaborating with the civil nuclear industry in a research programme on the conditioning of such wastes for deep disposal.

Mr. Wallace asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the sites he is considering for possible dispersal of radioactive reactor compartments arising from the decommissioning of nuclear powered submarines, pursuant to the statement of the Secretary of State for the Environment on 25 February.

Mr. Dalyell asked the Secretary of State for Defence which coastal areas within his Department's control will be examined as possible sites for the disposal of radioactive waste from decommissioned nuclear-powered vessels: and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Foulkes asked the Secretary of State for Defence which coastal areas within his Department's control will be examined as possible sites for the disposal of radioactive waste from decommissioned nuclear-powered vessels; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lee: If an inland site is selected to meet the requirement described by my right hon. Friend, the Secretary of State for the Environment, on 25 February at column 812, it may be necessary to establish a small separate coastal site for disposing of the reactor compartments of decommissioned nuclear powered submarines. No decisions have yet been taken. Once suitable MOD sites have been identified for exploratory work to be undertaken on a contingency basis, the House will be informed, and the work would be subject to normal planning procedures. Any subsequent development of a site, should that prove necessary, would be subject to a public inquiry.

SOCIAL SERVICES

Disabled People (Services)

Mr. Wigley asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what is his estimate of the total annual expenditure in the current year on services related to the needs of disabled people; and what was the corresponding expenditure during 1981.

Mr. Newton: It is not practicable to calculate the total amount spent in any one year on measures of benefit to disabled people since many services are provided for them in common with other groups and some items, such as staff costs, cannot be separately identified.

Birth Statistics

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Secretary of State for Social Services whether he will publish the latest available statistics for the rates of intervention in birth by (a) caesarian section and (b) forceps, suction or other means per 1,000 births by health authority area; and what information he has as to how the British figures compare with those in (i) the United States of America, (ii) other EEC countries and (iii) Sweden; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Whitney: Information for England is given in table 1. The Department does not routinely collect information for other countries but some information collated from several non-Government publications is given in table 2.

The decision to perform a caesarian section, or any other procedure, in a particular case is, of course, a matter of clinical judgment.

Hemel Hempstead General Hospital

Mr. Robert B. Jones asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will make a statement on the facilities to be provided in phase 1 of the Hemel Hempstead general hospital; and when it is due to be completed.

Mr. Whitney: The Hemel Hempstead general hospital phase 1 will provide 84 acute beds, an intensive care unit, an outpatients' department, an X-ray department, three operating theatres, rehabilitation services, catering and other supporting services. The estimated date for building completion is September 1986, following which a period of commissioning takes place before the hospital is opened.

Waiting Lists

Miss Boothroyd asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what is the number on waiting lists at hospitals in the Sandwell health authority and Dudley health authority for surgical, medical and other kinds of operations or treatments, including geriatrics and psychogeriatrics.

Mr. Whitney: The information is given in the table.

Single Payments

Mr. Wigley asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will publish in the Official Report the numbers and value of single payments of supplementary benefit in each of the Deparment of Health and Social Security Offices serving the county of Gwynedd in each year since November 1980, showing separate figures for maternity expenses, funeral expenses and other single payments.

Mr. Major: Information about the numbers and value of single payments awarded for maternity and funeral expenses is not collected on a local basis. The following table sets out the total number of single payments made by local offices serving the county of Gwynedd, and their value, since 1980 for years ending early in April.

Ambulance Service (Pay)

Mr. Kirkwood asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what will be the total cost nationally of the recent ambulance service pay award.

Mr. Whitney: The cost in 1985-86 is expected to be contained within an increase of 4·7 per cent. of the pay bill. Costs in subsequent years will depend upon the outcome of local agreements intended to lead to major improvements in productivity.

Mr. Kirkwood asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what representations he has received from (a) English health authorities, (b) regional general managers and (c) trade unions, about the recent ambulance service pay award.

Mr. Whitney: Negotiations on pay are a matter for the ambulance Whitley Council and there are direct lines of communication between the management side and National Health Service management. Some representations have been made by regional general managers and others about the local effects of the recent pay settlement. We have not received any representations from trade unions.

Mr. Kirkwood asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what provisions the National Health Service management board have made in existing budgets to cover the cost of the recent ambulance service pay award; and whether this award will exceed those budgeted provisions.

Mr. Whitney: Health authorities are expected to meet both pay increases and service requirements from the allocations made to them by Government and from their growing cost improvement programmes.

Mr. Kirkwood asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what estimate has been made by each of the ambulance services in England of the cost of implementing the recent ambulance service pay award.

Mr. Whitney: This information is not held centrally.

Addenbrooke's and Papworth Hospitals

Sir Anthony Grant asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what is the amount of public money allocated to Addenbrook's hospital, Cambridge and Papworth hospital, respectively, in each of the last 10 years.

Mr. Whitney: This information is not held centrally. The hon. Member may like to consult the chairman of the district health authorities concerned, namely Cambridge for Addenbrooke's hospital and Huntingdon for Papworth hospital.

Primary Health Care

Sir Geoffrey Finsberg asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what is the annual expenditure per person on primary health care in (a) Hampstead, (b) Brighton and (c) Islington; and how these figures compare with the national average.

Mr. Hayhoe: Following are the latest available figures:

*Expenditure per head of population on primary health care

District Health Authority	1984-85 £
Hampstead	101
Brighton	90
Islington	96
Average for district health authorities (England)	83

* Current expenditure on community health services plus net expenditure on family practitioner services. The latter expenditure cannot strictly be attributed to particular districts but has been included (pro-rata to population) from the annual accounts of the family practitioner committees which account for it.

Mr. Hancock asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what has been the expenditure on primary health care in the Portsmouth and South-East Hampshire health authority in the last three years.

Mr. Hayhoe: Following are the figures requested:

Expenditure per head of population on primary health care for Portsmouth and South-East Hampshire Health Authority*

1982-83	78
1983-84	82
1984-85	89

* Current expenditure on community health services plus net expenditure on family practitioner services. The latter expenditure cannot strictly be attributed to particular districts but has been included (pro-rata to population) from the annual accounts of the family practitioner committee which accounts for it.

Local Adjudication Officers

Mr. Ewing asked the Secretary of State for Social Services whether local adjudication officers are required to reside in the area for which they have responsibility; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Major: Adjudication officers in local social security offices are not required to reside in the area for which they have responsibility but they do, of course, work in offices in or very near to the area served by their particular local office.

Abortions

Ms. Richardson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what was the number of legal abortions, by category of premises, National Health Service and non-National Health Service, to women usually resident in (a) England and Wales, (b) the North-East Thames regional health authority and (c) each of the district health authorities of that regional health authority for each quarter of 1985 or up to the latest quarter for which the data is available.

Mr. Hayhoe: The available information is given in the table, which shows notifications of legal abortions carried out under the Abortion Act 1967. The figures exclude late notifications received after the end of January 1986, and are therefore provisional.

Benefit Uprating

Mr. Chope asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what he estimates to be the administrative cost of implementing the benefits uprating which he announced on 24 February.

Mr. Newton: Around £16 million.

Housing Benefit

Mr. Watts asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what is the average amount of housing benefit paid to single supplementary benefit claimants in Slough (a) for furnished accommodation and (b) for local authority accommodation.

Mr. Major: I regret that this information is not available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Hancock asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what proportion of domestic ratepayers in Portsmouth receive housing benefit.

Mr. Major: I shall let the hon. Member have a reply as soon as possible.

Mr. Hancock asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he has any plans to introduce changes to the housing benefit regulations with regard to part III sheltered accommodation; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Newton: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Rugby and Kenilworth (Mr. Pawsey) on 13 December 1985 at columns 815-816.

Medicines

Mr. McCrindle asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will undertake an inquiry into the illegal import of medicines, including the extent to which such medicines are unlicensed; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hayhoe: I shall let my hon. Friend have a reply as soon as possible.

Residential Homes

Mr. Ashley asked the Secretary of State for Social Services, for each year since 1980 for which figures are available, how much each local authority has spent on payments towards residential care in voluntary and private sector homes.

Mr. Whitney [pursuant to his reply, 10 February 1986, c. 368]. The table gives the figures for individual local authorities as promised in my earlier reply. Further checking of the figures for individual authorities has resulted in minor changes to the national totals previously given. The 1984-85 figures are incomplete because some authorities have not yet submitted expenditure returns for that year.

North-Western Regional Health Authority

Mr. Tony Lloyd asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) pursuant to his answer of 4 February, Official Report, columns 143-4, what were the difficulties in securing suitable nominations for a member of the North-Western regional health authority from a trade union background; what steps he took after October 1984 to overcome these difficulties, how many nominations he received after October 1984 from the North-West Trade Union Congress and individual trade unions, and when; what formal response he made to those nominating bodies; and why he has not appointed any of those nominated;

(2) pursuant to the answer of 4 February, Official Report, columns 143-4, why the previous member with a trade union background was not reappointed to the North-Western regional health authority; when he expects to make an appointment to the vacant post; and what criteria he will use in making such an appointment.

Mr. Hayhoe [pursuant to his reply, 10 February 1986, c. 370]: Members of regional health authorities are appointed for their personal qualities and ability to contribute to the corporate work of the authority. Other factors taken into consideration include age, health, place of residence and potential conflicts of interest. Nominations are sought from a number of sources but the Secretary of State is not required to appoint from among them. One nominee of the wider trade union movement declined the offer of appointment in August 1985 but another has now been invited to serve.

Severe Weather Payments

Ms. Harman asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) how much was paid out to claimants for exceptionally severe weather in 1985 by (a) Blenheim grove office SE15 (b) Bournemouth road office SE15 (c) London offices;

(2) how many claims were accepted for payment under exceptionally severe weather in 1985 in (a) Blenheim grove office (b) Bournemouth road office (c) London offices.

Mr. Newton [pursuant to his reply, 24 February 1986, c. 471]: It is estimated that approximately 7,500 claims were accepted for payment and £83,500 was paid by offices in the London area. This estimate is based on returns from 88 per cent. of offices in that area. A total of 361 claims were accepted for payment and £3,524 was paid out to claimants by the Bournemouth road office, SE15. I am afraid that because of a clerical error the information requested is not available for Blenheim grove office, SE15.

Social Security Offices (Staff)

Sir Geoffrey Finsberg asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what is the approximate turnover of staff in grades of clerical assistant and clerical officers, respectively, in social security offices open to the public covering the Hampstead and Highgate constituency, together with maximum and minimum rates of turnover, naming the offices concerned.

Mr. Major [pursuant to his reply, 26 February 1986, c. 610]: I regret that my earlier reply omitted some of the information requested. Full details for the year ending 31 December 1985 follow:

Turnover is defined as those staff who leave the Department (including those who retire) change offices within the Department or are promoted within an office. The number of staff who leave the Department (including those who retire) is lower. Both sets of figures are set out in the table:

NHS Spectacles

Mr. Carter-Jones asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) if he plans to end the supply of National Health Service glasses through the hospital eye service;

(2) what arrangements he intends to make for patients in the hospital eye service when supplies of National Health Service glasses through the general ophthalmic service end in July.

Mr. Hayhoe: [pursuant to his reply, 26 February 1986 c. 610.]: Arrangements for dispensing glasses in the hospital eye service following the planned introduction of a voucher system to replace dispensing in the general ophthalmic services are under consideration. There will shortly be consultation on the proposals.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Departmental Policies

Mr. Soames asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make a statement on the objectives of his Department's policies for the rest of this Parliament.

Mr. Butcher: The continuing aim of the Department is to increase the national production of wealth; to promote and enhance the vitality and competitiveness of British trade, industry and commerce within a proper regulatory framework and to increase the United Kingdom's share of world trade.

Advanced Computer Technology

Mr. Alton asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what steps he is taking to encourage British and overseas companies with interests in advanced computer technology to help finance projects to explore the potential uses of advanced computer technology in the university curriculum; what study he has made in this context of Project Athena at the Massachusetts Institute of Technology; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Butcher: My Department has taken no specific initiative in this area. The use of advanced computer technology in the university curriculum is primarily a matter for my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Education and Science, and I am aware of the steps that he has been taking.

Lloyd's

Mr. Yeo: asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what is the deadline for making submissions to the committee of inquiry into regulatory arrangements at Lloyd's.

Mr. Howard: Sir Patrick Neill's committee issued yesterday an open invitation to all those with an interest in its work to submit evidence in writing by 27 March. I am placing copies of the invitation in the Library in order to assist those Members of the House who may wish to put their views to the committee.

Rolls-Royce Ltd.

Mr. Bowen Wells asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how it is proposed to fund preliminary expenses in connection with the sale of shares in Rolls-Royce.

Mr. Peter Morrison: [pursuant to his reply, 11 November 1985, c. 48]: The reduction in the cash limit on Class IV, Vote 17, will be from £147,959,000 to £147,909,000.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Prisoners (Table Salt)

Mr. Dubs asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department in what circumstances and by what authority prisoners are required to pay for table salt; if he will list the prison department establishments to which this applies; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mellor: No prisoner is required to pay for table salt. As part of a review last year of dietary scales for prison inmates salt was made a scaled item for provision purposes instead of being issued without limit as in the past. The object of the change was to ensure that the intake of salt as part of the diet would not significantly exceed a level which modern nutritional authorities regard as acceptable for the maintenance of good health. However, salt is available for prisoners to add to food. Objections have been raised by inmates in some establishments to the reduced level of provision and at one establishment the governor made salt available for purchase from the prison canteen. This arrangement has now ceased. In view of the objections by inmates the prison medical authorities have been asked to re-examine the scale of provision with a view to providing more salt in the diet without the risk of adversely affecting health.

Ammunition Purchases

Mrs. Dunwoody asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether plastic bullets or practice rounds were purchased from the firm Hirtemberger Patronen in the years 1982-83 and 1983-84.

Mr. Giles Shaw: Plastic baton rounds supplied to police forces in England and Wales are obtained from the Ministry of Defence.

Prisoners (Transfers)

Mr. McNamara asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many prisoners were transferred from (a) England and Wales to Northern Ireland and *(b)*from Northern Ireland to England and Wales in 1984; and under which section of the Criminal Justice Act 1961 such transfers were carried out.

Mr. Mellor: Three prisoners were transferred from England and Wales to Northern Ireland in 1984. One of these transfers was under section 26 of the Criminal Justice Act 1961 (permanent transfer), one under section 27 (temporary transfer) and one under section 29 (transfer for judicial purposes other than trial). Four prisoners were transferred from Northern Ireland to England and Wales, three under section 26 and one under section 27.

Immigration Service, Heathrow

Mr. Madden asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the establishment for immigration service staff at terminal four at Heathrow airport; how many staff, to date, have been appointed; and what steps he has taken to satisfy himself that staffing levels are adequate to provide passengers with a reasonable service.

Mr. Waddington: The establishment for immigration service operational staff at terminal 4, Heathrow, is four inspectors, 16 chief immigration officers and 96 immigration officers. The majority of these have been appointed to terminal 4, but are currently employed at the other Heathrow terminals or elsewhere in the immigration service. The remainder are currently being trained. In giving approval to this allocation of staff to terminal 4, careful account was taken of the traffic projections of the British Airports Authority and of a comparative analysis of average passenger clearance rates at the other Heathrow terminals.

Mr. Madden asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many interpreters are required to assist immigration service personnel at terminal four at Heathrow; and how many, to date, have been appointed.

Mr. Waddington: I would refer the hon. Member to the reply given to a similar question from the hon. Member for Birmingham, Erdington (Mr. Corbett), on 26 February, at column 566.

Ports of Entry

Mr. Madden asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list separately all (a) designated and (b) non-designated ports of entry in the United Kingdom; what are the main criteria he uses for designating a port of entry; and what are the primary differences in practice between designated and undesignated ports.

Mr. Waddington: The ports of entry designated under the Immigration (Port of Entry) (Amendment) Order 1979 are:

Seaports and Hoverports

Dover	Plymouth
Felixstowe	Portsmouth
Folkestone	Ramsgate Hoverport
Harwich	Sheerness
Hull	Southampton
London	Tyne
Newhaven

Airports

Aberdeen	Liverpool
Belfast	Luton
Birmingham	Lydd (Ferryfield)
Bournemouth (Hurn)	Tees-side
Bristol	Manchester
Cardiff (Wales)	Newcastle (Woolsington)
East Midlands	Norwich
Edinburgh (Turnhouse)	Prestwick
Gatwick-London	Southampton
Glasgow	Southend
Heathrow-London	Stansted-London

All other ports are undesignated.

Ports are considered for designation when it has been demonstrated that scheduled services carrying substantial numbers of passengers subject to immigration control arrive at the port, or, in the case of airports, are diversion airports.

The main difference in practice between designated and undesignated ports is that at the latter carriers must obtain the permission of the Secretary of State to operate services into the port unless, as provided under paragraph 26(1) of schedule 2 to the Immigration Act 1971, the owners or agents have reasonable cause to believe that all disembarking passengers are British citizens.

Mr. Madden asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many passengers, in total and by each port of entry, embarked and disembarked through undesignated ports of entry in each of the last three years; and if he is currently considering designating any further ports of entry.

Mr. Waddington: The information is not available to answer the first part of the question. The answer to the second part is no.

Immigration Cases (Confidential Correspondence)

Mr. Madden asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he is yet in a position to say when he expects the completion of the internal inquiry into how matters relating to representations made to his Department by hon. and right hon. Members on immigration cases were published by the Daily Telegraph on 3 December 1985; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hurd: The inquiry has been completed and my hon. and learned Friend has written to the hon. Member for Birmingham, Ladywood (Ms. Short), with a copy to the hon. Member, giving its outcome.

SCOTLAND

Woolaway Type Homes

Mr. Ron Davies asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will state the total number and their location, by district council area, of Woolaway type homes eligible for refurbishment under the Housing Defects Act, and the number of refurbishments (a) commenced, (b) completed and (c) not started because of grant limits.

Mr. Ancram: There are no Woolaway type homes in Scotland.

Homes (Refurbishment)

Mr. Ron Davies asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list, by district council area, the number of completions, by type, of homes under the Housing Defects Act, and the number of refurbishments currently underway.

Mr. Ancram: Local authorities have indicated that no refurbishments of homes under the Act have been completed or are currently under way.

Scottish Examination Board

Mr. Bruce asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will institute an inquiry into the operation of the Scottish Examination Board during the academic year 1984-85 with regard to the number of complaints about exam results, the recruitment of markers in the current year and the Scottish Examination Board's ability to maintain marking standards.

Mr. Allan Stewart: I see no need for such an inquiry. I congratulate the board on maintaining its normal high standards in the operation of the 1985 examinations in the face of considerable difficulties and am confident that these standards will be maintained in 1986.

Health Service (Common Services Agency)

Mr. Corrie asked the Secretary of State for Scotland whether, in the light of the development of general management in the Scottish Health Service, he will secure the appointment of a general manager to the common services agency of the Scottish Health Service; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Rifkind: Yes. I have asked the common services agency to appoint a general manager, and it is now proceeding to do so.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Council for Licensed Conveyances (Secretary)

Mr. Weetch asked the Attorney-General what was the official date for the appointment of Nigel Osner as secretary designate to the Council for Licensed Conveyancers'; and when he expects to commence work.

The Attorney-General: The secretary designate was appointed with effect from 21 October 1985, and began work on that day.

Mr. Weetch asked the Attorney-General whether the secretary designate of the Council for Licensed Conveyancers will work independently of the Lord Chancellor's Department; and on what terms and salary.

The Attorney-General: The Council for Licensed Conveyancers will be set up under section 12 of the Administration of Justice Act 1985. It will be an independent and self-regulating body. The secretary designate, Mr. Osner, will be responsible to the council and will work independently of the Lord Chancellor's Department. Mr. Osner is a senior legal assistant. Whilst on secondment to the council he will retain the terms and conditions of services applicable to that grade.

Mr. Weetch asked the Attorney-General whether the appointment of Nigel Osner as Secretary Designate to the Council for Licensed Conveyancers was made after consultation with the Law Society.

The Attorney-General: No.

Legal Aid

Mr. Malins asked the Attorney-General how many appeals to the Law Society at Brighton were made by defendants in magistrates courts against a refusal by the court to grant legal aid: and how many of those appeals were successful in each of the years 1983, 1984 and 1985.

The Attorney-General: This information has been published in the Law Society's annual reports on the operation and finance of part I of the Legal Aid Act 1984 for the financial years since the right to recourse was introduced on 1 March 1984. Information by calendar year cannot be prepared in the time available.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Examination Qualifications

Mr. Robert B. Jones asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will publish a table setting out the average examination qualifications obtained per candidate at each level of examination in each year since 1970 for schools in Northern Ireland.

Dr. Mawhinney: The information is not available in the form requested.

Prison Population

Mr. McNamara asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what is the size of the present prison population in Northern Ireland divided into terrorist type offenders and other offenders categorised by age and by sex in the following groups; under 18 years olds, 18-25 years, 25 to 30 years, 30 to 40 years, 40 to 50 years, 50 to 60 years and over 60 years; and if he will give a breakdown of the length of sentence being served by each age group.

Mr. Scott: I shall reply to the hon. Member as soon as possible.

Autocrime

Mr. McNamara asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many stolen vehicles were recovered in each police division in Northern Ireland in 1985.

Mr. Scott: I shall reply to the hon. Member as soon as possible.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Social Security Expenditure

Mr. Ralph Howell asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what proportion of gross domestic product at market prices was allocated to expenditure on social security in 1960, 1970, 1979, 1980, 1981, 1982, 1983, 1984 and 1985, respectively.

Mr. MacGregor: Expenditure on social security as a proportion of gross domestic product at market prices was as follows:

	Proportion of gross domestic product
1960	6
1970	8
1979	11
1980	11
1981	12
1982	13
1983	13
1984	13

An estimate for 1985 is not yet available.

Gross National Product

Dr. Owen asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will publish figures for the gross national product per capita adjusted for the differing rates of inflation between those countries classed as having industrial market economies for the latest year for which figures are available.

Mr. Lawson: The reply given to the right hon. Member on 27 February included figures for all but three of the countries classified as "Industrial Market Economies" by the World Bank. The following figures, which are again taken from the World Development Review 1985, complete this list:

Country	GNP per capita Dollars 1983
Italy	6,400
Ireland	5,000
Spain	4,780

Word Processors

Mr. Chope asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many word processors there are in his Department.

Mr. Brooke: Fifty three.

Customs and Excise Office, Faversham

Mr. Crouch asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what consideration he has given to the effect of moving the Customs and Excise office from Faversham to Ramsgate on shipping using Whitstable harbour.

Mr. Brooke: The customs paperwork and control of cargo concerning shipping using Whitstable harbour is to be transferred from Faversham to Ramsgate. There are no other changes.

Mr. Crouch asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make it his policy not to transfer the Customs and Excise office from Faversham to Ramsgate.

Mr. Brooke: At present the office at Faversham deals with both customs and excise matters and it is only the customs work which will be transferred — the excise work will continue to be performed at Faversham.

Customs is constantly reviewing its staffing arrangements and seeking to achieve greater efficiency in line with Government policy. The local collector considers the transfer of entry processing work to Ramsgate will lead to better management and greater efficiency where it will be possible to make use of new office technology as it is introduced. I understand that discussions are continuing with the trade interests concerned to ensure they are able to take full advantage of benefits accruing from this transfer.

Corporate Sector (Taxation)

Dr. Owen asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) what the increase in the total oil taxation in the corporate sector has been between 1979-80 and 1985-86 (a) in cash terms and (b) in real terms;

(2) what the increase in the non-oil taxation in the corporate sector has been between 1979-80 and 1985-86 (a) in cash terms and (b) in real terms.

Mr. Lawson [pursuant to his reply, 27 February 1986]: The figures are as follows:

Change between 1979-80 and 1985-86 (£ billion)*

		(a) cash	(b) †1984-85 prices
1.	North Sea revenues	+9·1	+7·4
2.	Onshore corporation tax‡	+3·3	+0·6
3.	Total	+12·4	+8·0

* Based on autumn statement forecast for 1985-86.
† Deflated using GDP deflator.
‡ Non-North sea mainstream corporation tax, plus advance corporation tax but excluding ACT set off against North sea liabilities.

THE ARTS

North-west Region

Mr. Tony Lloyd asked the Minister for the Arts if he will give a breakdown of Government funding for the Arts allocated for the north-west region for each year from 1978 to 1985.

Mr. Luce: The figures are as follows:

1978-79	490,069
1979-80	578,474
1980-81	662,483
1981-82	751,055
1982-83	864,849
1983-84	932,393
1984-85	1,031,953
1985-86	1,084,500

These figures show real terms increase over the period of 18 per cent.

EMPLOYMENT

Labour Statistics

Mr. Deakins asked the Paymaster General what was the increase in the United Kingdom population of working age in the periods 1974-75 to 1978-79 and 1979-80 to 1983-84, respectively; and what was the average annual percentage increase in each of the two periods.

Mr. Lang: The United Kingdom population of working age increased by 615,000 between mid-1974 and mid-1978, and by 758,000 between mid-1979 and mid-1983. The average annual percentage increase in each of the two periods was 0·5 and 0·6 per cent. respectively.

Mr. Leighton asked the Paymaster General how many jobs in total were lost in the United Kingdom between 1979 and 1985; and how many jobs in total were lost in the rest of the European Economic Community during the same period.

Mr. Lang: Information on employment in the European Community as a whole is available only up to 1984. Between 1979 and 1984 total employment in the United Kingdom fell by 1,391,000, while in the rest of the European Community Ten it fell by 548,000.

Mr. Phillip Oppenheim asked the Paymaster General what proportion of people were in work in Amber Valley and Derbyshire for (a) 1970, (b) 1975 and (c) the last year for which figures are available.

Mr. Lang: I shall reply to my hon. Friend as soon as possible.

Mr. Chope asked the Paymaster General how much information his Department keeps about the identity of individuals who have been unemployed for more than 12 months.

Mr. Lang: My Department keeps the name, address, national insurance number and the first date of claim of all unemployed claimants.

Mr. Marlow asked the Paymaster General how many people were employed (a) in total and (b) in full-time equivalent in (i) 1956, (ii) 1960, (iii) 1970, (iv) 1980 and (v) 1985.

Mr. Lang: The available estimates are as follows:

Employed labour force in Great Britain*

September	Thousands
1956†	24,049
1960	23,737
1970	24,236
1980	24,549
1985	23,799

* The employed labour force is the sum of employees in employment, the self employed and Her Majesty's forces.

† The figure for 1956 is based on the count of national insurance cards and is not directly comparable with the figures for later years. A fully comparable figure for 1956 might be about 600,000 lower than the recorded figure.

The employees in employment estimates are split between full and part-time for census of employment dates and, for females only, quarterly since 1977. These estimates are as follows for the available dates nearest to those specified in the question.

Part-time employees in employment in Great Britain

	Male Thousands	Female Thousands
June 1971	584	2,757
September 1980	n/a	3,834
September 1981	718	3,781
September 1985	n/a	4,340

n/a=Not available.

Quarterly estimates of the numbers of part-time male employees for dates from September 1984 will be published when the results of the 1984 census of employment become available later this year.

The available estimates are insufficiently detailed for the calculation of a reliable series of full-time equivalent estimates.

Youth Training Scheme

Mr. Deakins asked the Paymaster General to what the difference between the estimated cost of a two year YTS and an amount equal to double the current cost of a one-year cost of a one-year YTS is attributable; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Trippier: There are two main reasons why two-year YTS will not cost twice as much as one-year YTS. First, not all those who enter two-year YTS will stay for a second year, even though entitled to, and therefore the number of trainees on the new scheme will be less than double the number on the existing scheme. Secondly, we expect employers to increase their contribution to training costs in two-year YTS.

Mr. Deakins asked the Paymaster General what is the average annual cost to Her Majesty's Government of each trainee on a one-year YTS; what will be the average annual cost on a two-year YTS; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Trippier: The average cost per filled place of one-year YTS in 1985-86 is estimated at around £2,800 per year. The corresponding cost for two-year YTS in 1986-87 is expected to be around £2,600 per year.

Community Programme

Mr. Steel asked the Paymaster General if he will make it his policy to increase the average wage for community programme employees to £69 per week; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lang: I refer the right hon. Member to my reply on 19 February, at column 183. The average wage is under review.

Sir Trevor Skeet asked the Paymaster General how many community programme schemes have been submitted to the Manpower Services Commission for approval in England in the past year; and how many have been actually approved giving the total number of people covered by such schemes.

Mr. Lang: It is not possible, except at disproportionate cost, to identify the project applications submitted to the Manpower Services Commission in the past year and subsequently approved or rejected. However, the stock of projects in England has increased from 6,500 providing 104,500 jobs at the end of January 1985, to 8,100 providing 144,500 jobs on 31 January 1986.

Long-term Unemployed Persons

Mr. Hancock asked the Paymaster General what new schemes he is considering for the long-term unemployed in the Portsmouth travel-to-work area.

Mr. Lang: All our current employment and training measures are available in the Portsmouth travel-to-work area. In addition, we are considering the results of our pilot initiatives in their particular areas to see what success we are achieving, and how we can best build on it.

ENVIRONMENT

Housing Defects (Financial Allocation)

Mr. Pendry asked the Secretary of State for the Environment why, in allocating £30 million of 1986-87 housing investment programme allocation for works under the Housing Defects Act 1984, no local authority in the north-west was given anything.

Sir George Young: The need for expenditure by local authorities under the Housing Defects Act is taken into account in the generalised needs index. But in recognition of the needs of those regions containing authorities likely to face particularly large obligations under the Act in 1986-87, £30 million was allocated to the regional level outside the GNI. No such separate allocation was considered justified for the north-west region.

North-west (Non-traditional Properties)

Mr. Pendry asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list, for each local authority in the north-west, how many properties each has constructed in a non-traditional way, as provided in the Minister's repair and improvement inquiry of July 1985.

Sir George Young: In their returns for the Department's inquiry into the condition of the local authority housing stock in England, local authorities in the north-west reported that they owned the following numbers of dwellings constructed in non-traditional systems:

Local Authority	Number of dwellings
Allerdale	516
Blackburn	2,865
Blackpool	77
Bolton	2,966
Burnley	1,521
Bury	289
Carlisle	715
Chester	234
Chorley	136
Congleton	82
Copeland	1,135
Crew & Nantwich	1,167
Eden	16
Ellesmere Port	1,357

Note: No return was received from Macclesfield.

Housing Investment Programme (North-West)

Mr. Pendry asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will indicate which local authorities in the north-west of England have obtained a supplementary housing investment programme allocation for 1985-86; how much additional allocation each received; and what was the original allocation for these authorities for 1985-86.

Sir George Young: Three local authorities in the north-west region (Bolton, Preston and Wigan) appeared likely, on the basis of their estimates, to have insufficient resources to meet their obligations under the Housing Defects Act in 1985-86. These authorities were advised last August that if their estimates were confirmed by actual expenditure, retrospective additional housing investment programme allocations would be made after the end of the financial year. The maximum additional allocations, and the initial housing investment programme allocations, are as follows:

	Maximum additional allocation £ million	Initial HIP allocation 1985-86 £ million
Bolton	0·756	12·849
Preston	0·095	4·200
Wigan	0·500	7·685

Mrs. B. E. Manning, Southwark (House Purchase)

Mr. Gerald Bowden asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what information he has as to when Mrs. B. E. Manning of 57 Carver road can expect to complete the purchase of her home from Southwark council.

Mr. John Patten: An application to buy was made more than 15 months ago. Southwark council took almost five months to issue an offer notice, and there was further delay while it reconsidered the leasehold terms of the disposal. I understand, however, that Mrs. Manning has now been offered a completion date of 17 March. It is clear that unreasonable delays have occurred in this case, and I hope my hon. Friend will write to me if Mrs. Manning encounters any further difficulties.

Boundary Yard and Courtenay Road Woking

Mr. Onslow asked the Secretary of State for the Environment when he expects to announce his decision on Woking borough council's application for a compulsory purchase order on land at Boundary yard and Courtenay roads, Woking, which was the subject of a public inquiry on 2 July 1985.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: I am writing to my hon. Friend about this matter.

Woolaway Homes

Mr. Ron Davies asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will state the total number and their location, by district council area, of Woolaway type homes eligible for refurbishment under the Housing Defects Act, and the number of refurbishments (a) commenced, (b) completed and (c) not started because of grant limits.

Sir George Young: In 1983, local authorities in England estimated that some 700 prefabricated reinforced concrete dwellings of the Woolaway type had been sold by the public sector and were in private ownership. The number qualifying for assistance under the Housing Defects Act is therefore likely to be of that order. The local authorities reporting owned Woolaway dwellings in their area were:

Bristol
Carrick
Cotswold
Mendip
Mid Devon
Newbury
Northavon
North Devon
North Dorset
North Wiltshire
Purbeck
Restormel
Salisbury
Sedgemoor
South Hams
South Somerset

Taunton Deane
Tewkesbury
Thamesdown
Wansdyke
Warwick
West Dorset
West Wiltshire
Weymouth and Portland
Woodspring

I regret that information on the number of Woolaway houses being reinstated is not currently available.

Housing Defects Act

Mr. Ron Davies asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list, by district council area, the number of completions, by type, of homes under the Housing Defects Act, and the number of refurbishments currently under way.

Sir George Young: I regret that information on the number of reinstatement works completed or under way is not currently available.

Mr. Chope asked the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he will hold an early meeting with the officers of the National Federation of Prefabricated Reinforced Concrete Home Owners to discuss the implementation of the Housing Defects Act; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John Patten: I shall answer this question shortly.

Flats and Estates (Sales)

Mr. Fatchett asked the Secretary of State for the Environment how many schemes where local authority-owned blocks of flats or housing estates have been disposed of to private companies for refurbishment or redevelopment for sale with the aid of an urban development grant have been the subject of competitive bids.

Sir George Young: All applications for urban development grant are made by local authorities in respect of named developers and specified sites. There are currently eight schemes for the refurbishment for sale of local authority housing for which offers of UDG have been taken up or are outstanding. My Department are aware that in four cases the local authorities concerned had previously sought or considered proposals from three or more developers.

Big Ben

Mr. Key asked the Secretary of State for the Environment when the chimes from the Big Ben clock tower will be restored to proper working order; and if he will make a statement.

Sir George Young: I shall answer this question shortly.

London Docklands Development Corporation

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Environment how much the London Docklands Development Corporation has spent on public relations and advertising in each of the last three years.

Sir George Young: The information is as follows:

	1982-83 £	1983-84 £	1984-85 £
Public relations	66,000	79,000	90,000
Advertising	1,343,000	698,000	358,000
TOTAL	1,409,000	777,000	448,000

Docklands Airport

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what was the cost of the recent London Docklands Development Corporation's billboard poster campaign in support of the proposed docklands airport; and on what date this campaign started.

Sir George Young: This billboard campaign uses the proposed airport as an example of the advantages of docklands as a business location. The total cost of the campaign, which commenced on 1 February 1986 for one month, is £106,978.

Planning Applications

Sir Dudley Smith asked the Secretary of State for the Environment whether his policy has changed over calling in controversial planning applications by local authorities and others where the public interest is affected and where he has had requests that he should do so from representative organisations and individuals.

Mr. Tracey: My right hon. Friend's policy remains as set out in DOE circular 2/81, which states that "The Secretary of State will continue to be very selective about calling in cases for his decision; there will be no change in the criterion that applications will in general be called in only if planning issues of more than local importance are involved".

Industrial Technology Park, Warwick

Sir Dudley Smith asked the Secretary of State for the Environment why he has refused to see a deputation representing Warwick town council, the National Farmers Union, the Warwick Preservation Society, local residents' associations and others in connection with Warwickshire county council's decision to locate an industrial technology park in an agricultural and tourist area.

Mr. Tracey: Since my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State had already decided not to intervene in this matter, and that decision had been conveyed to Warwickshire county council, to have seen a deputation in those circumstances might have given rise to false expectations.

Local Authority Accounts

Mr. Baldry asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations Her Majesty's Government have received following the publication of draft regulations prescribing the form of local authority statements of accounts; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: My right hon. Friends have received some 50 representations on the draft regulations which they considered carefully. The responses clearly show that there is a widely held desire to see improvements in local government accounting, and that real progress is already being made in the way in which information about the finances of local authorities is presented, as evidenced by the Audit Commission's profiles. The point was also made by those in local government that in their view statutory regulation is not an appropriate way of dealing with detailed accounting matters.

My right hon. Friends welcome this commitment of local government to seek improvements in the way in which they keep elected members and the public properly informed about their financial affairs. They also recognise that an unduly rigid regulation of accounting matters could be ineffective. In the circumstances, therefore, they have decided not to proceed with the making of the regulations, but to invite the local authority associations, in conjunction with the Audit Commission and the professional accountancy bodies, to establish in the course of 1986-87 their own formal arrangements for securing further improvement—including greater standardisation—in local authority accounts. My right hon. Friends believe that this will enable local government to build on the work which it is already doing, and that if it accepts this opportunity it should lead to significant improvements in local authority accounting without a need for comprehensive statutory regulations.

Water Authorities (Privatisation)

Mr. Denis Howell asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if the Government plan to publish a consultation paper on pension schemes in the event of privatisation for those employed by the water authorities in England and Wales.

Mr. John Patten [pursuant to his reply, 27 February 1986]: The future of pension arrangements in the water industry is a matter which the water authorities' management need to consider in the context of privatisation. I have met representatives of the industry to discuss this subject and I know that they attach a high priority to it. The industry recognises that it will need to be satisfied that arrangements fair to all interests concerned are made for pensions.

The rights of existing and deferred pensioners, and rights accrued by existing employees under the local government superannuation scheme will be unaffected by privatisation. The industry is now considering what arrangements should be made for new employees and for existing employees in respect of future service.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Farming Methods

Sir Richard Body asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what consideration has been given by him to converting any experimental farms for which he has responsibility into facilities for research and development into organic or biological methods of husbandry; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Jopling: I have recently given careful consideration to the possibility of converting part or all of one or more of my Department's experimental husbandary farms to organic methods of production. However, I have concluded, given competing claims for these limited research resources, that such a conversion would not be justified at public expense. The Agricultural Development and Advisory Service is nevertheless continuing to monitor developments in this field and is continuing a long-term monitoring project on soils, pests, diseases and crops on a commercial organic farm. Research and development work has been also undertaken on a variety of issues of relevance to organic farming including nitrogen-fixation by white clover; the production of crop varieties which are resistant to pests and diseases; and the development of novel non-chemical methods of pest control. My Department has also recently awarded a research contract to the university of Wales to undertake a three-year study of the nitrogen balance and nitrogen cycle in organic farming systems. Finally, ADAS is always prepared to consider undertaking research projects commissioned and paid for by the industry or by particular sectors of the industry.

Common Fisheries Policy

Mr. Clelland asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food and if he will make it his policy to provide regular reports for the House on how well the common fisheries policy enforcement is working.

Mr. Gummer: The Government attach importance to effective enforcement of the common fisheries policy and I already report to the House on a regular basis any discussion of this subject at Fisheries Council meetings as well as making the House aware of any important developments which take place between Council meetings. The responsibility for ensuring that the common fisheries policy is effectively enforced throughout the Community rests, of course, with the Commission, with the help of its inspectorate of inspectorates. At my request the Commission has undertaken to produce early this year a full report on the enforcement situation and I hope that it will be possible to make this report available to the House in due course.

Wheat

Mr. Alton asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what was the amount of surplus wheat disposed of in 1984-85.

Mr. Gummer: A total of 30,149 tonnes of wheat were released from intervention stores in the United Kingdom in the marketing year 1984-85.

Soil Survey

Mr. Ron Davies asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is the likely effect upon research on soil erosion in the United Kingdom of the job losses already announced in the Soil Survey.

Mr. Jopling: A collaborative programme of work on soil erosion is being undertaken by staff of the Soil Survey of England and Wales, and staff in my Agricultural Development and Advisory Services. This work has been identified as being of high priority by the work programme panel on which both groups are represented. The Soil Survey's involvement in this work will therefore continue in 1986-87, within the overall level of funding by my Department, announced in reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Broxbourne (Mrs. Roe) on 18 January 1985 at column 248.

Animals (Exports)

Mr. Hancock asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many live animals were exported, by category, in each year since 1980.

Mr. Jopling: The required figures are shown in the table:

Number of live animals exported from United Kingdom

	1980	1981	1982	1983	1984	1985
Cattle	370,445	320,648	287,459	240,154	233,595	173,033

Food Irradiation

Mr. Frank Cook asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when he intends to publish details of regulatory mechanisms to control food irradiation.

Mr. Whitney: I have been asked to reply.

A "Report on the Safety and Wholesomeness of Irradiated Foods" which has been presented to Health and Agriculture Ministers by the Advisory Committee on Irradiated and Novel Foods will be published in the spring for public comment. Ministers will consider whether any change in the present regulations appears desirable in the light of the advice contained in the report and the representations received on it.

INDEX TO THE

PARLIAMENTARY DEBATES

OFFICIAL REPORT

SIXTH SERIES VOLUME 92

SESSION 1985-86

17th February—28th February 1986

SCOPE OF THE INDEX, ARRANGEMENT AND ABBREVIATIONS

This index is derived from the House of Commons Library's Parliamentary On-Line Information System (POLIS), and the subject terms used are based on those used in POLIS. There are often changes in column numbering, etc., between the daily part or weekly Hansard (which simply collects together the daily parts without revision) and the bound volume. The index for the bound volume is revised to take account of these changes.

Scope and arrangement of the Index

Oral and Written Parliamentary Questions are indexed under subject headings and the names of Members asking and Ministers replying to them. Questions are not listed under the names of Departments replying. Departmental listings can be arrived at indirectly by looking under the names of the Minister(s) of that Department. There will, however, be headings 'Northern Ireland', 'Scotland', and 'Wales' under which one will find not only most Questions answered by the Northern Ireland Office, Scottish Office, Welsh Office but also Questions about these areas of the United Kingdom which are answered by other Departments. Ministerial statements are indexed under subject headings, under 'Ministerial statements' and the names of Ministers making them and Members speaking on them. General debates are indexed under broad subject headings and under the names of all Members and Ministers taking part. Debates on legislation (Bills, Orders, Regulations etc.) are indexed under the name of the Bill, Statutory Instrument etc., under subject headings and under the names of those taking part.

Rulings and Statements by Mr. Speaker and his deputies are brought together under the heading Speakers rulings and statements.

Other contributions by Mr. Speaker and his deputies appear under the heading Speaker.

Opposition Day Debates, Estimates Day Debates and Standing Order No. 10 applications are listed under those respective headings and under subject headings too.

The date of each item except Parliamentary Questions is inserted immediately before the reference.

Members' names are given in the form by which they prefer to be known and are printed in bold italics. Under their names, entries are arranged under one of the two headings Debates etc. (to include interventions on statements, points of order and so on) or Questions.

Abbreviations

Bills 1R=first reading, 2R=second reading, Money res=money resolution, Com=Committee stage, Rep=Report stage, 3R=third reading, amendt/amendts=amendment/amendments, *=matter taken formally, without debate.

Column numbers followed by the letter W refer to Written Questions. These appear at the end of each daily part or volume with their own sequence of column numbers printed in italics.
